24 The voting normally takes place by show of hands, unless a member requests a roll-call, which is then taken in alphabetical order (Rules 52 and 53). Parts of a proposal shall be voted on separately if a Committee member requests that the proposal be divided. Once each section is approved, the proposal will be put to vote as a whole (Rule 55). In the case of amendments to a proposal, the Committee shall first vote on the amendments, beginning with the furthest removed in substance (Rule 56). With regard to two or more proposals relating to the same question, the Committee shall, unless it decides otherwise, vote on the proposals according to the order in which they have been submitted (Rule 57).

25 Rules 58 to 60 determine the method of elections within the Committee, ie its officers and subsidiary bodies. Rule 58 provides that elections are to be held by secret ballot. Unlike the practice of the HRC, the elections within the CAT Committee are conducted by secret ballot.³⁴ In this respect, Chairperson Joseph Voyame explained during the first session of the Committee that elections are always to be held by secret ballot, and that only in cases in which there was one single candidate for one election could the Committee decide to proceed otherwise.³⁵

3.4 Staff and Facilities (Article 18(3))

26 In performing its various functions, the Committee is assisted by a Secretary and other staff members of the OHCHR in Geneva. The role of the Secretariat is regulated by Article 18(3), which is taken verbatim from Article 36 CCPR, and Chapter V of the RoP. Subject to the fulfilment of the financial obligations undertaken by States parties in accordance with Article 18(5), the Secretary-General shall provide the necessary staff (the Secretariat) and facilities for the effective performance of the Committee's functions (Rule 22).

27 The Secretary-General or his representative (the Secretary of the Committee) shall attend all Committee meetings and has the right to make oral or written statements (Rule 23). The latter is also responsible for keeping the members of the Committee informed of any questions which may have been submitted for the Committee's consideration (Rule 25). In addition, the Secretary, a professional of the OHCHR, is responsible for all necessary arrangements for meetings of the Committee and its subsidiary bodies. He or she organizes the meetings and takes care of the documentation, conference room, interpreters, and minutes. Furthermore, the Secretary, in consultation with the Chairperson of the Committee, prepares the provisional agenda for regular Committee sessions (Rule 6).

28 At its Fourteenth session in 1995, the Committee, taking into consideration that the increased workload of the Committee was also increasing the work of the Secretariat, included in its annual report a request to the Secretary-General to increase substantially the staff assigned to service the Committee.³⁶ In practice, the Committee is currently served by one full-time Secretary. Its sessions and inquiries are serviced by a pool of professionals in one of the two treaty implementation teams in the Treaties and Council Branch of the OHCHR. Furthermore, the Petitions Unit within the OHCHR is responsible for the individual complaints under Article 22.

29 Since its forty-fifth session in 2010, the Committee's official languages are Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian, and Spanish. These are also 'to the extent possible' the working languages. (Rule 27).³⁷ All formal decisions and official documents shall be issued in all official languages. (Rule 30). Speeches made in any of the working languages shall be interpreted into the other working languages (Rule 28). If speakers address the Committee in a language other than the working languages, the speakers shall provide for interpretation into one of the working languages. Interpretation into the other working languages may be based on the interpretation given in the first language (Rule 29).

3.5 Meetings (Article 18(4))

3.5.1 Sessions

30 The CAT Committee works in sessions, rather than through the whole year. The initial meeting was convened by the Secretary-General from 18 to 22 April 1988, pursuant to Article 18(4). The number of further sessions and meetings was set by the Committee in Rule 2. The Committee, like most other treaty bodies, decided at its first session to convene twice a year for two-week sessions.³⁸ However, beginning in 1994, it became clear that under the increasing workload caused by individual complaints and States parties' reports, as well as the increased activities relating to the inquiry procedure, four weeks of meeting time per year was not enough. The Committee recognized the risk that it might not be able to comply with Rule 1, which provides that the Committee will hold as many meetings as necessary for the satisfactory performance of its functions.³⁹ Hence, over the years the Committee's sessions have been prolonged several times. Further to the decisions taken by the GA in its Resolution 68/268 of 2014, with effect of 2015 the Committee is meeting for three sessions per year, for a total of 11.6 weeks, normally two four-week sessions in November and April/May and one three-week session in July/August.⁴⁰

31 The Committee decides in consultation with the Secretariat on its meeting schedule (Rule 2(2)). According to Rule 3, the Committee can also convene special sessions. This rule has, however, never been applied. The sessions of the Committee are normally held at the UN Office in Geneva (Rule 4). Prior to each session, the Secretariat prepares, in consultation with the Chairperson of the Committee, a provisional agenda for the session (Rules 6 to 7).

3.5.2 Public and Private Meetings

32 Rule 31 establishes the principle of public meetings of the Committee. Various NGOs with ECOSOC consultative status, as well as the media, regularly benefit from this provision.

³⁷ Until the amendments to the RoP introduced at the forty-fifth session (CAT/C/3/Rev.5, then confirmed in CAT/C/3/Rev.6), the official and working languages of the Committee were English, French, Russian, and Spanish.

⁴⁰ For the decision to extend the meeting time of the Committee to three sessions (see A/69/44 (n 20) para 153 and GA Res 68/268 of 2014, paras 26–27). Previously, the Committee has met since 1998 for two sessions one three-week session in May and a two-week session in November (see Report of the Committee Against Torture (1999) UN Doc A/54/44).

However, Rule 31 also explicitly states that the Committee may hold private meetings if it decides to do so and if it appears from the relevant provisions of the Convention that the meeting should be held in private. Closed meetings are held with regard to the inquiry procedure under Article 20 (Rule 79), examinations of inter-State complaints under Article 21 (Rule 95) and examinations of individual complaints under Article 22 (Rule 107).

33 During its first session, the Committee had several long discussions on whether NGOs, specialized agencies and regional intergovernmental organizations with consultative status with ECOSOC should be given observer status in public meetings of the Committee.⁴¹ Organizations and agencies enjoying such status would be formally invited to Committee meetings, issued the Committee's official documents, and permitted to speak after Committee members.⁴² Given that no consensus could be reached on this issue, despite long discussions, such a rule was not included in the RoP.⁴³ Consequently, NGOs are only allowed to attend the Committee meetings 'as members of the general public'.⁴⁴ Similarly, the draft of the rule on submission of information, documentation, and written statements prepared by the Secretariat proposed to invite NGOs with ECOSOC consultative status, specialized agencies, concerned UN bodies, and regional intergovernmental organizations to provide information to the Committee. Committee member Kithrin from the USSR objected to this proposal on the grounds that the Committee would be exceeding its powers. The majority of the Committee members, however, were in favour of this rule.⁴⁵ Thus, the CAT Committee is the first human rights treaty body to allow NGOs and other organizations to provide information under its RoP. NGOs may provide information in the context of all procedures: the State reporting procedure under Article 19, the inquiry procedure under Article 20, the inter-State complaints procedure under Article 21, and the individual complaints procedure under Article 22. According to Rule 107, NGOs can also lodge a complaint on behalf of victims under Article 22.

34 With regard to the Committee's interaction with the media and the general public, Rule 32 foresees that a communiqué may be issued by the Committee in order to inform the media and the general public of its activities at its closed meetings (Rules 80, 96, 108 concerning closed meetings under Articles 20, 21, and 22, respectively).

3.5.3 Records

35 Summary records of public meetings, reports, formal decisions, and all other official documents of the Committee are published, unless the Committee decides otherwise (Rules 34, 35). Summary records are prepared by the Secretariat and first distributed to the Committee members in a provisional form. After correction by the Committee members, they are published in final form. Reports, formal decisions, and other official documents of the Committee relating to Articles 20, 21, and 22 CAT are directly distributed to the Committee members and concerned States parties (Rule 35(2)).

3.5.4 Conduct of Business

36 Provisions on the conduct of business are contained in Rules 36 to 48. Six members constitute a quorum, according to Article 18(2)(a) and Rule 36. The Chairperson opens and closes the Committee meetings, determines the points of order, calls the Committee members to order regarding time limits on statements, and announces the list of speakers (Rules 37 to 40). Each Committee member may move to adjourn or close a debate, and to suspend or adjourn a meeting. These motions are put to an immediate vote (Rules 41 to 44). Proposals and substantive amendments or motions are to be introduced in writing (Rule 45). Motions calling for the decision on the competence of the Committee to adopt a proposal shall be put to the vote immediately before a vote is taken on the proposal in question (Rule 46). Furthermore, motions may be withdrawn before voting and reintroduced at a later stage by any Committee member (Rule 47). However, adopted or rejected proposals may in principle (unless the Committee decides otherwise) not be reconsidered at the same session (Rule 48).

3.6 Financing of the Committee (Article 18(5))

37 At their first meeting, the States parties discussed the financial issues raised in Article 18(5) on the basis of a document prepared by the secretariat containing a statement by the Secretary-General saying that the Convention was the first human rights instrument that was completely dependent on the contributions of its States parties.

38 In practice, the novelty of a human rights body entirely depending on States parties financial contributions has proven to be a bad idea. States have paid late or simply missed payments completely. In light of this difficulty, Australia suggested amendments to Articles 17(7) and 18(5) in 1992 to bring the expenses of the Committee under the general UN budget.⁴⁶ Despite their adoption by the General Assembly in 1992, such amendments have never entered into force, as they have not been accepted by two thirds of the States parties, as required by Article 29(2).⁴⁷ Nevertheless, the expenses of the Committee have since then been covered out of the general UN budget on the basis of a provisional decision of the GA.⁴⁸ This provisional solution of simply overruling non-functioning provisions of the Convention seems to have become a permanent one, and nobody requests that States parties comply with their treaty obligation of reimbursing the OHCHR for all expenses incurred in connection with the monitoring functions of the Committee.

State Reporting Procedure

1. The States Parties shall submit to the Committee, through the Secretary-General of the United Nations, reports on the measures they have taken to give effect to their undertakings under this Convention, within one year after the entry into force of the Convention for the State Party concerned. Thereafter the States Parties shall submit supplementary reports every four years on any new measures taken and such other reports as the Committee may request.
2. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall transmit the reports to all States Parties.
3. Each report shall be considered by the Committee which may make such general comments on the report as it may consider appropriate and shall forward these to the State Party concerned. That State Party may respond with any observations it chooses to the Committee.
4. The Committee may, at its discretion, decide to include any comments made by it in accordance with paragraph 3 of this article, together with the observations thereon received from the State Party concerned, in its annual report made in accordance with article 24. If so requested by the State Party concerned, the Committee may also include a copy of the report submitted under paragraph 1 of this article.

1. Introduction

1 The State reporting process serves to monitor the implementation of human rights treaties at the national level and creates a basis for constructive dialogue between States and treaty bodies. It is the only mandatory monitoring mechanism included in all nine core human rights treaties and under two Optional Protocols (OP) to the Convention of the Right of the Child (CRC).¹

2 Since Article 19 CAT was drafted according to the model of Article 40 CCPR, the following interpretation will take into account the similarities and differences between both provisions. As with Article 40 CCPR, the drafting process of Article 19 CAT was dominated by the fear of delegates from Socialist States that the examination of State reports by the Committee against Torture (CAT Committee or Committee) might lead to critical observations on States' compliance by the Committee, which they considered as undue interference with State sovereignty. As the Convention only entered into force towards the end of the Cold War, this controversy between experts from Western and Socialist States, which had dominated the first ten years of the Human Rights Committee (HRC)'s practice, no longer played a significant role in the Committee against Torture.

3 States shall submit an initial report on their domestic implementation of the Convention within one year after the entry into force of the Convention and shall thereafter submit periodic reports on any new developments every four years. In addition, they might be requested by the CAT Committee to submit other additional or special reports on an ad hoc basis. The Committee dedicates a substantial amount of its meeting time to the consideration of State reports, which usually takes place in a spirit of constructive dialogue with State representatives. Contrary to the approach of Socialist States, which aimed at avoiding any country specific conclusions and recommendations, the Committee started adopting concluding observations on each State report in the early 1990s. These concluding observations contain both positive aspects and subjects of concern, but in the course of the years, the critical comments and recommendations have gradually become the main focus of the Committee's conclusions. As of 2002, concluding observations are also subject to a special follow-up procedure, which has now become an integral part of the reporting cycle and a key mechanisms for assessing the impact of the Committee's recommendations.

4 In principle, the State reporting procedure is a useful tool for States parties to regularly review the actual state of their compliance with the various obligations deriving from the Convention, including problems and difficulties encountered (self-assessment), and for the Committee to evaluate critically the respective State's level of compliance (external assessment by an independent expert body). But, as with other reporting systems of human rights treaty bodies, the proper functioning of the reporting procedure before the CAT Committee is hampered by the problem of late or non-reporting.² This problem seems to be particularly relevant for the reporting procedure under the CAT which is among the UN human rights treaty per lowest reporting rate.³

5 To date there have been several initiatives at the general UN level aimed at overcoming such problems and, more generally, strengthening the treaty bodies,⁴ the latest being the initiative of Navi Pillay started in 2009 and resulted in GA Resolution 68/268 of 2014.⁵ Inter alia, the proposal advanced by Pillay encouraged States to adopt a number of measures concerning the reporting procedures, ie to introduce a comprehensive reporting calendar, a simplified and aligned procedure, as well as measures aiming at strengthening the capacity of States to implement the treaties. In this spirit, also the Committee has, since it has been operational, developed various methods and mechanism aimed at improving the States parties' compliance with their reporting duty. Most recently, for example, the Committee has adopted the so-called simplified reporting procedure, which substitutes the traditional reporting procedure for the States parties that have decided to accept it. The new procedure aims at facilitating the reporting process and strengthening the States parties' capacity to fulfil their reporting obligations in a timely and effective manner.⁶

6 In addition to the reporting procedure itself, on the basis of its experience in the State reporting (and other) procedures, the Committee may also issue general comments on the interpretation of certain treaty provisions. So far, the Committee has adopted four general comments.

7 Finally, recognizing the crucial importance of civil society in the proper functioning of the reporting procedure, the Committee has since 2012 strengthened its policy on reprisals against individuals or organizations as a consequence for having communicated with the Committee.

8 After illustrating the different types of State reports, this article will provide an overview of the reporting procedure by looking at all its different steps, namely the submission of State reports; their consideration by the Committee; and, lastly, the adoption, publication of and follow-up to the concluding observations adopted by the Committee.

² See eg UN, 'Status of the Human Rights Treaty Body System: Report of the Secretary-General' (2016) UN Doc A/71/118, para 5.

⁵ The initiative of Pillay started in 2009; a comprehensive reform proposal was advanced in 2012 with UN, 'United Nations Reform: Measures and Proposals' (2012) UN Doc A/66/860; the process was then concluded in 2014 with the GA Res 68/268 of 9 April 2014 (Strengthening and Enhancing the Effective Functioning of the Human Rights Treaty Body System). The latter resolution also established two review mechanisms: (a) a biennial report by the UN Secretary-General on the state of the treaty body system; and (b) an overall review of the effectiveness of the measures taken pursuant to Res 68/268 no later than 2020. For the first biennial report see A/71/118 (n 2).

The article then continues with an overview of the problem of overdue reports as well as on the measures so far taken in this regard; and concludes with a short survey on the Committee's policy on reprisal following Article 19.

2.1 Chronology of Draft Texts

9 *Original Swedish Draft (18 January 1978)*⁷

Article 16

States Parties undertake to submit to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, when so requested by the Human Rights Committee established in accordance with article 28 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (hereafter referred to in the present Convention as Human Rights Committee), reports or other information on measures taken to suppress and punish torture and other cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment or punishment. Such reports or information shall be considered by the Human Rights Committee in accordance with the procedures set out in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and in the Rules of Procedures of the Human Rights Committee.

10 *Swedish Proposal for Implementation Provisions (22 December 1981)*⁸

Article 29

1. The States Parties to the present Convention undertake to submit to the Secretary-General of the United Nations
 - (a) within one year of the entry into force of the Convention for the States Parties concerned, reports on the measures they have taken to give effect to their undertakings under the Convention; and
 - (b) subsequently, when so requested by the Committee, reports or other information relating to the application of the Convention.
2. Such reports or other information shall be considered by the Committee which shall transmit such comments or suggestions relating to them as it may consider appropriate to the States Parties. The Committee may also transmit such comments or suggestions to the Economic and Social Council along with copies of the reports it has received from the States Parties.
3. The States Parties may submit to the Committee observations on any comments or suggestions that may be made in accordance with paragraph 2 of this article.

11 *Draft Implementation Provisions, Submitted by the Chairman-Rapporteur (1 February 1982)*⁹

Article 18

1. States Parties to the Convention undertake to submit to the Secretary-General of the United Nations reports on the measures they have taken to give effect to their undertakings under the Convention:

 - (b) whenever any new measures have been taken; and
 - (c) when the group established in accordance with article 17 so requests.
2. Such reports shall be considered by the group established in accordance with article 17, which shall transmit them with such comments and suggestions as it may consider appropriate to the States Parties. The group may also transmit such comments or suggestions to the Commission on Human Rights along with copies of the report it has received from the States Parties.
3. The States Parties may submit to the group established in accordance with article 17 observations on any comments or suggestions that may be made in accordance with paragraph 2 of the present article.

12 Four Draft Articles on Implementation, with the Explanatory Note, Submitted by the Chairman-Rapporteur (24 December 1982)¹⁰

Article 19

1. The States Parties undertake to submit to the Secretary-General of the United Nations reports on the measures they have taken to give effect to their undertakings under the Convention:
 - (a) within one year of the entry into force of the Convention for the States Parties concerned; and
 - (b) whenever any new measures have been taken; and
 - (c) when the Committee so requests.
2. Such reports shall be considered by the Committee, which shall transmit them with such comments or suggestions as it may consider appropriate to the States Parties. The Committee may also transmit such comments or suggestions to the United Nations Commission on Human Rights along with copies of the reports it has received from States Parties.
3. The States Parties may submit to the Committee observations on any comments or suggestions that may be made in accordance with paragraph 2.

State Party concerned. That State Party may respond with any observations it chooses to the Committee.

4. The Committee may, at its discretion, decide to include any comments made by it in accordance with paragraph 3, together with the observations thereon received from the State Party concerned, in its annual report made in accordance with article 24. If so requested by the State Party concerned, the Committee may also include a copy of the report submitted under paragraph 1.

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

14 Despite the similarities between Article 19 of the draft Convention and Article 40 CCPR, and despite the establishment of comparable reporting procedures under various other human rights treaties, such as Article 18 CEDAW and Article 9 CERD, consensus on paragraphs 3 and 4 of this article was only reached in the Third Committee meeting of the General Assembly in 1984.¹² The debate focused primarily around the words ‘comments or suggestions’ in paragraphs 3 and 4. Some States, particularly the delegation of the Soviet Union, supported by the delegation of the Ukrainian SSR and the German Democratic Republic, were against the idea of authorizing the Committee to make ‘comments and suggestions’ on the report of States parties and to include such ‘comments and suggestions’ in its annual report to the General Assembly. They proposed to replace the disputed terms with ‘general comments’ and ‘comments’ respectively.

15 The Working Group of the Human Rights Commission did not deal with the supervisory mechanism of the Convention in its sessions between 1978 and 1980. However, the written comments made by several States in 1978 regarding Article 16 of the original Swedish draft, influenced the subsequent discussions of the Working Group.¹³ Draft Article 16 provided for a system which required States parties to submit reports to the HRC established under Article 28 CCPR upon special request only.¹⁴ Austria welcomed the reporting system as proposed in the original Swedish draft and stated that it would be undesirable to establish another obligation of regularly submitting reports, since the number of reporting procedures under international human rights law had sharply risen over the last years.¹⁵ The USA and Switzerland also supported draft Article 16 and the idea of the HRC as monitoring body of the CAT. The delegation of France, on the other hand, considered the proposed arrangement legally unsatisfactory, since the two instruments concerned are different and the States parties would not necessarily be the same.¹⁶

16 In 1981, in a pre-sessional meeting of the Working Group, the Netherlands presented a new implementation proposal in the form of amendments to the original Swedish draft.¹⁷ It was the first proposal that provided for the establishment of a new Committee

¹² GA Res 39/46 of 10 December 1984.

¹³ Summary by the Secretary-General in Accordance with Commission Resolution 18 (XXXIV) of the Commission on Human Rights (1978) UN Doc E/CN.4/1314, paras 99–103; E/CN.4/1285 (n 7).

¹⁴ The original Swedish draft proposed that the HRC should also be the supervisory body for the implementation of the CAT.

¹⁵ E/CN.4/1314 (n 13) para 99. ¹⁶ ibid, para 103.

¹⁷ Amendments to Draft Article 29 Submitted by Brazil (1982) UN Doc E/CN.4/1982/WG.2/WP.3; see also J Herman Burgers and Hans Danelius, The United Nations Convention against Torture: A Handbook on the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (Martinus Nijhoff 1988) 75.

composed of members of the HRC. Thus, according to this proposal the States parties would submit their reports to the new Committee.

17 In 1982 the Working Group began its actual deliberations on the reporting procedure basing its discussion on draft Article 29 of the Swedish proposal for implementation provisions.¹⁸ This proposal had incorporated some of the State comments made in 1978 and, instead of referring to the HRC as its implementation organ, provided for a Committee against Torture composed of nine members. Several delegations supported the proposal contained in draft Article 29 according to which States would be required to submit reports and other information relating to the application of the Convention to the new Committee.¹⁹ Other States objected to the inclusion of 'other information' in the provision. Consequently, the Brazilian delegation submitted a proposal amending draft Article 29 which did not explicitly request States to submit other information. The proposal was further amended according to the discussion in the Working Group.²⁰ The revised version which authorized the Committee in its second paragraph to transmit comments and suggestions to the States parties was accepted by the Swedish delegation and no other delegation objected to the new text.²¹

18 Article 18 of the alternative proposal for the implementation provisions submitted by the Chairman-Rapporteur did not contain any new elements but simply reflected the outcome of the discussions concerning Article 29 of the Swedish proposal that had taken place.²²

19 In 1983, the Working Group based its deliberations regarding the implementation mechanism on the four draft implementation provisions submitted by the Chairman-Rapporteur reflecting the outcome of the 1982 Working Group discussion on the reporting procedure under Article 19.²³ According to Article 19(3) States parties were allowed to submit to the Committee observations on any comments or suggestions that may be made in accordance with paragraph 2.

20 The question of whether the implementation procedures under the Convention, including the reporting mechanism, should be mandatory or optional was a central point of discussion and disagreement. Most States supported a mandatory nature of the implementation organ and consequently also a mandatory reporting procedure. Some delegations were in favour of an optional complaints procedures, but welcomed the mandatory reporting procedure. A third group of States was of the opinion that all implementation provisions should be optional.²⁴ An alternative suggestion by the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic proposed to insert a clause in paragraph 1 which only obliged States parties who have recognized the Committee's status to report on the measures taken.²⁵

21 More specifically, the delegation of Australia stressed that reporting 'whenever new measures have been taken' would be too burdensome for States parties and therefore suggested the establishment of a periodic reporting cycle.²⁶ Many States supported Australia's proposal, while others stated that the existing obligation to report periodically under other human rights treaties was already burdensome for many countries. As a result, the Chairman submitted several new proposals which took into account the outcomes of the discussion.²⁷ The last proposal, establishing a reporting periodicity of four years, did not meet any objections from the Working Group.²⁸

22 Furthermore, the discussion on draft Article 19 focused on the word 'measures'. There was general agreement among the delegations that this term did not mean any limitation in scope but was intended to include legislative as well as judicial, administrative, and other measures.²⁹ Moreover, the Australian delegation, requesting clarification on paragraphs 2 and 3, stated that it was not clear if the reports would lead to a dialogue between the Committee and the State party concerned. Following interventions by other delegations, Australia submitted an informal suggestion to reformulate the latter paragraphs.³⁰ This suggestion was taken into consideration by the Chairman-Rapporteur who subsequently submitted consolidated new text proposals.³¹ The Working Group delegations agreed on a final version.³²

23 During the 1984 Working Group, the USSR withdrew its previous demands that all implementation procedures be optional and objected only to the Article 20 inquiry procedure.³³ This meant that an agreement had been reached between all delegations regarding the mandatory reporting procedure under Article 19. However, the USSR stated that it disagreed with the present formulation of paragraphs 3 and 4 authorizing the Committee to, first, make such 'comments or suggestions' on the report of whichever State party it considers appropriate and, secondly, to include such 'comments or suggestions' in its annual report to the General Assembly. The Soviet delegation, supported by the delegation of the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic and the German Democratic Republic, proposed replacing the words 'comments or suggestions' by the words 'general comments' in accordance with Article 40 CCPR. However, the majority of speakers wished to keep the formulation 'comments or suggestions', which had met with no opposition during the prior Working Group sessions. Several delegations stressed that, in contrast to the CCPR, the CAT was more specific and should therefore provide that appropriate comments can be made by the CAT Committee.³⁴

24 Furthermore, the States discussed whether the States parties' reports could be transmitted to the General Assembly. India suggested the following additional sentence to paragraph 4: 'If so requested by the State Party concerned, the Committee may also transmit a copy of the report submitted by the State under paragraph 1.'³⁵ The proposal was accepted by the Working Group and the sentence added to paragraph 4. Nevertheless, there was still disagreement on the terms 'comments or suggestions' and the draft Article could not be adopted at this stage.³⁶

25 By the time the Working Group presented its text to the Human Rights Commission in February 1984, it had reached consensus on all articles except on paragraphs 3 and 4 of Article 19 and Article 20.³⁷ Herman Burgers, the Chairman-Rapporteur of the Working Group, handed over the task of finalizing the text to the Commission.³⁸

26 At the Commission's thirty-second meeting, the Federal Republic of Germany stated that the procedures provided for in Articles 19 and 20 were the absolute minimum needed to ensure the effectiveness of the enforcement mechanisms and joined the USA in expressing their regret that, although a consensus of a large majority within the Working Group had been reached, some States had refused to accept Article 19(3) and (4) as well as Article 20. In fact, the representative from the USA accused the two objecting delegations, the Soviet Union and the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, of blocking consensus on the remaining articles. The German Democratic Republic, however, seriously objected to what it saw as the broad scope of procedures under Articles 19 and 20, noting that this delegation saw it as an infringement on State sovereignty.³⁹

27 The following day, at the Commission's thirty-third and thirty-fourth meetings, Uruguay, Argentina, Switzerland, and Australia supported the current version of paragraphs 3 and 4 of Article 19 and stated that in their opinion the Committee should be empowered to make any 'comments or suggestions' it considered appropriate; to forward them to the State party concerned; and to include them in its annual report.⁴⁰ The USSR, supported by the delegation of Bulgaria, objected to this version, preferring the replacement of the term 'comments or suggestions' with 'general comments'. It was proposed that this wording would avoid the risk of interference in internal affairs, deemed inherent to the expression 'comments or suggestions'.⁴¹ Italy suggested a compromise solution which would replace 'comments or suggestions' by the word 'comments' only.⁴²

28 Rather than voting on Articles 19 and 20 or renewing the mandate of the Working Group in order to continue debate on these articles, the Commission submitted the draft Convention as it stood, with the unresolved language in square brackets, to the General Assembly.⁴³ It did so by adopting a resolution introduced by Finland and the Netherlands, based on consultations with delegations from different regions.⁴⁴ After a seven-year process, many delegations were eager for the adoption of a final draft. Further, many members of the Commission had not participated in the Working Group and were not closely familiar with the concerns involved in the discussion.⁴⁵

29 Pursuant to the above-mentioned resolution, the Commission transmitted the report of the Working Group⁴⁶ as well as the summary records of the Commission's debate on the item during its fortieth session to the General Assembly.⁴⁷ Additionally, the Secretary-General invited all States to communicate their comments on the draft

Convention.⁴⁸ Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Italy, the Netherlands, Sweden, Switzerland, the UK, the USA, Cyprus, Greece, Luxembourg, and Spain expressed their support for adopting Article 19(3) and (4) as drafted including the expression 'comments or suggestions'.⁴⁹ Some of them emphasized at the same time that the implementation procedures should be mandatory. Italy expressed its opinion that these provisions would render the dialogue between the Committee and the reporting State more effective and added that the gravity of torture and other similar treatment or punishment does require more advanced implementation provisions than those established by Article 40 CCPR and its OP.⁵⁰ Finland, New Zealand, Norway, Ireland, and the Syrian Arab Republic expressed overall support and acceptance of the text but did not specifically mention Article 19(3) and (4).⁵¹ Thailand and Venezuela, however, objected to the wording of the respective paragraphs and to the mandatory implementation mechanisms, stating that it would bear the risk of interference in internal affairs of member States.⁵²

30 At its thirty-ninth session in September 1984, the General Assembly formally dealt with the draft Convention. The Netherlands chaired several informal meetings in an attempt to reach a consensus on Articles 19 and 20.⁵³ These meetings revealed that Western and Latin American States, along with some Asian and African States, supported the language of the Articles as they stood. The USSR and other Eastern European States were willing to adopt the Convention, but only if the procedures in question were made optional and if their proposal was adopted for the wording of Article 19. Support for expedited adoption of the Convention was not as robust among the general membership as it had been among the members of the Human Rights Commission. Objections were raised with regard to other Articles of the Convention, and some delegations favoured a return to the drafting table.

31 These considerations compelled Argentina, the Netherlands, and Sweden immediately to propose the adoption of the Convention and to submit, along with Bolivia, Colombia, Costa Rica, Denmark, the Dominican Republic, Finland, Gambia, Greece, Samoa, Norway, and Spain, a draft resolution to that effect. The Third Committee of the General Assembly thus included, in its annex, the text of the Working Group, without the respective brackets in Article 19 and 20.⁵⁴

32 In reaction to these developments, the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, supported by Afghanistan, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the USSR, and Vietnam, introduced amendments to the draft resolution which contained the terms 'general comments' instead of 'comments or suggestions' in Article 19(3) and only 'comments' instead of 'comments or suggestions' in Article 19(4).⁵⁵ In addition, the Soviet Union and the Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic submitted other amendments to the draft resolution.⁵⁶

33 Eventually, the draft sponsors chose to seek consensus rather than further pursue confrontation.⁵⁷ The draft as it stood would have resulted in several negative votes among the Soviet bloc and many abstentions from African and Asian States. This could have seriously weakened the chances for wide adherence to the Convention. Alternatively, there might have been no conclusive vote at all, which would have led to the reopening of the debate and a likely watered-down Convention. Since the sponsors regarded many of the demands put forth by the Soviet Union and other Eastern States to be unacceptable, they chose to compromise by deleting the words ‘or suggestions’ contained in Article 19(3) and (4). Following this amendment, the Chairman made clear that all other proposals should be withdrawn.⁵⁸ Nevertheless, the sponsors later also accepted that the word ‘general’ be placed before ‘comments’ in Article 19(3). This final amendment was also a compromise, made in exchange for the complete withdrawal of all other amendments by the Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic.⁵⁹ The orally revised draft resolution was thus adopted by the Third Committee without a vote.

34 On 10 December 1984 the resolution as submitted by the Third Committee was unanimously adopted by the General Assembly.⁶⁰

3. Issues of Interpretation

3.1 Traditional Reporting Procedure

35 The traditional reporting procedure consists of four steps: the submission of the report by the State; the preparation of list of issues (LOIs) by the treaty body and their transmission to the State; the submission of written replies to the LOIs by the State; and, finally, the so-called ‘constructive dialogue’, ie the examination of the report and the adoption of concluding observations. As explained below, a different procedure applies for those States that have accepted to report under the new simplified reporting procedure (see 3.2 below).

3.1.1 Submission of States Reports (Article 19(1))

36 The terminology used by Article 19(1) CAT does not correspond to the practise of the HRC and other treaty bodies. In addition to the first (initial) reports, all treaty bodies refer to the subsequent regular reports as periodic reports, under Article 19(1) CAT they are called ‘supplementary reports’. The term ‘other reports’ in Article 19(1) CAT refers to non-regular reports, which are submitted in response to a special request by the Committee. While the HRC calls them supplementary and emergency reports,⁶¹ the CAT Committee avoided both terms. As it will be seen below, it requests ‘additional reports’ if the information contained in initial or periodic reports is not sufficient, and ‘special reports’ in particularly serious or emergency situations.

37 Moreover, for States that have accepted the simplified reporting procedure the written replies to the LOIPR (list of issues prior reporting) constitute the State party’s report and fulfil its reporting obligations under Article 19 (see 3.2, § 95 below).

3.1.1.1 Meaning of ‘reports on the measures they have taken’—Initial Reports

38 Initial reports shall contain information on the measures that States parties have taken ‘to give effect to their undertakings under this Convention’. The difference in wording between Article 19 CAT and Article 40(1) CCPR (‘give effect to the rights recognized herein’) can be explained by the fact that the CAT provides for specific obligations to prevent torture and to bring the perpetrators of torture to justice, rather than for additional human rights. This means that States should report on an Article-by-Article basis on all the measures taken to implement the respective provisions of the Convention. Although no provision equivalent to the second sentence of Article 40(2) CCPR was included in Article 19 CAT, States should report on any factors and difficulties which affect the implementation of the Convention.⁶² As envisaged by Rule 65(4) States parties have to follow the Guidelines of the Form and Content of Initial Reports, as lastly amended in 2005.⁶³ As of 1991, these Guidelines also include the so-called Consolidated Guidelines for the Initial Part of all State Reports,⁶⁴ which were adopted in 1990 with the aim of coordinating the reporting obligations under the various human rights treaties.⁶⁵ According to the Guidelines, the initial report should be presented in two parts. The first part should include information of a general nature and the second should provide information in relation to each of substantive article of the Convention.⁶⁶ For initial reports, States parties should respect the word limit of 31,800 words.⁶⁷

3.1.1.2 Meaning of ‘supplementary reports’—Periodic Reports

39 The second type of report is the so-called periodic or ‘supplementary’ report. It is regulated by the Committee’s Guidelines regarding Periodic Reports of 1991,⁶⁸ last revised

They shall give a brief general description of the legal and administrative framework within which the Convention operates, as well as on the measures taken to comply with the Committee's conclusions and recommendations on earlier reports as well as any other additional information explicitly requested. For periodic reports, States parties should respect the limit of 21,200 words.⁷⁰

3.1.1.3 Meaning of 'other reports'

40 The third and fourth types of reports are the so-called 'other reports'. The legal basis of the Committee's authority to request such reports is enshrined in Article 19(1), which states that 'States parties shall submit supplementary reports . . . and such other reports as the Committee may request'. The idea behind was that the Committee should not have to wait the four years between reports, but could rather request a special report from a State party when the situation in a country justified it.⁷¹ This provision has been used by the Committee for additional reports and for special reports. Additional reports are regulated by Rule 69(2). This Rule allows the Committee to request an additional report—as well as additional information—if an initial or periodic report does not contain sufficient information or the information provided is outdated. The Committee also indicates by what date the aforementioned report shall be submitted. In fact, when considering a report, the Committee must first confirm that the report contains all information required according to Rule 69 (and implicitly Article 19(1)). This check is done with the help of the reporting guidelines.⁷² If the information provided in the report is not sufficient, or is outdated, the Committee may request, through a list of issues to be sent to the State party, an additional report or specific information, usually to be submitted within a year's time.⁷³ In practice, during its first years, the Committee requested, explicitly or implicitly, additional reports from Belize, Ecuador, Cameroon, China, Libya, Chile, Afghanistan, and Nepal, mostly because the initial reports were not drafted in accordance with the guidelines of the Committee.⁷⁴ Between 1991 and 1993, the Committee considered additional reports submitted by Chile, Ecuador, Cameroon, Libya, and China.⁷⁵ Belize, Afghanistan, and Nepal never submitted the additional reports requested. In contrast, in emergency or similar situations that require an urgent response, the Committee has used its power under Article 19(1) to request a special report on an ad hoc basis. To date

this has been done three times, namely in respect of Israel,⁷⁶ Syria,⁷⁷ and Burundi.⁷⁸ In its concluding observations to Syria and Burundi, the Committee has also requested the States to submit follow-up special reports.⁷⁹

41 Finally, although not explicitly mentioned in Article 19(1), States parties are also encouraged to submit a common core document,⁸⁰ either before or at least with their initial reports and maintain it up-to-date throughout the reporting cycle if necessary. The same core document can be submitted to all UN human rights treaty bodies. In fact, such document was introduced with the purpose to facilitate the reporting burden of States and include in one single document all those general information that are required by all the treaty bodies. In addition to such general information, the State will have to submit all other information specifically relevant for the obligations arising from the CAT. For the common core document, States parties should respect the limit of 42,400 words.⁸¹

3.1.1.4 Reporting Periodicity

42 Whereas Article 40(1) CCPR requires States to submit initial reports within one year and further reports ‘whenever the Committee so requests’, Article 19(1) CAT is more specific. In addition to initial reports within one year,⁸² it provides for ‘supplementary reports every four years’ and for ‘such other reports as the Committee may request’. The four-year reporting cycle takes into account the negative experiences of the CERD-Committee with a two-year reporting cycle,⁸³ and the practice of the HRC that in 1981 had established a five-year cycle.⁸⁴ The specific date by which the State party examined should submit the next periodic report is normally indicated at the end of the concluding observations.⁸⁵ State reports are public document and are available on the Committee’s website.

⁸² In addition to CCPR, for initial reports, other UN treaty bodies with a periodicity of one year are CERD, CEDAW, CMW. In contrast, CESCR, OPCRC-SC, OPCRC-AC, and CRPD have a periodicity of two years. For an overview on reporting periodicity see UN, ‘Timely, Late and Non-Reporting by States Parties to the Human Rights Treaty Bodies’ (2015) UN Doc HRI/MC/2015/5, para 6.

⁸⁴ Art 40 CCPR does not explicitly regulates periodicity, the HRC however requests that periodic reports be submitted every three to six years following State party review, depending on the situation. For more information on the CCPR see Nowak, CCPR Commentary (n 61) 715. Other UN treaty bodies with a reporting periodicity of four years: CEDAW; and CRPD; with a reporting periodicity of five years: CESCR, CRC, CMW, CRC-OPSC, OPCRC-AC; periodic reports under CED are submitted as requested by the CED Committee. For an overview on reporting periodicity see HRI/MC/2015/5 (n 82) para 6.

⁸⁵ OMCT, Seeking Remedies for Torture Victims: A Handbook on the Individual Complaints Procedures of the UN Treaty Bodies, vol 4 (2nd edn, OMCT 2014) 121.

43 In practice, however, the reporting periodicity is not always respected (see 3.3 below). In addition, the reporting cycle may de facto vary depending on whether the Committee applies Rule 65(2) on the consolidation of reports, which allows the State party to submit two or more periodic reports at the same time (see 3.3.1 below); requests additional information or a follow-up report within one year (see 3.1.6 below); as well as whether the State party has accepted the simplified reporting procedure (see 3.2 below).

3.1.2 Additional Sources of Information

44 The State report is the first source of information. However, the Committee, particularly the Country rapporteurs, bases its work on collective information from various sources. As an additional source of information, the Committee often uses official UN documents, such as information from the HRC and the Special Rapporteur on Torture.⁸⁶

45 Similarly, of crucial importance for the work of the Committee are the information submitted by civil society organizations and media reports. In practice, the input of NGOs often takes the form of shadow reports, also called alternative or parallel reports. These reports are often structured on Article-by-Article basis similarly to the reports of States parties, but may also focus on specific thematic issues. NGOs may engage with the Committee by providing written information for the LOIs and LOIPR, for the examination of the State party's report, as well as for the follow-up phase.⁸⁷ NGOs that have submitted written information for the examination of a give State party's report may also meet with the Committee in formal in-session briefings of around one hour. The Committee encourages NGOs to coordinate their presentations in order not to repeat each other's information. This role is currently carried out by the World Organisation against Torture (OMCT).⁸⁸ In addition, NGOs can organize informal briefings with CAT members. These are not in-session and there is no interpretation provided by the OHCHR.

46 With the exception of the confidential reports, information sent by NGOs to the Committee is published on the OHCHR website. This practice allows the State party to be better prepared to respond to questions that may be posed by the Committee on the basis of such information. It is not uncommon for Committee members themselves to refer to information provided by international NGOs such as Amnesty International, Human Rights Watch, the Association for the Prevention of Torture (APT), the OMCT, and a great number of national NGOs.⁸⁹ Similarly, information may be provided by NHRIs and NPMs.⁹⁰

47 In the literature, it has been noted that the use of additional sources has made the system 'increasingly triangular', shifting from a bilateral dialogue between the State and the treaty bodies to a dialogue in which the State is confronted with potentially conflicting information provided by other sources.⁹¹

3.1.3 Pre-sessional Preparation: List of Issues

48 Once the State party has submitted its report, the Committee examines it under Article 19(3) starting a dialogue with the State's representatives. To this extent, the two Country rapporteurs prepare the list of issues (LoIs) to be sent to States whose periodic reports will be considered during the upcoming sessions. The Committee does not issue LoIs for initial reports. The LoIs are intended to clarify and update certain questions and issues as well as to focus, without restricting, the dialogue with the States on matters of particular interest for the Committee.⁹² The list should be uniform on the one hand, but tailored with details relating to the specific circumstances of each State party. They are prepared, inter alia, on the basis of the information contained in the report, the Committee's past concluding observations and information from other treaty bodies, special procedures and from the UN system as well from others sources, including regional human rights mechanisms, NHRI, NPMs, and NGOs and adopted by the Committee in plenary. States parties reply in writing but also send national delegations to Geneva during the session in order to discuss the issues orally.

49 For States that have accepted the simplified reporting procedure the LoIs is adopted by the Committee prior to the State report (see § 93 below).

3.1.4 Consideration of States Reports by the Committee (Article 19(3))

3.1.4.1 The Procedure of the 'constructive dialogue'

50 The consideration of State reports takes the form of a constructive dialogue aiming to give the Committee a picture of the situation with regard to torture and other forms of ill-treatment in the State party.

51 The presentation and examination of a report takes place in a public session over two consecutive half-day, which is live streamed via the UN Web TV. First, the delegation presents the report and provides additional information on new legislative developments or other facts that occurred after the submission of the report and responds to the LoIs. Next, the Country rapporteur and other Committee members make initial observations and ask additional questions to the State party which are subsequently answered by the delegation. Then, the Committee members can address other questions to the State representatives and make their final remarks. They can also raise matters that had not been referred to in the LoI. On the following day, the second meeting will be devoted to the replies of the State party's representatives to the questions posed by the members during the first meeting as well as to any follow-up issues that might be raised by the Committee.⁹³

52 The number of reports considered in each session varies from three up to six. At its forty-third session, the Committee decided that States parties' reports will be scheduled for examination according to the following order of priority: initial reports, reports presented under the simplified reporting procedure, long overdue periodic reports, and date of submission of periodic reports. If deemed necessary, the Committee may decide to prioritize a report over others.⁹⁴

53 In 2014, further to the GA Resolution 68/268 of 2014, the Chairpersons of the treaty bodies put forward recommendations aimed at harmonizing treaty bodies' practices and adopted a Guidance note on constructive dialogue.⁹⁵ Though pointing out the need to respect the Convention's 'specificities' in the dialogue, the Committee adopted such Guidance note at its fifty-fifth session in 2014.⁹⁶

3.1.4.2 Attendance from Committee Members and Country Rapporteurs

54 According to the Committee's practice, members do not participate in the consideration of reports of States parties of which they are nationals.⁹⁷ They are, however, present in the room. But in the past, under Chairperson Joseph Voyame, the nationals in question even had to leave the conference room.

55 At its fifth session in 1990, the Committee, on the basis of Rule 61, decided that the Chairperson should designate, in consultation with the Committee members, Country rapporteurs for the consideration of State reports.⁹⁸ Normally, the Committee appoints two of its members to act as Country rapporteurs for each report. One member can act as rapporteur for more than one report during the same session. The Country rapporteurs would be responsible for preparing the discussion; formulating the main questions, remarks, and concluding observations; and would be involved with drafting the LoIs.⁹⁹ The names of the Country rapporteurs with their respective countries is indicated in the annual reports.¹⁰⁰

3.1.4.3 Attendance by States Parties

56 Rule 68 governs the attendance by States at the examination of reports.¹⁰¹ In order to make the constructive dialogue possible, representatives of States are requested to attend the sessions in which their reports are being considered. After being duly notified by the Committee,¹⁰² if a State party fails to send a representative to the session, the Committee may, at its discretion, decide either to postpone the consideration of the report and notify the State party that, at a specified session, it intends to examine the report (Rule 68(2)(a)); or alternatively, to proceed at the session originally specified and submit to the State party its provisional concluding observations. The final concluding observations should be adopted at its following session (Rule 68(2)(b)).

57 In practice, the Committee has made use of both options. For example, in 2005 at its thirty-fourth session, the Committee was not able to consider the initial report of Togo due to the absence of its representatives and, hence, decided to postpone such an examination to the thirty-sixth session in May 2006 under Rule 68(2)(a). Togo excused its absence by referring to the great difficulties the country faced at the scheduled time, which did not allow the Government to appoint a delegation and make the resources available for such a delegation to travel. In taking this decision, the Committee emphasized the importance of having the State delegation present during the examination of its report, particularly the initial report which was, in this case, over ten years overdue.¹⁰³ Also, on several occasions the Committee examined a report without representatives of the concerned States parties being present (Rule 68(2)(b)). For example, this occurred in 2003 for the initial report of Cambodia, Cape Verde, and Antigua and Barbuda,¹⁰⁴ and in 2012 and 2016 for the special reports of Syria and Burundi respectively.¹⁰⁵

58 In order to facilitate States representatives' participation, where internet connections and time differences allow, the Committee may agree to conduct the dialogue via a videoconference.¹⁰⁶

3.1.4.4 Request for Additional Reports or Information

59 If the report does not contain all the information required, the Committee may, according to Rule 69(2), request the State party in question to provide an additional report.¹⁰⁷ States can also be invited to withdraw their report if the latter is below the requested standard. For example, in November 1993 after a preliminary dialogue with the representative of Belize, the Committee decided to request the Government of this State party to withdraw the report submitted and to hand in a revised version of its initial report together with its second periodic report, which was also overdue, in a single document. In fact, the report¹⁰⁸ was extremely brief and did not contain any of the background information the Committee needed for its work.¹⁰⁹

3.1.4.5 Meaning of 'general comments on the report'—Concluding Observations

60 After the dialogue with the delegation, as provided by Article 19(3), the Committee adopts its 'general comments on the report' and forwards these to the State party concerned which in reply may submit to the Committee any comment that it considers appropriate. This wording—simply referring to 'general comments' on the one side, but then simultaneously adding that general comments are ‘on the report’ and shall be forwarded ‘to the State Party concerned’—has raised the question as to whether Article 19(3) authorizes the Committee to issue comments addressing the situation of one specific State party or rather allows it to adopt only comments generally referring to all States parties.

61 As the drafting of Article 19 CAT was strongly influenced by the experiences of the HRC during the Cold War,¹¹⁰ it is worth drawing a comparison with such instrument. Article 40(4) CCPR provides that the HRC shall study State reports and transmit ‘its reports, and such general comments as it may consider appropriate to the States parties’. It is clear from a systematic interpretation of this provision that the examination of a State report is only completed when the HRC has summarized its conclusions as to the State party’s compliance with its obligations under the Covenant in its own report and has sent it to all States parties. In addition to these country-specific reports, the HRC is entitled to formulate general comments on the basis of its experience in the State reporting procedure. These general comments are not country-specific but provide the HRC with an opportunity to clarify the meaning of the various provisions of the Covenant, above all the meaning of the human rights contained therein. While the HRC started in 1981 adopting general comments, first on the reporting obligations of States parties and soon thereafter on the meaning of individual rights, the Cold War prevented it for more than ten years from complying with its task of completing the reporting procedure by adopting country-specific reports with respective conclusions and recommendations.¹¹¹ Nevertheless, since 1984 it has become common practice for individual HRC members, first introduced by experts from Western States, to submit a quasi-concluding personal statement on the human rights situation of the State party concerned. After the end of the Cold War, the HRC started to appoint special rapporteurs on each State report and, since 1992, to adopt by consensus joint and fairly cautious comments on every State report, balancing ‘positive aspects’ with ‘factors and difficulties impeding the application of the Covenant’. In 1997, the HRC introduced the term ‘concluding observations’ instead of ‘comments’, and in 2002 the first Special Rapporteur for Follow-Up on Concluding Observations was appointed.

62 The drafting history of the Convention against Torture shows that both the original Swedish draft of 1981 and the two proposals of the Chairman-Rapporteur of 1982 envisaged that the CAT Committee should transmit after the consideration of each State report its own ‘comments or suggestions as it may consider appropriate’ to the States parties. This formulation seems to have been taken from Article 9(2) CERD, which entrusted the CERD Committee to ‘make suggestions and general recommendations based on the examination of the reports’. During the 1984 Working Group of the Commission on Human Rights, the USSR and its allies strongly urged that the words ‘comments and suggestions’ be replaced by ‘general comments’. This was the only issue in Article 19 on which no compromise could be achieved. Since the Socialist States strongly maintained their opposition against any country-specific comments by the Committee, the Western and other States finally gave in and thereby saved the consensus on the Convention. It is thus clear from the travaux préparatoires that Article 19(3) CAT was not meant to empower the CAT Committee to formulate country-specific conclusions and recommendations. The text only refers to ‘general comments’ and not to both ‘its reports’ and ‘general comments’, as in Article 40(4) CCPR.

63 On the other hand, under Article 19(3) the Committee is entitled to make ‘such general comments on the report as it may consider appropriate’ and forward these ‘to the State Party concerned’. A literal interpretation of this formulation indicates that the general comments are indeed country-specific and not addressed to all States parties, as in Article 40(4) CCPR.¹¹² In fact, the words ‘general comments on the report’ are somewhat contradictory and could only mean that the Committee should not become too specific in formulating its comments on an individual State Party.

64 However, since the CAT Committee started its work, the issue of interfering with State sovereignty turned out to be fairly uncontroversial in practice. The Committee did not feel restrained by the narrow wording and the drafting history of Article 19(3) and it never used the term ‘general comments’ for its country-specific comments, which were soon developed into fairly elaborate and critical conclusions and recommendations on each State report. Moreover, since 2002, the Committee has explicitly addressed the issue in its RoP, where it included a provision expressly allowing it to make not only ‘general comments’ but also ‘concluding observations or recommendations on the report as it may consider appropriate’.¹¹³ The wording concluding observations is today widely used by the UN human rights treaty bodies, the chairpersons and other UN actors.¹¹⁴ It is also preferable in order to distinguish it from the ‘general comments on the provision of the Convention’ regulated under Rule 74.¹¹⁵

65 Initially, the Committee elaborated its conclusions and recommendations immediately after the consideration of the report. In order to improve the quality, in 1998 the Committee decided to elaborate and adopt them after the consideration of the report.¹¹⁶ Today, after consideration of the State report in public meetings, the Country rapporteurs draft a proposal for concluding observations, which is subsequently discussed and adopted in a closed plenary meeting of the Committee.¹¹⁷

66 The structure of the concluding observations has been revised several times. In the early years, there was no ‘common’ conclusion after the consideration of a State report but only individual members that presented their comments. Hence, the ‘general comments’ consisted in a summary of the different individual positions drawn up by the Chairperson.¹¹⁸ These were not properly structured.¹¹⁹ The Committee started in 1992 issuing ‘common’ concluding observations reflecting the position of the Committee as whole, and in 1994 to adopt properly structured concluding observations.¹²⁰ This

¹¹² In this sense see also Burgers and Danelius (17) 158, who affirm that ‘the present Convention leaves no doubt on this question in its formulation of paragraph 3 of article 19, since this paragraph refers to comments ‘on the report’ (singular) and to the forwarding of such comments ‘to the State Party concerned’ (singular); Ingelse (n 69) 146.

¹¹³ Rule 71. A reference to ‘conclusions and recommendations’ was first made in RoP as Amended by the Committee at its twenty-eighth Session in 2002 (CAT/C/3/Rev4, Rule 68); the Rule was then again amended at the forty-fifth session in 2010 (CAT/C/3/Rev.5) which substituted the wording ‘conclusions’ with ‘concluding observations’.

structure has been maintained mostly unchanged until today, concluding observations being structured as follows: (a) introduction; (b) positive aspects; (c) principals subjects of concern and related recommendations.¹²¹ In respect to the original structure, the main difference seems to be that, as of 2006, the Committee has merged the parts of ‘subject of concerns’ and ‘recommendations’ thereby including its recommendations directly under each of the thematic subject of concerns.¹²² Moreover, pursuant to a better harmonization of the treaty body system, at their twenty-fifth meeting in 2014 the Chairs have discussed the possibility to introduce a common format for concluding observations.¹²³

67 The part on subject of concerns includes the pending follow-up issues from the previous reporting cycle, as well as the observations and recommendations of the Committee thematically clustered. At the end of the document, the Committee normally adds information on the follow-up procedure and ‘other issues’ covering for example its recommendations to made declarations under Articles 21 and 22 CAT; or ratify other human rights treaties; and, above all, the invitation to submit the next periodic report within a specific date.

68 According to Article 19(3), States parties may submit any observation deemed appropriate in reply to the Committee’s conclusions and recommendations.¹²⁴ Article 19(4) authorizes the Committee, ‘at its discretion’, to ‘include any comments made by it in accordance with paragraph 3 of this article, together with the observations thereon received from the State Party concerned, in its annual report made in accordance with article 24’. As of 2015, the Committee’s annual reports no longer include the full text of the concluding observations.¹²⁵ Instead, they contain a list of the States reports considered and the concluding observations adopted by the Committee per each session. The full text of the concluding observations is published separately, referenced in the annual report, and made available online on the website of the OHCHR under the respective session.

69 Moreover, if a State party responds with any observations on the concluding observations, the Committee publishes them with an official document and posts them on the website.¹²⁶ It can only avoid this obligation by deciding not to include any of its own conclusions and recommendations in the annual report. Furthermore, if so requested, the Committee may also include a copy of the State report in the annual report.¹²⁷ In practice, no State has ever put forward this request, and the Committee has never done so. Since State reports are public documents, there does not seem to be any need to include a copy in the annual report, as envisaged in Article 19(4).

70 The Committee recommends that the State party widely disseminates, at the national level and in all the appropriate languages, the concluding observations as well as the State report and the State’s written replies to the LOIs. States are obliged to publish the recommendations¹²⁸ and take those legislative and administrative and other measures that are required to ensure full national compliance with the provisions contained in the Convention. The steps taken must be recorded adequately for inclusion in the next report and be submitted to the Committee.¹²⁹

3.1.5 Meaning of ‘general comments on the provisions of the Convention’ (Rule 74)

71 As the HRC, the CAT Committee uses the term ‘general comments’ only for the general statements on the interpretation of specific provisions of the Convention. The HRC derived its power from its State reporting functions under Article 40 CCPR. In its first general comment, the CAT Committee seemed to have based its power on Article 22(4) and its experience in the individual complaints procedure.¹³⁰ This seems surprising, as Article 22(4) does not contain any competence to adopt general comments. The practice also does not correspond to that of other treaty monitoring bodies, which elaborated general comments in the context of the State reporting procedure only. The reference to Article 22 was not reiterated in the subsequent General Comments No 2 and 3 but is included in the General Comment No 4. This could be explained by the fact that General Comment No 4 aims to clarify not only the scope of Article 3 but also issues concerning the admissibility and the merits of individual communications under Article 3.

72 Moreover, since its forty-fifth session in 2010, the Committee has also explicitly empowered itself to adopt ‘general comments on the provisions of the Convention with a view to promoting its further implementation or assisting States parties in fulfilling their obligations’ by adopting an express provision on general comments in its RoP (Rule 74).¹³¹

73 In contrast to the HRC, the Committee has been fairly reluctant to make use of such power with the first general comment being adopted only in November 1997 on Article 3. Since then, it has adopted three additional general comments, namely on Articles 2, 14, and 3.¹³² The General Comment No 4 replaces General Comment No 1, hence, there are currently three General Comment into force.¹³³

74 In 2015, with a view to harmonize their practices, the Chairpersons have put forward recommendations for the treaty bodies on how to conduct the consultation process for the elaboration of general comments.¹³⁴ These have been, for example, implemented by the Committee for the adoption of its revised General Comment No 4. On this occasion, the Committee has organized a public general discussion on the subject, making a first draft of the revised comment available online and explicitly soliciting feedback

On the authority of the Committee to issue general comments see also Ingelse (n 69) 150.

3.1.6 Follow-up to Concluding Observations

3.1.6.1 Development of the Procedure

75 Follow up and implementation of recommendations are increasingly problematic. Hence, similarly to other UN treaty bodies, over the years, the Committee has gradually developed a follow-up mechanism under the reporting procedure.¹³⁶ The first step in this regard was the amendment of the RoP in 2002 and the establishment of the position of Rapporteur for follow-up to concluding observations.¹³⁷ In 2003, the Committee established a procedure for follow-up as well as criteria to identify and select recommendations for follow-up.¹³⁸ Such procedure was, then, periodically revised by the Committee. Key changes were adopted in 2005 with the decision to document the status of the follow-up replies provided by States in a chart;¹³⁹ and in 2007, with the decision to make public and available online the Rapporteur's letters to the States parties as well as all States parties' replies, and civil society submissions.¹⁴⁰ Additional developments occurred in 2011 when the Committee decided to make it more 'focused' on three main issues, ie investigations, prosecutions, and legal safeguards;¹⁴¹ and in 2015 with the adoption of the Guidelines for follow-up to concluding observations.¹⁴² Today the procedure has become 'an integral part of the reporting cycle' and a key mechanism for assessing the impact of the Committee's recommendations.¹⁴³ Further steps with regard to the follow-up procedure were discussed in August 2016. On this occasion, the Committee reflected on whether the reporting deadline could be shortened to six months for urgent matters; and how implementation of follow-up recommendations could be strengthened, focusing in particular on the role of civil society.¹⁴⁴ As the Guidelines for follow-up have codified the previous practice of the Committee and constitute an invaluable instrument for understanding the follow-up procedure to concluding observations, the analysis below will focus thereupon.

¹⁴¹ With a view to strengthening its system, the Committee started a discussion on the follow-up procedure in 2009 see A/65/44 (n 94) para 77. Further to such process, and considering the growing number of items that were being identified for follow-up, in 2011 the Committee decided to focus its follow-up items on three key issues with the aim to provide a more coherent and focused procedure for States parties. Specifically, it was decided that follow-up requests should concern one of the following issues: investigations, prosecutions and legal safeguards; and when deemed necessary the issue of remedies and redress or other issues. The three issues indicated by the Committee were chosen on the basis of a detailed analysis of its follow-up procedure by the Committee according to which investigations, prosecutions, and legal safeguards resulted to be the most frequent follow-up items in its concluding observations. For more details see also CAT, 'Report of the Committee Against Torture Fifty-first Session (28 October–22 November 2013) Fifty-second Session (28 April–23 May 2014)' (2014) UN Doc A/69/44, paras 76–78.

3.1.6.2 Criteria for Identifying and Selecting Recommendations

76 As indicated above, already at its Thirtieth session, the Committee had decided to select among its recommendations those which had to be followed-up as a matter of priority.¹⁴⁵ Initially, the Committee had the practice to identify between three and six recommendations,¹⁴⁶ selecting them based on three main criteria: ‘they are serious, protective, and are considered able to be accomplished within one year.’¹⁴⁷ In 2015, the Guidelines have further elaborated on these criteria specifying that follow-up recommendations must: fall within the reach of specific thematic areas, ie legal safeguards, investigations, prosecutions, or redress to victims; be implementable within one year; and be ‘specific, measurable, attainable, realistic and time-bound’ so as to facilitate their implementation.¹⁴⁸ According to the Guidelines, a maximum of four follow-up recommendations should be selected.¹⁴⁹ Such elements seem to be in line with the 2014 GA Resolution 68/268 that encourages treaty bodies to adopt ‘short, focused and concrete concluding observations’.¹⁵⁰

77 In practice, at the end of each concluding observations the Committee includes a paragraph specifying the recommendations for which the State party need to provide follow-up information and the deadline for their submission. An extract of such recommendations, referred to as ‘follow-up issues’, is made available as a separate documents on the Committee’s webpage.¹⁵¹

78 While States parties are requested to submit information only on the selected ‘follow-up recommendations’, they are additionally encouraged to submit a ‘voluntary plan for the implementation of all or some of the remaining recommendations included in the concluding observations’.¹⁵²

3.1.6.3 The Rapporteur for Follow-up to Concluding Observations

79 The Rapporteur for follow-up to concluding observations is established under Rule 61 and regulated by Rule 72. Although Rule 72 allows for the appointment of ‘at least one mandate holder’, so far the Committee has nominated only one Rapporteur at a time.

80 The mandate of the Rapporteur is only briefly described under the RoPs, which provide that the Rapporteur shall ‘assess the information provided by the State party’ in consultation with the Country rapporteurs and report to the Committee (Rule 72(2)).

¹⁴⁴ See CAT, ‘Committee Against Torture Discusses Follow-up to Concluding Observations and to Reprisals’ Press release of 10 August 2016 <<http://www.ohchr.org/EN/NewsEvents/Pages/DisplayNews.aspx?NewsID=20360&LangID=E#sthash.0O6xtjS.E3bE3C1z.dpuf>> accessed 2 November 2017.

¹⁴⁸ CAT/C/55/3 (n 87) para 7.

¹⁴⁹ In the past, the Committee identified between three and six recommendations see eg A/60/44 (n 63) para 115; A/61/44 (n 103) para 44.

¹⁵⁰ GA Res 68/268 of 9 April 2014 (n 5) para 6.

¹⁵¹ The ‘follow-up issues’ are not given a specific UN symbol but are published online as extracts of the concluding observations.

¹⁵² CAT/C/55/3 (n 87) para 11.

On the contrary, the Guidelines seem to provide a broader mandate encompassing various activities ranging ‘from the adoption of concluding observations to the discontinuation of the follow-up procedure’.¹⁵³ In practice, they include (1) seeking and receiving information concerning the State party’s implementation of the Convention and compliance with the Committee’s conclusions and recommendations upon the former’s initial, periodic or other reports; (2) assessing such information; and (3) communicating with the States parties under the follow-up procedure. The type of communication with the States parties may vary depending on whether the State has or not submitted follow-up information and, if so, on the conclusions reached by the Rapporteur when assessing the information provided. The Rapporteur is also mandated to present to the Committee at each session the so-called ‘progress report’ on the activities he/she has undertaken pursuant to the mandate. A summary of the progress report is included in the annual report.¹⁵⁴

3.1.6.4 The Submission of Follow-up Report by the State Party

81 The State party shall report the developments regarding the principal areas of concern and recommendations to the Committee, through its Rapporteur. The follow-up report should include ‘sufficient information’ for the Committee to assess whether or not the recommendations have been implemented. It must be in one of the UN official languages and respect the 3,500 word limit.¹⁵⁵ The deadline for submission by the State party concerned of its follow-up report is generally set at one year. Such reports are published in the Committee’s website under the name of ‘follow-up State party’s report’.¹⁵⁶ As it will be seen below, if the follow-up report is considered ‘insufficient’ by the Committee, the State is requested to submit an additional State party’s follow-up report. In addition to States parties, follow-up information may also be submitted by NHRIs, NGOs, and other stakeholders. The Committee encourages these stakeholders to submit that information within three months of the State party’s deadline.¹⁵⁷

3.1.6.5 Analysis of the State Information by the Rapporteur for Follow-up

82 The Rapporteur will then proceed with an assessment of the information received by the States parties and other stakeholders. The scope of the assessment covers the quality and extent of the information provided as well as the degree of implementation of the recommendations. Information may be classified as ‘satisfactory’ when they are thorough and extensive, and relating directly to the recommendations; ‘partly-satisfactory’ when they are thorough and extensive but not fully respond to the recommendations; ‘unsatisfactory’ when they are vague and incomplete and/or fail to address the recommendations. A fourth category is applied when the State party does not provide any response.¹⁵⁸ Similarly, the assessment of the implementation degree of the recommendations can be graded on the basis of six different categories,¹⁵⁹ as it is the case for the implementation plans for which three grading categories exist.¹⁶⁰

¹⁵³ ibid, para 4. ¹⁵⁴ ibid, para 6. ¹⁵⁵ ibid, para 12.

¹⁵⁶ The UN symbol of follow-up reports is composed by the symbol of the relevant concluding observations and ‘/Add.1’, ‘/Add.3’, etc.

¹⁶⁰ ibid, para 21. The categories in relation to the implementation plan are: A largely addresses all recommendations; B addresses only some recommendations; C not provided.

3.1.6.6 Communication with the States Parties

83 Once the information provided has been assessed, ie between fifteen and eighteen months after the adoption of the concluding observations,¹⁶¹ the Rapporteur will establish a dialogue with the State party concerned in cooperation with the respective Country rapporteur.

84 When the State party fails to submit its report, the Rapporteur will send a reminder. According to the Guidelines, a maximum of two reminders shall be sent: the first three months and the second six months after the deadline for the submission of the follow-up report.¹⁶² Similarly, if the State has provided insufficient information (category D), the Committee may send an additional request for information asking the State to provide the additional information. States are normally requested to provide such information in the next reporting cycle.¹⁶³ In addition, the Rapporteur will interact with the State party, and request consultations with its representatives,¹⁶⁴ modelling its communication ‘registry’ based on the grade assigned during its assessment on the implementation of the recommendation.¹⁶⁵ The follow-up procedure can be discontinued only if the information submitted by the State party is satisfactory and the recommendations have been considered ‘largely implemented’.¹⁶⁶

85 Finally, the Guidelines attempt to coordinate the reporting procedure with the follow-up procedure. They stipulate, on the one side, that the LoIs or LOIPRs for the subsequent reporting cycle should include recommendations that have not been fully implemented or have not yet received reply; and, on the other side, that concluding observations should integrate the outcome of the follow-up procedure.¹⁶⁷

86 More generally, another way to follow-up to the Committee’s concluding observations may be the Universal Periodic Review (UPR). Making reference to the Committee’s recommendations in the UPR will also facilitate a more coordinated and integrated approach between different mechanisms.¹⁶⁸

3.2 Simplified Reporting Procedure (Rule 66)

87 The problem of late and non-reporting seems to be particularly relevant for the CAT Committee, which is among the UN human rights treaty bodies per lowest reporting rate.¹⁶⁹ As of December 2017, the CAT reporting procedure counted sixty-eight overdue reports, with twenty-eight initial and forty periodic overdue reports. Some initial reports are even due after more than twenty years.¹⁷⁰

¹⁶² ibid, para 27. These reminders are published on the Committee’s website.

¹⁶³ The Committee’s letter(s) requesting additional information to the States parties are published on the Committee’s website. In this regard, it should also be noted that since 2006 the Rapporteur has also identified a list of ‘recurring concerns’ which are not fully addressed by States parties in their follow up replies. See A/62/44 (n 140) para 47, and following annual reports.

¹⁶⁴ CAT/C/55/3 (n 87) paras 26, 28. ¹⁶⁵ ibid, paras 23–25. ¹⁶⁶ ibid, para 31.

¹⁶⁷ ibid, paras 29–30. The need to streamline the follow-up with the simplified procedure was already raised in the past see eg CAT, ‘Report of the Committee Against Torture’ (2011) UN Doc A/66/44, para 74; CAT, ‘Report of the Committee Against Torture Forty-ninth Session (29 October–23 November 2012) Fiftieth Session (6–31 May 2013)’ (2013) UN Doc A/68/44, para 92; A/69/44 (n 141) para 89.

88 In order to overcome such challenges, in parallel to the several initiatives at the general UN level,¹⁷¹ also the Committee has developed various mechanisms aimed at improving the States parties' compliance with their reporting duty.

89 One of such mechanisms is the so-called simplified reporting procedure, also referred to as optional reporting procedure or list of issues prior to reporting procedure (LOIPR). The traditional reporting procedure described above has been the only reporting procedure followed by the Committee until 2007. However, after that date, States parties may report under a new optional procedure.¹⁷² The Committee adopted such new procedure at its thirty-eighth session in 2007, thereby being the first human rights treaty body to introduce it.¹⁷³ Since then, seven additional treaty bodies have agreed to offer to States parties the simplified reporting procedure.¹⁷⁴ The procedure is regulated under Rule 66.

90 The simplified reporting procedure remains optional, meaning that it applies only to States parties that have formally accepted it.¹⁷⁵ Once a State party has accepted the simplified reporting procedure, there is no need to reiterate the acceptance for each new reporting cycle.¹⁷⁶ At the end of each concluding observations, the Committee reminds States parties reporting under the simplified reporting procedure to continue submitting their reports under this procedure and indicates that it will transmit a LOIPR in order to enable them to prepare the next periodic report.¹⁷⁷ In addition, the Committee encourages the States parties reporting under the traditional procedure to accept the new simplified procedure by sending them a note verbale as their periodic reports become due and by including invitations in its concluding observations.¹⁷⁸

91 Initially introduced on a pilot basis,¹⁷⁹ considering the positive feedback received and the high rate of acceptance of the simplified reporting procedure by States parties, the procedure was then adopted on a regular basis as of 2009 (forty-second session).¹⁸⁰

The modalities of the simplified reporting procedure vary according to the treaty body. See HRI/MC/2015/2 (n 173) paras 5–16.

¹⁷⁹ At its thirty-eighth session, in 2007, the Committee had decided to introduce the new procedure on a trial basis for periodic reports falling due in 2009 and 2010, with the exception of reports that had already been submitted. During this trial period, the Committee sent the LOIPR together with a request for acceptance for the procedure in order to provide States parties with a concrete example of the LOIPR. This approach was later amended by Committee at its forty-second session, when it decided to draft, adopt and transmit the LOIPR only after an explicit agreement of the procedure by the States party. See A/62/44 (n 140) para 24; HRI/MC/2014/4 (n 175) paras 16, 19.

¹⁸⁰ A/64/44 (n 64) para 27; CAT/C/47/2 (n 6) para 9, 33(b).

At the same session, the Committee also decided that it would draft, adopt, and transmit LOIPRs only after an explicit agreement of the procedure by the States party.¹⁸¹ So far, the Committee has confirmed its decision to continue with such procedure at each reporting cycle.

92 At its forty-sixth session in 2011, the Committee undertook a preliminary evaluation of the simplified reporting procedure and proposed various measures to improve the procedure as well as the effectiveness of the Committee's working methods.¹⁸² Proposals included, inter alia, the application of the procedure to initial reports; the introduction of simplified LOIPRs for States parties that report regularly and cooperate with the Committee; the adoption of a new procedure for the review of a State party in the absence of a report; the adoption of short guidelines on replies to LOIPRs; and the limitation of the number of issues included in the LOIPR to thirty focused questions or paragraphs.¹⁸³ Most of these issues were discussed by the Committee during a retreat on the working methods held in 2014 at its fifty-third session. There, the Committee decided to offer the simplified reporting procedure to States parties with long overdue initial reports. It further decided to establish a working group responsible for a substantive evaluation of the simplified reporting procedure.¹⁸⁴ Following-up to the retreat, a preliminary substantive evaluation and a private discussion on this topic was held during the Committee's fifty-fifth session.¹⁸⁵

93 In contrast to the traditional one, the simplified procedure has only three steps: the adoption of the LOIPR by the treaty body and its transmission to the State party; the submission of written replies to the LOIPR by the States; and lastly the constructive dialogue. One of the main differences is that the list of issues is sent to the State party before it has submitted its national report and with the main aim of guiding the State in the implementation of its reporting duty. In fact, the key purpose for the establishment of the simplified reporting procedure was to address the failure of States parties to reply to the standard list of issues in time as well as for practical reasons concerning the translation of documents.¹⁸⁶ More specifically, the procedure aims at (a) guiding States parties in the preparation and content of their periodic reports, thus improving the quality and focus of reports; (b) facilitating the reporting process; and (c) strengthening the States parties' capacity to fulfil their reporting obligations in a timely and effective manner.¹⁸⁷

94 With regard to the scope of application of the procedure, the Committee has initially offered the procedure for all periodic reports falling due in 2009 and 2010 regardless of the number of years the report was overdue. As a general principle, it did not however apply the procedure to initial reports.¹⁸⁸ But further to its 2014 retreat on working methods, the Committee has decided to offer the simplified reporting procedure also to States with long overdue initial reports. Bearing in mind the limited capacity of the Secretariat, however, this exception is applied only to two States per year.¹⁸⁹

95 Under this new procedure, the CAT Committee prepares and adopts lists of issues, known as the LOIPR, which are then transmitted to States parties prior to the deadline for the submission of their respective periodic reports.¹⁹⁰ The LOIPR are drafted¹⁹¹ and adopted depending on the respective due date of each State party's report,¹⁹² in order to be transmitted to the relevant State party at least one year (usually eighteen to twenty-four months) in advance of the due reporting date.¹⁹³ If recent concluding observations of the Committee exist, they constitute the basis of the LOIPR.¹⁹⁴ The written replies to the LOIPR constitute the State party's report and fulfil its reporting obligations under Article 19.¹⁹⁵ No further written information is required from the State party prior to the consideration of its report during the constructive dialogue.¹⁹⁶

96 Reports submitted under the simplified reporting procedure are to be examined no later than eighteen months after submission in order to ensure that they remain current.¹⁹⁷ If reports cannot be considered in a timely manner, the Committee would have to adopt and transmit a new LOIPR in order to ensure that the information provided is updated.¹⁹⁸ With the exception of initial reports, reports received under the simplified reporting procedure are thus prioritized by the Committee in terms of scheduling their consideration at upcoming sessions.¹⁹⁹

97 In addition, States Parties are encouraged to submit and update a common core document, as described in the Harmonized Guidelines on Reporting.²⁰⁰ The Committee has not yet developed specific guidelines for reporting under the simplified reporting procedure.²⁰¹ In line with the word limits imposed to all States parties' documentation, the GA has similarly called upon treaty bodies to limit the number of questions to be included in the LOIPR.²⁰²

98 In practice, the simplified reporting procedure has been offered to States for all periodic reporting since 2009; and for two long overdue initial reports per year as of 2015. As of May 2017, with regard to periodic reports, out of the 128 States parties that were at the periodic reporting stage: ninety-four States (73.5%) have expressly accepted the simplified reporting procedure; four States (3%) have declined to report under it; and thirty States (23.5%) have not yet answered or have not been invited to report under it.²⁰³ With regard to long overdue initial reports, as of May 2017, the procedure has been offered

As of 2009 at its forty-second session the Committee decided that it would send LOIPRs only after an explicit agreement of the procedure by the States party and revised its previous approach to send sending the LOIPR simultaneously with the request for acceptance of the procedure by the State party. to six States: Antigua and Barbuda, Cape Verde, Côte d'Ivoire, Malawi, Seychelles, and Somalia.²⁰⁴ Côte d'Ivoire, Malawi, and Somalia have accepted the offer.²⁰⁵

99 All in all, the Committee considers the simplified reporting procedure as a positive step that facilitates the reporting process and helps States parties to fulfil their reporting obligations.²⁰⁶ The Committee has, for example, welcomed the relatively high reporting rate under the simplified reporting procedure.²⁰⁷ Nevertheless, despite some progress having been achieved, the problem of late or non-reporting persists also under the new procedure.²⁰⁸ Moreover, the Committee has identified some additional challenges. For example, it stressed that the procedure of drafting LOIPRs has substantially increased its workload as their preparation requires more work than the LoIs prepared by the Committee under the traditional reporting procedure.²⁰⁹ Due to its comparatively small membership, the Committee is therefore dependent on significant support from the staff of the OHCHR.²¹⁰ Moreover, the Committee highlighted the need for a standard and consistent approach of human rights treaty bodies to addressing delayed replies to the LOIPR.²¹¹

3.3 Other Measures to Address the Problem of Overdue Reporting

3.3.1 Consolidation of Reports (Rule 65(2))

100 Other measures to address the problem of overdue reports are regulated by Rule 65(2). According to this rule, the Committee may consider, in appropriate cases, information contained in recent reports as covering information that should be included in overdue reports;²¹² and recommend States parties to consolidate their periodic reports, ie to combine several periodic reports in one single submission.²¹³

3.3.2 Reminders and Statement in the Annual Reports (Rule 67)

101 According to Rule 67(1), the Secretary-General informs the Committee of all cases of non-submission of reports. The latter may transmit to a State party a reminder in case of non-submission of a report. In this regard, Rule 67(1) simply states that the Committee 'may' transmit a reminder to the State concerned without giving any further details as to the circumstances in which the reminder should be sent.²¹⁴ At its fifty-third session in 2015, the Committee has reviewed its practice and has, since then, sent reminders to all States parties

²⁰⁴ The Committee offered the procedure to Seychelles and Cape Verde at its fifty-third session in 2014; to Antigua and Barbuda and Côte d'Ivoire at its fifty-sixth session in 2015; and to Malawi and Somalia at its fifty-ninth session in 2016 see A/72/44 (n 78) para 34.

whose initial reports were overdue as well as to all States parties whose periodic reports were overdue for four or more years.²¹⁵ Information on what specific reminders have been sent by the Committee can be found in the annual report.

102 Furthermore, if a State party fails to submit a report after a reminder, the Committee shall so note in a statement in its annual report to the General Assembly.²¹⁶ Since 1996, the Committee used to include in its annual reports an annex on the status of reporting presenting the situation regarding all overdue reports.²¹⁷ The practice to publish such annex in the annual report has however been abandoned as of 2015 due to the word limit imposed to all UN documents. Despite this, a list showing the status of overdue reports is made available online at each session as part of the provisional agenda.²¹⁸

3.3.3 Examination in the Absence of a Report (Rule 67(3))

103 According to Rule 67(3), the Committee may inform the defaulting State of its intention to examine the measures taken by the State party in the absence of a report.²¹⁹ In a spirit of cooperation, the Committee uses this measure only as a last resort, ie in case of long overdue reports and after having sent specific reminders or having offered the possibility to report under the simplified procedure.

104 To date, the Committee has examined four States in the absence of a report, namely Guinea,²²⁰ Cape Verde,²²¹ Syria,²²² and Antigua and Barbuda.²²³ The rule was applied three times (Guinea, Cape Verde, and Antigua and Barbuda) in relation to initial reports, and once (Syria) in relation to a special report.

105 Despite all positive steps taken thus far to overcome the problem of overdue reports, it seems that the Committee did not manage to bring States parties into full compliance with regards to the reporting procedure. To this extent, one should consider that some of these initiatives aiming at strengthening the treaty bodies, such as the simplified reporting procedure, have been adopted only a few years ago and it will be possible to measure their impact only in the long run. On the other hand, it seems that the problem of overdue reports is a structural one that can only be resolved by a major structural reform. In this sense, one solution could be to overhaul the system of periodic State reports and replace it with a system requiring one comprehensive report every five years. The existing

²²⁰ Although the Committee has considered its concluding observations on Guinea as being adopted in the absence of its initial report, formally Guinea had submitted a national report the evening before its delegation appeared before the Committee, which however did not allow the Committee to study it in time for the first day of the dialogue or to have it translated into the Committee's working languages. system of treaty monitoring, which currently consists of several expert bodies, could be condensed into one single permanent expert examination body consisting of a sufficient number of full-time experts. Finally, an international court of human rights, composed of full-time judges, could be established in order to oversee the adjudication of complaints.²²⁴

3.4 Reprisals Following to Article 19

106 In contrast to other human rights treaties, the CAT does not contain a provision addressing expressly the issue of reprisal against individuals or organizations as a consequence for having communicated with its Committee. However, in setting out the right to compliant under Article 13, the Convention stipulates that ‘steps shall be taken to ensure that the complainant and witnesses are protected against all ill-treatment or intimidation as a consequence of his complaint or any evidence given’.²²⁵

107 As with other UN treaty bodies,²²⁶ the CAT Committee has recently clarified its position on reprisals. At its forty-ninth session in 2012, it decided to adopt a mechanism to prevent, monitor, and follow up cases of reprisals against civil society organizations, human rights defenders, victims, and witnesses that engage and cooperate with the treaty bodies. To this extent, it established two Rapporteurs on reprisals: one for reprisals under Article 19 and one under Articles 22 and 20, and adopted a statement outlining its policy.²²⁷ These decisions came soon after the 2012 recommendations made by the OHCHR in the report on the strengthening of human rights treaty bodies, who urged treaty bodies to set up ‘mechanisms for action’ against reprisals and a ‘focal point among its membership to draw attention to such cases’.²²⁸ Finally, as a clear endorsement of the San José Guidelines,²²⁹ at its fifty-fifth session in 2015 the Committee adopted detailed Guidelines on the Receipt and Handling of Allegations of Reprisals under Articles 13, 19, 20 and 22.²³⁰ One section of such guidelines describe measures to be taken in case of reprisals under Article 19.²³¹

108 The Committee’s policy on reprisals applies to any ‘individuals, groups and institutions’ that were subject to a reprisal measure as a consequence of seeking to cooperate with or otherwise assist the Committee.²³² Cooperation with the Committee may include ‘providing it with information, or by communicating about the findings or actions of the Committee, advancing compliance with reporting obligations or assisting the Committee in the pursuit of any of its functions’.²³³

²²⁵ Such an explicit provision is included in OPCAT (Art 15); OP3-CRC (Art 4); OPCESCR (Art 13); OPCEDAW (Art 11). Some treaty bodies have regulated reprisals in their RoPs, ie CESCR; CEDAW; CRC; CRDP; CED. On reprisals under the CAT, see also Arts 13, 20, and 22. 109 With regard to Article 19, the Guidelines provide that the Rapporteur, in cooperation with the Secretariat, receives complaints and information on reprisals; makes a preliminary assessment; and if it can be determined that there is ‘real threat’ or a ‘violation has been conducted’ he/she will ‘decide on the appropriate course of action’.²³⁴ They envisage, for example, the possibility to communicate with the Permanent Representative and issue public statements. With a view to strengthen their efficacy, the Guidelines provide that measures against reprisals may be taken in cooperation with other treaty bodies informing other relevant bodies, such as with a joint public statement, but also more generally that NHRIs, NPMs, or other mechanisms can be informed.²³⁵ Documents adopted by the Rapporteurs for reprisals are published online on the page of the OHCHR.²³⁶ The Guidelines also require explicit consent of the complainant and the respect of the principles of confidentiality and ‘do not harm’ for all allegations.²³⁷

Inquiry Procedure

1. If the Committee receives reliable information which appears to it to contain well-founded indications that torture is being systematically practised in the territory of a State Party, the Committee shall invite that State Party to co-operate in the examination of the information and to this end to submit observations with regard to the information concerned.
2. Taking into account any observations which may have been submitted by the State Party concerned, as well as any other relevant information available to it, the Committee may, if it decides that this is warranted, designate one or more of its members to make a confidential inquiry and to report to the Committee urgently.
3. If an inquiry is made in accordance with paragraph 2 of this article, the Committee shall seek the co-operation of the State Party concerned. In agreement with that State party, such an inquiry may include a visit to its territory.
4. After examining the findings of its member or members submitted in accordance with paragraph 2 of this article, the Committee shall transmit these findings to the State Party concerned together with any comments or suggestions which seem appropriate in view of the situation.
5. All the proceedings of the Committee referred to in paragraphs 1 to 4 of this article shall be confidential, and at all stages of the proceedings the co-operation of the State Party shall be sought. After such proceedings have been completed with regard to an inquiry made in accordance with paragraph 2, the Committee may, after consultations with the State Party concerned, decide to include a summary account of the results of the proceedings in its annual report made in accordance with article 24.

1. Introduction

1 At the time of its adoption, the inquiry procedure was the most innovative element of the monitoring mechanisms of the Convention and had no precedent in other human rights treaties. As will be explained below, the idea of carrying out confidential investigations into a systematic practice of serious (gross) and reliably attested human rights violations is based on the so-called 1503 procedure of the former Sub-Commission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights¹ and a number of other mechanisms, such as for example the ILO's supervisory procedures.² Since its first adoption, the procedure has become a model for later treaties and to date five UN human rights treaties contain a similar mechanism.³

2 Because of its innovative character, this provision proved to be one of the most controversial one during the drafting history. The idea of an inquiry procedure was strongly opposed by the Soviet bloc, who criticized it for the broad definition of 'reliable' information and because it envisaged a fact-finding mission in the territory of the State party concerned. In the end, a compromise was reached, and Article 20 provides that although the inquiry procedure is not subject to an explicit declaration by States parties to accept this competence of the Committee against Torture (CAT Committee or Committee)—as is the case with the complaints mechanism—any State party may decide to 'opt out' by means of a specific reservation in accordance with Article 28. Originally, only Socialist States and Chile made such an 'opting out' reservation. With the exception of Afghanistan and China, all States later withdrew their respective reservations made during the late 1980s. There were, however, other States that used this option when acceding to the Convention during the 1990s and even in more recent years, as in the cases of Equatorial Guinea, Mauritania, and Syria. As of December 2017, the procedure applied to 148 States parties, with fourteen States having opted out.⁴

3 The Committee has so far concluded ten inquiry procedures. The majority of them have been based on information provided by non-governmental organizations (NGOs), such as Amnesty International (AI), Human Rights Watch (HRW), and national organizations. The inquiry procedure, therefore, resembles to some extent an actio popularis by NGOs.

4 Below, after an overview of the controversial discussions that took place during the drafting of Article 20, the article will analyse its scope of application as well as the functioning of the procedure in light of the inquiry procedures concluded so far by the Committee.

2.1 Chronology of Draft Texts

5 *Original Swedish Draft (18 January 1978)*⁵

Article 17

If the Human Rights Committee receives information that torture is being systematically practised in a certain State party, the Committee may designate one or more of its members to carry out an inquiry and to report to the Committee urgently. The inquiry may include a visit to the State concerned, provided that the Government of that State gives its consent.

6 *Swedish Proposal for Implementation Provisions (22 December 1981)*⁶

Article 30

1. If the Committee receives reliably attested information from any source indicating that torture is being systematically practised in the territory of a State party to the present Convention, the Committee, after giving that State party the opportunity to state its views on the situation, may designate one or more of its members to make a confidential enquiry and to report to the Committee urgently.

2. An enquiry made in accordance with paragraph 1 of this article may include a visit to the territory of the State party concerned, unless the Government of that State party refuses to give its consent.

7 *Draft Implementation Provisions, Submitted by the Chairman-Rapporteur of the Working Group as Possible Alternative to the new Swedish Proposals (1 February 1982)*⁷

1. If the group established in accordance with article 17 receives information from any source which in its view appears to indicate that torture is being systematically practised in the territory of a State party to the Convention, the group shall invite that State party to submit observations with regard to the information concerned.

2. On the basis of all relevant information available to the group, including any observations which may have been submitted by the State party concerned, the group may, if it decides that this is warranted, designate one or more of its members to make a confidential enquiry and to report to the group urgently.

3. An enquiry made in accordance with paragraph 2 of this article may include a visit to the territory of the State party concerned, unless the Government of that State party when informed of the intended visit, does not give its consent.

4. After examining the report of its member or members submitted in accordance with paragraph 2 of this article, the group may transmit to the State party concerned any comments or suggestions which seem appropriate in view of the situation.

5. All the proceedings of the group under this article shall be confidential.

Article 20

1. If the Committee receives information from any source which in its view appears to indicate that torture is being systematically practised in the territory of a State party, the Committee shall invite that State party to submit observations with regard to the information concerned.
2. On the basis of all relevant information available to the Committee, including any observations which may have been submitted by the State party concerned, the Committee may, if it decides that this is warranted, designate one or more of its members to make a confidential enquiry and to report to the Committee urgently.
3. An enquiry made in accordance with paragraph 2 may include a visit to the territory of the State party concerned, unless the Government of that State party when informed of the intended visit, does not give its consent.
4. After examining the report of its member or members submitted in accordance with paragraph 2, the Committee may transmit to the State party concerned any comments or suggestions which seem appropriate in view of the situation.
5. All the proceedings of the Committee under this article shall be confidential.

9 *Draft Resolution Submitted by the Netherlands to the General Assembly (23 November 1984)*⁹

Article 20

1. If the Committee receives information which appears to it to contain reliable indications that torture is being systematically practised in the territory of a State party, the Committee shall invite that State party to submit observations with regard to the information concerned.
2. Taking into account any observations which may have been submitted by the State party concerned as well as any other relevant information available to it, the Committee may, if it decides that this is warranted, designate one or more of its members to make a confidential inquiry and to report to the Committee urgently.
3. If an inquiry is made in accordance with paragraph 2, the Committee shall seek the co-operation of the State party concerned. In agreement with that State party, such an inquiry may include a visit to its territory.
4. After examining the findings of its member or members submitted in accordance with paragraph 2, the Committee shall transmit these findings to the State party concerned together with any comments or suggestions which seem appropriate in view of the situation.
5. All the proceedings of the Committee referred to in paragraphs 1–4 shall be confidential. After such proceedings have been completed with regard to an inquiry made in accordance with paragraph 2, the Committee may, at its discretion, decide to include a summary account of the results of the proceedings in its annual report made in accordance with article 24.

Article 28

1. Each State may, at the time of the signature or satisfaction of this Convention or accession thereto, declare that it does recognize the competence of the Committee provided for in article 20.
2. Any State Party having made a reservation in accordance with the preceding paragraph may, at any time, withdraw this notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

2.2 Analysis of the Discussions in the Working Group and the Third Committee

11 Because Article 20 had no exact precedent in the CCPR, or in other human rights instruments,¹⁰ it proved to be one of the more controversial provisions in the Working Group; so much so that a consensus on the text was only reached at the Third Committee meeting in 1984.¹¹ Although the specific language and procedures contained in Article 20 were innovative, the idea of an ex officio procedure to examine gross and systematic violations of human rights by States parties was not completely novel. The Article 20 procedure has its roots in Resolution 1503 of the ECOSOC (1970)¹² and a number of other mechanisms, such as for example the ILO's supervisory procedures.¹³

12 The Working Group did not deal with the supervisory mechanism of the Convention in its sessions between 1978 and 1980. However, the written comments of several States in 1978 regarding Article 17 of the original Swedish draft¹⁴ shaped the subsequent discussions within the Working Group.¹⁵ This original draft, which envisioned the Human Rights Committee (HRC) as the supervisory mechanism, allowed for visits to the State party provided that the Government of that State gave its consent.¹⁶ Austria and Switzerland supported the draft Article, with Switzerland proposing that the procedure be strengthened by shifting the presumption to one of consent, so that a State party under inquiry would have to object actively if it opposed such a visit.¹⁷ The German Democratic Republic objected to the draft Article because it considered the powers granted to the HRC to be outside the scope of its mandate as derived from the CCPR.¹⁸ At this early stage, France and the USA also voiced objections, but their concerns were with specific provisions of the procedure rather than with the existence of the procedure itself. France felt that the HRC should not begin an inquiry at all without first obtaining the State party's consent. The proposal submitted by the USA would have required a State party expressly to declare its recognition of the implementation organ's competence to carry out such inquiries. Once it had done so, however, that State party would be bound to accept any visits the organ deemed necessary.¹⁹

None of these ideas were explicitly adopted in the 1981 draft, although that draft did include a provision requiring that the inquiry itself be confidential.²⁰

13 In its 1982 session, the Working Group began its examination of the inquiry procedure for allegations of systematic torture,²¹ basing its discussion on Article 30 of the Swedish proposal for implementation provisions.²² This draft had incorporated some of the States' comments made in 1978 and no longer referred to the HRC as its implementation organ.

14 Some delegations criticized draft Article 30 for not clarifying that the procedure should involve three distinct steps. They noted that the implementation organ should, first, consider whether or not there were sufficient reasons for addressing itself to a State party. It should then take into account all relevant information at its disposal in order to consider whether it would be warranted to initiate an inquiry. Finally, the organ should consider, in the light of the results of the inquiry, whether to transmit any comments or suggestions to the State party concerned. The delegations further noted that the draft Article failed to clarify that each phase of the proceeding should be confidential.²³

15 One delegation suggested that the grave nature of torture justified further strengthening of the procedure. It proposed granting the implementation organ greater power to go public if the Government clearly failed to comply with the necessary measures of its suppression (action to prosecute) after one year.²⁴ It highlighted criminal prosecution as one such measure; the lack of which could trigger publication of a summary account of the inquiry in its public report to the ECOSOC.²⁵ Some delegations disagreed with this proposal, making a distinction between the obligation to submit cases to competent authorities to decide about prosecution, which was required by the Convention, and the obligation to prosecute. It was also noted that adequate measures to suppress torture may often be of a different character than criminal prosecution.²⁶

16 At this same 1982 session, Sweden submitted a revised text to the Working Group.²⁷ Under this draft, the Committee could contact a State party pursuant to information which appeared to indicate, rather than that which simply indicated, the practise of systematic torture. Furthermore, the draft Article provided that the decision to initiate an inquiry should be made on the basis of all relevant information available to the Committee, including any explanations provided by the State party concerned. It also gave the implementation organ the option of transmitting its comments or suggestions to the State party; and specified that all proceedings under the Article were to be confidential. The revision also, without stated explanation, removed the requirement that the information received be 'reliably attested', an issue that would resurface under slightly different language in the next Working Group discussion.²⁸

17 Some members favoured empowering the Committee by increasing its ability to analyse the information independently in order to discern whether a systematic practice of torture was taking place and, if so, whether it warranted an inquiry. Amendments to this effect were presented and accepted.²⁹ The Working Group also replaced 'explanations' in paragraph 2 with a more neutral term; included the clause 'when informed of the intended visit' in the last sentence of paragraph 3; and substituted 'does not give its consent' for 'refuses to give its consent'.

18 The Working Group continued its discussion in 1983 and, as a basis for its deliberations, used the Chairman's four draft Articles on implementation³⁰ which had been reformulated to incorporate the changes made to Article 20 adopted at the 1982 session.³¹ First, the Working Group rejected the Ukrainian proposal to make the procedure apply only to States parties that had announced their recognition of the Committee's status.³² However, because many delegations deemed it important to include a requirement of reliability for the information or source, paragraph 1 was redrafted so that the new text required information to contain 'reliable indications that torture was being systematically practised'.³³ Paragraph 2 was amended to highlight the importance of observations submitted by the State party. Further, in order to appease several delegations that wanted the Committee to seek cooperation with the State party in order to initiate the inquiry, paragraph 3 was redrafted to read: 'If an enquiry is made . . . the Committee shall seek the co-operation of the State party concerned. In agreement with that State party, such an enquiry may include a visit to its territory.'³⁴

19 Debate ensued as to whether the Committee should submit the final report to the State party. Some felt that it should, whereas others noted that the confidentiality of some sources might be compromised. The delegations agreed that the State party had, at least, a right to know the Committee's findings as a result of the inquiry. Consequently, the new version of paragraph 4 referred explicitly to the Committee's findings and made it mandatory for them to be transmitted to the State party.³⁵ The 1982 draft had not required the Committee to transmit anything at all; it had merely given the Committee the option of transmitting comments or suggestions, without mention of the findings themselves.

20 While there was consensus within the Working Group as to confidentiality during the proceedings, no conclusions were reached at this stage as to whether confidentiality need be maintained once the inquiry had been completed. The Working Group decided to give the Committee the option of publicizing a summary of the results and added the following provision to paragraph 5: 'After such proceedings have been completed with regard to an enquiry made in accordance with paragraph 2, the Committee may, at its discretion, decide to include a summary account of the results of the proceedings in its annual report . . .'³⁶

21 At this phase, the Working Group did not reach a decision on whether Article 20 and other implementation procedures should be optional or mandatory. Most delegations supported the mandatory nature of the inquiry procedure and all other implementation procedures, willing to cede the optional character only in the case of individual complaint procedures. Some were adamant that without strong implementation procedures, the Convention would lose its effectiveness. Making implementation optional, they said, was tantamount to allowing a qualified commitment to the struggle against torture. In contrast, some delegations, including the USSR, felt that mandatory implementation procedures would make it difficult for the Convention to gather worldwide support. The Soviets added that such procedures were unnecessary for States already bound by similar procedures under the CCPR. They favoured removing those procedures from the draft Convention and placing them in an optional protocol. The Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic proposed a compromise in which the implementation provisions were retained within the draft Convention, but Articles 17, 19, and 20 were amended so as to make them binding only on States parties that expressly accepted their competence. Meanwhile, some delegations were still not ready to make a decision.

22 This discussion, on what would prove to be the most enduring and contentious of debates, continued at the 1984 Working Group session. There, the USSR and Ukraine withdrew demands that all implementation procedures be optional, but continued to object to a mandatory Article 20 inquiry procedure.³⁷ The German Democratic Republic supported the USSR's position. Most delegations, however, remained strongly in favour of keeping Article 20 mandatory, and saw its existence as essential to implementation and progress in the realm of human rights treaties. Making it optional, they stated, would seriously weaken its value. They argued that sufficient safeguards had already been built into the procedure. These safeguards included requirements that there be constant cooperation between States parties and the Committee; that States must give their consent for visits; and that high standards are abided by for Committee membership as set out in Article 17. They noted further that the ILO already used such a procedure without encountering any problems. No consensus was reached at this stage and Article 20 was not adopted.

23 By the time the Working Group presented its text to the Human Rights Commission in February 1984, it had reached consensus on all articles except Article 20 and paragraphs 3 and 4 of Article 19.³⁸ Jan Herman Burgers, the Chairman-Rapporteur of the Working Group, handed over to the Commission the task of finalizing the text.

24 At the Commission's thirty-second meeting, Canada, the USA, and the Federal Republic of Germany expressed their opinion that Article 20 should be mandatory. Canada went as far as to say that a Convention without such a feature would not be worth signing. It noted that only a minority of delegations had held out for optionality, and even accused a few delegations of seeking to tie the Committee's hands. The USA said that the only two States blocking consensus on the remaining articles were the USSR and the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic.³⁹ The German Democratic Republic, however, voiced its own serious objections to what it saw as the broad scope of procedures under Articles 19 and 20, which it considered an infringement on State sovereignty.

to object. It claimed that the inquiry procedure was unnecessary given that the systematic practice of torture, because of its widespread nature, was easily identifiable, and that specific details could already be obtained through the Commission's other procedures. It further commented that the inquiry procedure would allow States, individuals, or NGOs to vilify publicly other States parties. This would be an unacceptable situation given that the 'reliable indications' provided for by Article 20(1) could easily prove to be unreliable, and thus such accusations would not only be unfounded, but would also constitute an unjustified interference in domestic affairs. It further argued for the importance of producing a Convention that could gather a broad consensus in order to ensure that States parties which did not ratify it would feel sufficiently politically isolated. Finally, the Soviets countered the claim made by the USA that it and the Ukraine were the only two delegations opposing the inquiry procedure. Claiming that other delegations had mischaracterized the division on this article, the USSR said that in fact, only Western States had supported the procedure, whereas many other States had objected. Unlike the other delegations, the USSR favoured resubmitting the draft to the Working Group, rather than passing it on to the General Assembly. Bulgaria expressed the view that, although it was not yet ready to reach a final decision, it supported the USSR and Ukrainian proposals. Senegal noted that it was an example of a non-Western State that fully supported a mandatory Article 20 procedure.

26 Several NGOs expressed their views on the draft Convention. The International Commission of Jurists, in particular, noted that it attached the greatest importance to Article 20, observing that the USSR, because it accepted Resolution 1503, had no reason to reject the procedures provided for by the Article in question.

27 Rather than voting on Articles 19 and 20, or renewing the mandate of the Working Group so that it could continue debating the Articles, the Commission sent the draft Convention as it stood to the General Assembly, with the unresolved language issues in square brackets.⁴¹ The Working Group was given authority to do so by the adoption of a resolution that was based on consultations with delegations from different geographic regions and was introduced by Finland and the Netherlands. After seven years, it was clear that many delegations were eager for the adoption of a final draft. Furthermore, the sponsors were aware that many members of the Commission had not participated in the Working Group and were not closely familiar with the concerns involved in the discussion.

28 Pursuant to the above resolution, the Commission also transmitted the report of the Working Group on the draft Convention, as well as the summary records of the Commission's debate on the item during its fortieth session, to the General Assembly.⁴² Additionally, the Secretary-General invited all States to communicate to the Secretary-General their comments on the draft Convention.⁴³ Australia, Austria, Belgium, Burundi, Canada, Cyprus, Denmark, France, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, the UK, the USA, and Venezuela expressed their support for adopting the text of Article 20 as drafted, which ensured that the inquiry procedure remained mandatory.⁴⁴ Finland, New Zealand, Panama, and the Syrian

Arab Republic expressed overall support or acceptance of the text but did not specifically mention Article 20 or the other implementation procedures.⁴⁵ Hungary, Thailand, and Yugoslavia, however, objected to the text of draft Article 20 and/or to mandatory implementation mechanisms.⁴⁶

29 At the thirty-ninth session of the General Assembly in September 1984, the Netherlands chaired several meetings in an attempt to reach a consensus on Articles 19 and 20.⁴⁷ These meetings revealed that Western and Latin American States, along with some Asian and African States, supported the language of these Articles as it stood. The USSR and other Eastern European States were willing to adopt the Convention, but only if the procedures in question were made optional. Meanwhile, other African and Asian States questioned the Article 20 inquiry procedure and some favoured its deletion from the Convention altogether. Many States were not prepared to take a strong stand either way. Support for an expedited adoption of the Convention was not as robust among the general membership as it had been among the members of the Commission on Human Rights. Objections were raised with regard to other Articles of the Convention, and some States even favoured a return to the drafting table. These considerations led Argentina, the Netherlands and Sweden to propose the immediate adoption of the Convention.⁴⁸

30 At the fifty-sixth meeting of the General Assembly on 3 December 1984, after the Ukraine had again proposed, unsuccessfully, that paragraph 1 of Article 20 include a requirement that a State party make a declaration recognizing the competence of the Committee to make inquiries, the Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic proposed a compromise. It suggested adding an Article 28 that would allow a State party to declare that it did not recognize the competence of the Committee under Article 20.⁴⁹ Although the Byelorussian language would present a victory for States seeking a form of optionality, it nevertheless raised the political cost of opting out by requiring a State party to reserve explicitly out of the procedure, unlike previous proposals, which would have allowed States to ratify the Convention fully without acceding to the inquiry competence.

31 In the end, the draft sponsors chose to seek consensus rather than pursue further confrontation.⁵⁰ The draft as it stood would have resulted in several negative votes among the Soviet bloc and many abstentions from African and Asian States. This could have seriously weakened the chances for wide adherence to the Convention. Alternatively, there might have been no conclusive vote at all, which would have led to the reopening of debate and, probably, a watered-down Convention. Finding unacceptable many of the other demands placed by the Soviet Union and other Eastern States, the sponsors chose to compromise on Article 20, in consideration also of the misgivings expressed by several African and Asian States.

32 At the General Assembly's sixtieth meeting, then, the Netherlands provided an oral revision of Article 20.⁵¹ The new draft shifted the requirement of reliability to the information received by the Committee, rather than to the indications of systematic torture. It proposed, instead, that those indications be well-founded. It also made clear that the Committee's invitation to the State party to submit observations was for the purpose and in the service of cooperating with the State party in the examination of information. With regard to confidentiality, the new draft provided that the Committee would include the summary account after consultations with the State party concerned, rather than at its own discretion. Furthermore, it specified that even though absolute confidentiality is provided for only in the procedures detailed in paragraphs 1 to 4, the cooperation of the State party should be sought at all stages of the procedure; seeming to include, by implication, the publication of the summary as well. Perhaps most significantly, the sponsors accepted the Byelorussian amendment, thus adding an article that allowed States parties to opt out of Article 20.⁵²

33 On 10 December, the Soviet bloc delegations withdrew their remaining amendments, and the Third Committee of the General Assembly adopted the revised draft resolution without a vote.⁵³

3. Issues of Interpretation

34 The procedure is governed by Article 20 and Rules 75 to 90. According to Article 20 the CAT Committee may initiate an inquiry into the systematic practice of torture in a State party. It cannot be used to address individual cases of torture, and it applies only to the practice of torture, not cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

35 As noted above, this provision proved to be one of the most controversial one during the drafting history. Its adoption was not only contested during the drafting history of the Convention but also in the context of the adoption of the Rules of Procedures (RoP). In contrast to the other parts, the Committee waited to consider the provisions of the RoP concerning the inquiry procedure until its second session due to the complex, sensitive, and novel nature of such procedure.⁵⁴ The draft Rules were based on the provisions of the Convention and took into account relevant procedures existing elsewhere within the UN system.⁵⁵

36 The inquiry procedure has four main characteristics. First, it is optional. According to Article 20 read in conjunction with Article 28, States parties may decide to 'opt out', ie to not accept the competence of the CAT Committee to conduct an inquiry procedure.⁵⁶ Second, it is of a reactive nature, ie it can be undertaken by the Committee only after it has received reliable information about systematic practices of torture in the territory of a State party and for the purpose of investigating these allegations. The Committee cannot conduct an inquiry procedure in order to prevent torture, like the monitoring bodies created under the Optional Protocol to the CAT, ie the Subcommittee on Prevention of Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (SPT) and the National Preventive Mechanisms (NPMs). Third, it is confidential. In accordance with Article 20 and Rules 78 and 79, all documents and proceedings of the Committee relating to its functions are confidential, similarly to all meetings concerning Article 20 which are closed. The Committee may in principle lift the principle of confidentiality and decide to publish the results of the proceedings, but, as will be explained more in detailed below, it can do so only at the very end of the procedure and under specific circumstances. Finally, the procedure under Article 20 is based on the principle of cooperation. This is well exemplified by the fact that the inquiry procedure is designed in such a way so as to require the consultation of the State party concerned at every single stage, including the country visit itself, which can be conducted only with the previous consent of the State party.

37 As illustrated in Table 1, to date the Committee has concluded ten inquiries on nine countries (twice on Egypt). All but three States (Brazil, Mexico, Nepal) have decided to keep the reports of the inquiry confidential.

⁵⁷ Due to the political situation of the State party, the Committee had decided to postpone the examination of the information received before it, which was resumed in May 2000. See CAT, 'Summary Account of the Results of the Proceedings Concerning the Inquiry on Serbia and Montenegro' (2004) UN Doc A/59/44, para 156.

38 An inquiry procedure can be divided into four main phases involving: the evaluation of sources of information; the decision to undertake the inquiry; conducting the inquiry, and; finally, the adoption and publication of the findings of the inquiry. Strictly speaking, the Committee seems to consider that the procedure starts with the examination of the information brought before it and ends with the transmission of the findings to the State party.⁵⁸ In practice, however, after the transmission of the report to the State, there are still important steps to be considered, including the publication of the summary account or the full report on the inquiry, as well as follow-up activities. As shown in Table 1, measured from the date in which the Committee received the relevant information to the publication of its findings, the inquiry procedures conducted thus far lasted between three and six years. The longest inquiries (Peru, Serbia and Montenegro, Nepal) took over six years to complete.⁵⁹ Several encompassed one, sometimes two changes in Government.⁶⁰

39 In the following, this article will illustrate the key aspects of the procedure and provide an analysis of the inquiries so far concluded by the Committee.

3.1 Meaning of ‘systematic practise of torture’

40 The fundamental question underlying the inquiry procedure is whether torture is systematically practised in a State party. Such a question is usually considered twice by the Committee. The first assessment is done at the very beginning of the procedure, during the preliminary consideration conducted by the Committee in order to decide whether the information provided to it is reliable and contains well-founded indications that torture is being systematically practised. The second assessment is done in the final stage of the procedure, ie after the inquiry has been carried out by a delegation of the Committee.

41 As the procedure is confidential and the only information available are those published after the inquiry has been concluded, there are very few details on what standards the Committee applies when assessing whether or not torture might be practised systematically. However, more information is available on the assessment conducted in the final stage of the procedure which is made public in the summary account.

42 The Committee defined for the first time the concept of ‘systematic practice of torture’ in its first summary account of the results of the proceedings concerning the inquiry on Turkey in November 1993. The definition provides as follows:

⁵⁸ The Committee has not always been consistent in this regard, in several cases, the dates of start and end of the procedure are not spelled out (eg see A/59/44 (n 57); CAT, ‘Report on Brazil Produced by the Committee Under Article 20 of the Convention and Reply from the Government of Brazil’ (2009) UN Doc CAT/C/39/2; CAT, ‘Report on Nepal Adopted by the Committee Against Torture Under Article 20 of the Convention and Comments and Observations by the State Party’ (2012) UN Doc A/67/44, Annex XIII; CAT, ‘Summary Account of the Results of the Proceedings Concerning the Inquiry on Egypt’ (2017) UN Doc A/72/44, para 58). Even when dates are spelled out, the practice of the Committee seems to vary: as start date, the Committee has used both the date in which it decided to undertake an inquiry (eg CAT, ‘Summary Account of the Results of the Proceedings Concerning the Inquiry on Sri Lanka’ (2002) UN Doc A/57/44, para 124); and the date in which it started the examination of the information (eg CAT, ‘Summary Account of the Results of the Proceedings Concerning the Inquiry on Egypt’ UN Doc A/51/44, para 182). Similarly, as end date of the inquiry, the Committee has generally used the date in which it adopts the report and transmits the findings to the State party, but also referred to the publication date in at least one case (eg A/57/44 (58) para 124).

⁵⁹ CAT, ‘Summary Account of the Results of the Proceedings Concerning the Inquiry on Peru’ (2001) UN Doc A/56/44; A/59/44 (n 57) paras 156, 240; A/67/44, Annex XIII (n 58).

⁶⁰ See eg CAT, ‘Summary Account of the Results of the Proceedings Concerning the Inquiry on Turkey’ (1993) UN Doc A/48/44/Add.1, para 11; A/56/44 (n 59) paras 2–3; CAT, ‘Report on Mexico Produced by the Committee Under Article 20 of the Convention and Reply from the Government of Mexico’ (2003) UN Doc CAT/C/75, para 15.

The Committee considers that torture is practised systematically when it is apparent that the torture cases reported have not occurred fortuitously in a particular place or at a particular time, but are seen to be habitual, widespread and deliberate in at least a considerable part of the territory of the country in question. Torture may in fact be of a systematic character without resulting from the direct intention of a Government. It may be the consequence of factors which the Government has difficulty in controlling, and its existence may indicate a discrepancy between policy as determined by the central Government and its implementation by the local administration. Inadequate legislation which in practice allows room for the use of torture may also add to the systematic nature of this practice.⁶¹

43 This definition was then confirmed in all subsequent inquiry procedures, ie all summary accounts of later inquiries⁶² and full reports on Mexico,⁶³ Brazil,⁶⁴ and Nepal.⁶⁵

44 When assessing whether torture is practised in a habitual manner, the Committee has so far considered several elements, including the number of torture allegations and whether such allegations come from different, and reliable⁶⁶ and consistent sources.⁶⁷ Information is considered reliable if it is coming from sources who have proved to be so in connection with other activities of the Committee.⁶⁸ Allegations are considered consistent when they described in the same way the circumstances in which the cases arose, the purpose of the torture, the methods employed, and the places where torture is practised and by whom. As for the required number of torture allegations, in its first inquiry the Committee clarified that:

... even though only a small number of torture cases can be proved with absolute certainty, the copious testimony gathered is so consistent in its description of torture techniques and the places and circumstances in which torture is perpetrated that the existence of systematic torture in Turkey cannot be denied.⁶⁹

45 In fact, considering that torture is usually practised clandestinely and is routinely denied by Governments, it is difficult to prove beyond reasonable doubt, even after two or three weeks of intensive fact-finding in the country concerned, that the practise of it is 'habitual, widespread and deliberate in at least a considerable part of the territory of the country in question'. Therefore, when there are different, reliable, and consistent sources showing that torture is systematically practised, the Committee does in practice consider that the requirement of 'habitual torture' is met, despite the fact that the number of instances of torture that can be proved with absolute certainty is not very high. Furthermore, a State party may be found to practise torture systematically despite the fact that there has been a decrease in the number of torture allegations.⁷⁰ This is not always the case. In the inquiry procedure on Serbia and Montenegro, in fact, the Committee concluded that torture had been systematically practised in Serbia only prior to October

2000, but no longer so after that date due to the fact that, under the new political regime, the incidents of torture appeared to have dropped considerably and torture was, thus, no longer systematic. Nonetheless, it was clear that cases of torture continued to occur, particularly in police stations, and that reforms of the police and the judiciary had yet to demonstrate their full effectiveness in preventing and punishing the practice.⁷¹

46 Secondly, according to the Committee's definition in order to be systematic torture must be 'widespread'. In this regard, it was clarified that it is not necessary that such practice occurs in all parts of a country.⁷² On the other hand, torture must be widespread and habitual in at least a considerable part of the territory of the country in question. In the inquiry on Serbia and Montenegro, systematic torture was only found explicitly in the Republic of Serbia, not in Montenegro. Thus, the summary account does not contain any clear finding on the situation in Montenegro before or after October 2000.⁷³

47 Thirdly, systematic torture must also be 'deliberate at least in a considerable part of the country' though it does not have to result from the 'direct intention of the Government'. The comparison of the ten inquiries concluded so far has showed that an explicit Government policy instructing the intelligence or law enforcement bodies to use torture for the purpose of extracting information or confessions is not required by the Committee for arriving at the conclusion that torture is practiced systematically in a given country. However, the Committee has not been always very consistent in this regard. For example, in the inquiry on Sri Lanka, despite having in the initial assessment 'reaffirmed that the information available to it provided well-founded indications that torture was being systematically practised in Sri Lanka',⁷⁴ the Committee finally concluded that torture was not systematic. In so doing, it took into particular consideration the fact that the torture incidents had taken place 'mainly in connection with the internal conflict' but that further developments, particularly the ceasefire agreement on 23 February 2002 monitored by an international monitoring mission, effectively removed the conditions which had been identified by the Committee as a major cause for the prevalence of torture and other forms of ill-treatment connected.⁷⁵ If one takes into account that, according to the Committee's working definition, torture may in fact be of a systematic character without resulting from the direct intention of the Government and it may be the consequence of factors which the Government has difficulty in controlling, this conclusion indicates a comparatively high standard for the systematic character of torture from the point of Governments. This particular aspect of the Committee's definition was criticized by Brazil. More specifically, Brazil argued that the Committee had attached a special meaning to the expression of 'systematic torture' without it reflecting either the intention of the States parties or the common meaning normally attached to the term 'systematic' in international human rights, humanitarian, or criminal law.⁷⁶ According to Brazil, to be regarded as systematic a violation would have to be carried out in 'a deliberate and planned manner' and 'be committed according to a certain pattern, under an international plan or policy, albeit not explicitly admitted'. On the basis of this interpretation, Brazil disagreed with the Committee's opinion that torture was systematically practised, as it denied the existence of any deliberate plan or policy for the practice of torture in the country.⁷⁷

48 A further element explicitly recalled in the above mentioned definition of systematic torture is the existence of 'inadequate legislation which in practice allows room for the use of torture [which] may also add to the systematic nature of this practice'. In this regard, it shall be noted that in its last two inquiry procedures (Nepal and Lebanon) when assessing the notion of systematic torture the Committee has explicitly recalled its General Comment No 2 and the obligation of States to take effective legislative, administrative, judicial, and any other appropriate measures to prevent torture according to Article 2 CAT. In the inquiry on Nepal, for example, the Committee found that the failure to prosecute those responsible for acts of torture and to end the practices of falsification of registers, incommunicado detention, and disrespect for fundamental legal safeguards had contributed to the continuing habitual, widespread, and deliberate practise of torture in Nepal.⁷⁸ Similar conclusions were reached in the inquiry on Lebanon.⁷⁹ In the case of Nepal, the Committee further concluded that such inadequacies were to be regarded as 'deliberate'⁸⁰ and that the 'actions and omissions ... amount[ed] to more than a casual failure to act'⁸¹ but demonstrated that 'the authorities not only fail to refute well-founded allegations but appear to acquiesce in the policy that shields and further encourages these actions, in contravention to the requirements of the Convention.'⁸² In fact, if it is apparent from information provided by reliable sources that torture is widespread, and if at least some of these cases are corroborated during the fact-finding mission by testimonies from victims, witnesses, and/or Government officials, first-hand impressions of particularly harsh prison conditions, an analysis of inadequate legislation, and other means of taking evidence, such as forensic examinations, the Committee may find a systematic practise of torture by Government acquiescence or lack of adequate control.

49 The Committee also stressed that the existence of specific legislation aimed at combating terrorism and other particularly serious offences, which undermined the rights of detained persons and made them particularly vulnerable to torture, proved that 'torture has been occurring with the authorities' acquiescence'. In addition, it held that the deplorable conditions of detention amounted to CIDT (no electricity, no drinking water, extremely cold temperatures at a height of more than 4,500 metres above sea level without heating, etc.) and to torture (long period of detention of arrested persons and sensorial deprivation and almost total prohibition of communication) and underlined its systematic practise.⁸³

50 Finally, although not explicitly mentioned in the definition, other factors may influence the Committee's assessment. For example, the refusal to allow a fact-finding mission to its territory, as in the case of Egypt and Nepal, does not shield the respective Government from any finding of systematic torture, and may even nurture the suspicion that the Government wishes to hide such practice. On the other hand, full cooperation by the Government, as in the case of Sri Lanka, may lead the Committee to conclude that the practice of torture, although widespread, is not systematic. Similarly, a change of Government and the acceptance of the new Government that torture was systematic under the previous regime might also be a factor leading to such conclusion. In the case of Serbia and Montenegro, the Committee even made a clear distinction between systematic practice of torture in Serbia under the Milosevic regime and individual cases occurring under the Government of President Kostunica, which were no longer considered as systematic.

51 As illustrated in Table 1, out of the ten inquiry procedures conducted thus far, the Committee found ‘systematic torture’ in all cases but one, namely Sri Lanka.

3.2 Article 20(1): Evaluation of Sources of Information

52 The first phase, described in Article 20(1), is triggered by the receipt of information alleging the systematic practise of torture in a State party. The Secretary-General is then tasked to forward to the Committee any ‘information which is, or appears to be, submitted for the Committee’s consideration under article 20, paragraph 1, of the Convention’ (Rule 75). Although this Rule empowers the Secretariat to exercise some screening ultimately the decision on whether information is reliable and well-founded remains with the Committee.⁸⁴

53 The inquiry procedure being optional, only information concerning States parties which are bound by the inquiry procedure can be received, ie States parties that have not made a reservation under Article 28 or that have subsequently withdrawn their initial reservation. Moreover, contrary to Article 22, there is no requirement to exhaust domestic remedies before an inquiry procedure can be started.⁸⁵

54 At this point, the Committee conducts a preliminary consideration of the information received. The preliminary consideration normally concerns two aspects, namely whether the information is ‘reliable’ and whether it contains ‘well founded indications that torture, as defined in article 1 of the Convention, is being systematically practiced in the territory of the State party concerned’ (Rule 81). Though Article 20 foresees the designation of members only once the decision to undertake the inquiry is already warranted, in certain cases, the Committee has designated one or more members already at the first stages of the procedure, either in order to analyse the information provided to it⁸⁶ or, as will be seen below, in order to verify the responses provided by the States parties.

55 In so far as the information is ‘reliable’ and ‘well-founded’, the Committee may initiate an inquiry ex officio, ie on its own initiative, without it being based on a specific complaint of a victim, an NGO, or a State party. In practice, however, most inquiries concluded thus far have been based on information received from NGOs, such as AI, HRW, and national organizations.⁸⁷ The inquiry procedure, therefore, resembles to some extent an actio popularis by NGOs. Nevertheless, the procedure is clearly of a reactive nature, and it can be undertaken only after the Committee has received information about systematic practices of torture in the territory of a State party and for the purpose of investigating these allegations; and not in order to prevent torture, as do other monitoring bodies.

3.2.1 Meaning of 'reliable information'

56 According to Rule 81(1), when necessary, the Committee 'may' ascertain the reliability of the information and its source(s) through the Secretary-General. It may also obtain additional relevant information to substantiate the facts of the situation. Rule 81's language suggests that these two particular steps are discretionary.

57 The drafting history of the RoP shows that Rule 81 was adopted only after significant debate over the quality of information needed to trigger an Article 20 procedure.⁸⁸ In the end, the Committee concluded that no additional proof or evidence of any kind should be required, because the objective of an Article 20 inquiry was to gather such proof or evidence. At this stage, it decided that the Committee should simply determine in a two-step process whether the information is reliable and the indications well-founded. No definition of reliability was included because the assessment should be made on a case-by-case basis.

58 Neither the Convention nor the Committee's RoP, therefore, place any restrictions on the type of source the information should come from. In principle, the Committee could initiate an inquiry based on media reports, as feared by States such as the USSR and India during the drafting period.⁸⁹ In practice, allegations of systematic torture have mostly come from NGOs. Six of the ten Committee's concluded inquiries were initiated in response to information received from NGOs with headquarters in New York, London, or Geneva,⁹⁰ whereas three began as a response to NGOs based in the State party being investigated.⁹¹ Most recently, the Committee has shown a willingness to be proactive in initiating an Article 20 procedure by not waiting to receive a specific request before undertaking an assessment.⁹² For example, in its inquiry procedure against Nepal, the Committee seems to have first taken into account its concluding observations, where it had inter alia expressed 'serious concerns about allegations of widespread use of torture'.⁹³

59 In order to assess the reliability of the 'sources', the CAT Committee has taken into account whether they have proved to be reliable in connection with other activities of the Committee.⁹⁴ To this end, it may also decide to examine 'additional information'. To date, the Committee has considered information obtained from the State party, other international and local NGOs, information from UN officials and bodies, such as for example the Special Rapporteur on Torture (SRT), the Office of the High Commissioner of Human Rights (OHCHR), the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC), the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances (WGEID), as well as from the ACmHRP.⁹⁵ In some cases, the CAT Committee has even consulted the State party directly regarding its observations on the source's reliability.⁹⁶ In contrast, the CAT Committee's summary report to the inquiries into Sri Lanka and Brazil suggest that in those cases no corroboration of the original sources was required before deciding that the information provided to it was reliable.⁹⁷

3.2.2 Meaning of 'well-founded indications'

60 In addition to the reliability of the information, during this initial assessment, the Committee shall determine whether it contains indications of a systematic practice of torture that are 'well-founded'. Considering that the objective of this inquiry is to gather preliminary proof or evidence of torture, it is usually not at this stage that the Committee seeks or evaluates additional evidence—especially before it invites the Government directly concerned to cooperate under Article 20(1).⁹⁸ It is not known in how many of the cases the information received was insufficient to initiate a further inquiry, either because the source was deemed unreliable or because the Committee had obtained other information indicating that the practise of torture was not systematic. What is known, however, is that reliable information submitted by at least three NGOs did not lead to an inquiry.⁹⁹ Ultimately, given that this stage of the proceedings remains confidential, it is not possible to know precisely which standards the Committee applies in assessing whether or not torture might be practised systematically. However, the standards applied by the Committee in the adoption of the findings are clearer and will be analysed below.

3.3 Article 20(2): Decision to Undertake an Inquiry

61 If the Committee determines that the information meets the initial threshold set out by Article 20(1), then it must proceed to the second phase of the inquiry by inviting the State party to cooperate in its examination of the information and to submit observations with regard to that information (Rule 82(1)). To avoid undue delay, the Committee shall indicate a time limit for the submissions of observations by the State party concerned (Rule 82(2)). In examining the information received, it must take into account any observations submitted by the State party, as well as any other relevant information available to it (Rule 82(3)). Finally, if it deems it appropriate, it may decide to obtain additional information from the State party, governmental bodies, NGOs, or individuals (Rule 82(4)).

62 In practice, the Committee has generally requested that States parties respond within two to four months at this phase.¹⁰⁰ Turkey, Sri Lanka, Mexico, Serbia and Montenegro, and Lebanon responded either before the deadline given, or at least in time for the Committee to consider its observations during its next session.¹⁰¹ Egypt, Peru, and Nepal were late with their responses and significantly delayed the process.¹⁰² Brazil did not submit any reply at this stage.¹⁰³ The content of the observations varied among States. While some simply challenged the Committee's competence to make such an inquiry and refused to cooperate in the process,¹⁰⁴ others supplied the members with extensive information, including statistics, on legislation and other measures taken by authorities to fight torture, as well as contested that the information provided met the required standards, either because they were not reliable or because they did not indicate that torture was 'systematic'.¹⁰⁵

63 With Turkey, Egypt, Peru, and Mexico, the Committee at this stage requested or considered additional information from NGOs, a regional human rights body, and the respective States.¹⁰⁶ In each of these cases, the Committee also assigned two or three of its members to analyse all additional information presented by the Government and to submit proposals for further action to the Committee.¹⁰⁷

64 If the Committee deems that the response provided by the State party is not satisfactory, it decides to undertake the confidential inquiry. This decision of the Committee is a discretionary one.¹⁰⁸ At this point, the Committee may designate one or more of its members to conduct the inquiry and to report urgently to the Committee (Article 20(2) and Rule 84(1)). In practice, however, in most cases members had already been designated at an earlier stage in the proceedings, and those initial members have been retained to conduct the inquiry, unless they were unable to continue their participation.¹⁰⁹ Only in its Sri Lanka proceedings did the Committee wait to designate members until after its decision to undertake an inquiry.¹¹⁰ The inquiry against Nepal marked the first time in which a female member was designated to conduct an Article 20 inquiry.¹¹¹ As of 2011, the Rule 79 regulating meetings also specifies that a member shall neither take part in nor be present at any proceedings under Article 20 of the Convention if he/she is a national of the State party concerned, is employed by that State, or if any other conflict of interest is present.¹¹²

3.4 Article 20(3): Conducting the 'inquiry'

3.4.1 Meaning of the Word 'inquiry'

65 Once the Committee has decided to initiate an inquiry, the procedure enters into its third stage, the inquiry itself. Although the inquiry procedure consists of several steps, the term 'inquiry' in Article 20(2), strictly speaking, only applies to the investigations carried out by a delegation of the Committee. Sometimes, the Committee may, at an early stage, assign some members, or even an informal working group, to the task of analysing the information and observations supplied by the sources and the Government respectively. However, the inquiry only starts officially when the Committee makes the decision, in accordance with Article 20(2) and Rule 84, and informs the Government accordingly.

66 The modalities of the inquiry are set by the Committee as it deems appropriate, and the working methods are agreed to by the designated members in conformity with the Convention and the RoP (Rule 85(2)–(3)). As with all documents and proceedings of the Committee related to its functions under this Article, the inquiry is confidential (Rule 85(4)).

67 The members of the Committee entrusted with the inquiry resort to the usual methods of independent fact-finding based on the principle audiatur et altera pars.¹¹³ This means that they shall work in close cooperation with the Government concerned and take all reliable written and oral information into account (Rule 85). The Committee may request the State party to designate an accredited representative to meet with the designated members, to provide its members with information they or the State party consider useful for confirming related facts, and to indicate any other form of cooperation that will facilitate the conduct of the inquiry (Rule 85). In practice, there have been meetings with State representatives in almost all the inquiries, often summoned at the request of the State party.¹¹⁴ These representatives have included delegates from the country's mission in Geneva as well as Government officials sent from the State's capital.¹¹⁵

3.4.2 The Country Visit to the State Party

68 The most important part of the inquiry is a 'visiting mission' to the country concerned, which includes meetings with high Government officials, victims, witnesses, NGOs, and other sources of information, inspections of detention facilities and private interviews with detainees, inspections of prison registers and similar documents, etc. (Rule 86). If the Committee finds it necessary to visit the State party's territory, it shall request the agreement of the State party and shall inform it of its wishes with regard to the timing of the mission and the facilities required to permit the members to perform their task (Article 20(3), Rule 86). This means that visits can be conducted only with the previous consent of State party. In practice, the Committee has considered it necessary to visit all States under inquiry and has usually requested such a visit immediately after deciding to undertake the inquiry.¹¹⁶

69 None of the governments subject to an inquiry procedure completely denied any cooperation with the Committee's delegation, but two refused to allow a visit to their territory, namely Egypt and Nepal.¹¹⁷ Despite denying the visit, the Committee met an Egyptian delegation in Geneva during the inquiry phase, whose comments and

Egypt was the sole exception, in which the Committee decided to undertake the inquiry during its tenth session (19–30 April 1993), but waited until after the designated members had presented a progress report at its eleventh session (8–19 November 1993), before requesting a visit. See A/51/44 (n 58) paras 186–87.

¹¹⁷ For Egypt see A/51/44 (n 58) paras 187, 195; A/72/44 (n 58) para 61; for Nepal see A/67/44, Annex XIII (n 58).

observations were then included in the Committee's findings.¹¹⁸ Nepal, instead, did not provide any information during this phase but submitted comments with regard to the Committee's decision to initiate the procedure under Article 20 and the final report and also authorized the publication of the full report.¹¹⁹

Consequently, the non-authorization of the in situ visit does not stop the Committee from continuing its inquiry based on the Governments' replies and other sources of information.¹²⁰

70 As shown in Table 1 above, the Committee's visits have ranged in length from eleven to thirty days.¹²¹ The geographic breadth covered by the designated Committee members during these visits has varied significantly. While members visited only two provinces in Turkey in 1992, the 2001 delegation to Mexico visited at least ten cities in five states and federal districts.¹²² The criteria for selecting regions are not explicitly provided in the Committee's publications. In the case of the Sri Lanka inquiry, however, the Committee did not visit the regions from which the worst or most numerous allegations of torture had been received. This omission was due to security reasons related to the ongoing civil conflict, but the Committee did not specify whether that security determination was made by the Committee or the Sri Lankan Government.¹²³

71 Although the Committee has never explicitly articulated a set of general standards to which a State must consent before it conducts a visit, on several occasions the Committee laid out the conditions it required of specific governments. A reference to these standards is done for the first time in the Committee's report to Mexico.¹²⁴ These included, for example, access to any place where there might be persons deprived of liberty; guaranteed access in all such places to all premises, including any written document it might determine useful to consult, such as detainee registers; the possibility of private conversations with anybody, including detainees and officials of detention centres, whom they wished to interview; and the possibility of returning to places of detention already visited.¹²⁵ In subsequent inquiries the Committee also specifically mentioned assurances of non-reprisals, appropriate security arrangements, and same privileges and immunity for all missions' members and assisting personnel.¹²⁶

72 In practice, Committee members have generally examined prisons and pre-trial detention centres. Most missions have also made sure to include visits to centres run by a variety of different public agencies, such as justice, interior, and defence ministries, including for example penitentiaries for women,¹²⁷ juveniles,¹²⁸ and administrative detention centres for irregular migrants and centres for social rehabilitation.¹²⁹ No report mentions visits or allegations related to mentally ill persons or persons with disabilities.

3.4.3 Hearings

73 According to Rule 87, the designated members may decide to conduct hearings in connection with the inquiry as they deem appropriate. If such hearings take place during a fact-finding mission, the specific conditions and guarantees shall be established in cooperation with the State party concerned. In particular, the Government shall be requested to ensure that no retaliatory measures are taken against any witnesses, victims, and their families appearing at such a hearing.¹³⁰ Such hearings may also be held outside a fact-finding mission on the spot, for example in Geneva. In practice, the Committee's delegations have not made use of formal hearings, in which witnesses shall be requested to take an oath or make a solemn declaration concerning the veracity of their testimony.

74 Instead the Committee has held interviews with detainees, witnesses, and victims during the visits to the States parties, in an informal setting and conducted in private. The visits have included meetings with high-level officials in the State party's capital (such as presidents, ministers of justice, ministers of foreign affairs, military commanders, high court presidents, attorneys general, chief prosecutors, and police chiefs) as well as lower-level officials in regional centres.¹³¹ Committee members have also met with members of National Human Rights Institutions (NHRIs), representatives of regional bodies, and NGOs.¹³² Finally, all visits have included interviews with alleged victims who were either in detention or had been at one time.¹³³ Alleged victims were selected based on reports from NGOs or other reliable sources stating that they had been tortured, medical and legal records at the places of detention indicating they had arrived with injuries, their recent arrival to detention centres, or simply at random.¹³⁴ The interviews with victims are conducted in private, ie without the presence of any prison officers, or other State party officials and it is for this reason that the Committee has selected, through the Secretariat, its own interpreters, even where that might be difficult (for example, for Tamil or Singhalese during the inquiry in Sri Lanka in 2000).

competence in the medical field or in the treatment of prisoners (Rule 88(1)). These experts may assist the Committee at all stages of the inquiry, and if they are not bound by an oath of office to the UN, they will also be required to solemnly declare that they will perform their duties honestly, faithfully, and impartially, and they will respect the confidentiality of the proceedings (Rule 88(1)–(2)). These persons should be entitled to the same facilities, privileges, and immunities provided to the members of the Committee under Article 23 CAT (Rule 88(3)). In practice, the Committee has not published much information on who accompanies them on these visits. Some summaries do refer specifically to medical experts,¹³⁵ however, and the full Mexico report identifies two members of the Secretariat who took part in the visit.¹³⁶

3.5 Article 20(4): Adoption and Publication of the Findings

3.5.1 Adoption of the Report and Transmission to the State Party

76 Formally, the inquiry terminates with a report of the Committee's delegation, which is examined by the full Committee and transmitted to the Government concerned in accordance with Rule 83, together with any comments or suggestions that the Committee deems appropriate. At this time, the State party is invited to inform the Committee of the action it takes with regard to the findings, suggestions, and recommendations and asked to report on this information within a reasonable time frame (Rule 89).

77 Most States parties have responded to the Committee in about four months, usually in time for the Committee's next session. The sole exceptions were Serbia and Montenegro and Brazil, which took respectively eleven months, and one year and five months to submit their observations to the Committee. The Sri Lanka inquiry, proving again to be an exception, included one additional phase between the visiting members' report and the Committee's adopting a finding. Expressing unanimous satisfaction at the Sri Lankan Government's cooperation, the Committee determined that it would be premature to issue a conclusion upon hearing the designated members' report of their visit, and that more would be gained through continued cooperation with the State party.¹³⁷ To that effect, it sent a letter with preliminary recommendations to the Sri Lankan Government and requested that it submit information on the measures taken to implement them.¹³⁸ Following the receipt of three submissions by Sri Lanka (as well as information by NGOs) over the span of one year, the Committee finally concluded its inquiry and transmitted its findings to the Government.¹³⁹

78 In practice, Committee reports have included a conclusion as to the existence of systematic torture in the State under inquiry as well as recommendations to the State on how to reform its legislation and practice so that it is in compliance with the Convention. Typical recommendations included, for example, creating independent investigation mechanisms,¹⁴⁰ limiting the power of military and national security courts,¹⁴¹ establishing a presidential commission for the strengthening of democratic institutions,¹⁴² providing early access to counsel,¹⁴³ incorporating independent medical experts in the investigation process,¹⁴⁴ and developing a central register for detainees in all parts of the country.¹⁴⁵

3.5.2 Publication of the Findings

79 Once the proceedings have been completed, Rule 84 provides that the Committee may decide to include a summary account of the results of the proceedings in its annual report (Rule 90(1)). However, as Article 20(5) provides for strict confidentiality of all the proceedings in relation to the inquiry procedure, it is only after completion of the proceedings that the Committee is authorized to include a summary account in the annual report. Moreover, in line with the principle of cooperation, before publication, the Committee must consult with the State party and invite it to submit its observations concerning the question of a possible publication within a given time limit (Rule 90(2)). If it decides to include such a summary account, the Committee shall forward its text to the State party concerned (Rule 90(3)).

80 In the past, the Committee has decided that publication of its findings was necessary, even when the States parties vehemently disagreed. The governments of Turkey and Egypt, for example, expressed their belief that publication was unjustified, with Egypt going as far as saying that any such publication would encourage terrorism.¹⁴⁶ The Government of Egypt used this opportunity to put considerable pressure on the Committee to refrain from publication. First, it invoked various principles to underline that there was no justification for publication. Secondly, it stated that ‘the overall repercussions of a publication could prove highly prejudicial not only to Egypt’s relations with the Committee but also to the principles and purposes of the Convention’.¹⁴⁷ Finally, by referring to a recent terrorist attack, the Government of Egypt went even so far as to accuse the Committee of encouraging terrorism.¹⁴⁸ However, the Committee was rather unimpressed by these threats and justified the publication of a summary account as ‘necessary in order to encourage full respect for the provisions of the Convention in Egypt’.¹⁴⁹ Legally speaking, the Committee is authorized by Article 20(5) to publish a summary account even against strong objections by the Government concerned.

81 Neither Article 20 nor the RoP, however, mention the publication of the inquiry’s full report. Nevertheless, an increasing number of States parties has authorized the Committee to publish its report in full. The first Government to authorize the publication of the full report was Mexico,¹⁵⁰ which it was then followed by Brazil and Nepal.¹⁵¹ In the other six cases, the Committee published only summary accounts. Both always incorporate the government’s comments, either interspersed within the text or in a separate section devoted exclusively to them.

82 The summary accounts of the results of the proceedings are published in the annual reports of the Committee. Full reports are instead normally published with a separate UN document number.¹⁵²

3.6 Follow-up under Article 20

83 Neither Article 20 nor the RoP regulate the issue of follow up to the inquiry procedure.¹⁵³ Nonetheless, a Rapporteur on follow-up to Article 20 was appointed for the first time at the thirty-first session in 2003, when the Committee's member Mr Rasmussen was appointed 'to carry out activities aiming at encouraging States parties on which inquiries had been conducted and the results of such inquiries had been published, to take measures to implement the Committee's recommendations'.¹⁵⁴ Besides a short reference in the annual report, however, no other documentation is available on the Rapporteur's mandate or the activities carried out. At its fifty-sixth session in 2015, the Committee adopted internal guidelines on practical modalities and criteria for deciding on follow-up visits to inquiry missions carried out under article 20 of the Convention.¹⁵⁵ Unfortunately these guidelines are not public.

3.7 Reprisals under Article 20

84 In contrast to other human rights treaties, the CAT does not contain a provision addressing expressly the issue of reprisal against individuals or organizations as a consequence for having communicated with the respective monitoring body. However, in setting out the right to complaint under Article 13, the Convention stipulates that 'steps shall be taken to ensure that the complainant and witnesses are protected against all ill-treatment or intimidation as a consequence of his complaint or any evidence given'.¹⁵⁶

85 As with other UN treaty bodies,¹⁵⁷ the CAT Committee has clarified its position on reprisals at its forty-ninth session in 2012 and decided to adopt a mechanism to prevent, monitor, and follow-up cases of reprisals against civil society organizations, human rights defenders, victims, and witnesses that engage and cooperate with the CAT Committee.¹⁵⁸ The issue of reprisals was also addressed in 2012 by the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, who in her report on the strengthening of human rights treaty bodies urged treaty bodies to set up 'mechanisms for action' against reprisals and a 'focal point among its membership to draw attention to such cases'.¹⁵⁹

86 Further to such recommendations, at its fifty-first session, the Committee adopted a statement¹⁶⁰ and established the function of the 'Rapporteur on reprisals' as a focal

¹⁵³ In contrast see Rules 72 and 120 that regulate the follow-up procedure respectively for the reporting and the individual compliant procedures, respectively.

¹⁵⁵ CAT, 'Report of the Committee Against Torture Fifty-fifth Session (27 July–14 August 2015) Fifty-sixth Session (9 November–9 December 2015) Fifty-seventh Session (18 April–13 May 2016)' (2016) UN Doc A/71/44, para 58. It seems that those guidelines have been adopted further to a retreat on the working methods held at the Fifty-second session, where the issue of follow-up to Article 20 was also discussed.

¹⁵⁶ Such an explicit provision is included in OPCAT (Art 15); OP3-CRC (Art 4); OP-ICESCR (Art 13); OP-CEDAW (Art 11). Some treaty bodies have regulated reprisals in their RoPs, ie CESCR; CEDAW; CRC; CRDP; CED. On reprisals under the CAT, see also Arts 13, 19, 22. point. In practice the mandate concerning reprisals in the context of inquiry procedures has been so far always assigned to the same person holding the mandate for reprisals relating to the individual complaints procedure, who is referred to as the ‘Rapporteur for reprisal under Articles 20 and 22’.¹⁶¹

87 Finally, as a clear endorsement of the San José Guidelines, at its fifty-fifth session, the Committee adopted detailed Guidelines on the receipt and handling of allegations of reprisals against individuals and organizations cooperating with the Committee under articles 13, 19, 20, and 22.¹⁶² For reprisals in connection to the inquiry procedure, the Guidelines describe a series of measures to be adopted before the visit, during the visit, and after the visit.

88 Within the measures to be adopted before the visits, the Guidelines mention the inclusion of an explicit ‘clause of non-retaliation’ in the official terms of reference of the visit that are usually sent to the State party concerned;¹⁶³ as well as measures aiming at facilitating the rapid alert of the Committee’s members in case of reprisals.¹⁶⁴ In this last regard, the Guidelines mention the amendment of the standard questionnaire for interviews conducted in the framework of the inquiry procedure so as to include a specific question asking for the consent of the person or group interviewed to establish contact with the Committee through its Secretariat; and the establishment of line of contacts between UN country teams, NHRIs, NGOs, lawyers, and NPMs and the Secretariat.

89 As for the measures to be adopted during the visit, the Guidelines suggest that Committee members make clear to all concerned that any action taken will take in primary consideration the security of the person(s) threatened; and clearly explain to the authorities that they are keeping the contact information of those interviewed so as to monitor reprisals.¹⁶⁵ As actions to be adopted after the visits, they acknowledge that the best way to verify the implementation of its recommendations and to prevent reprisals would be to carry out a follow-up visit one or two years after the conclusion of the inquiry.¹⁶⁶ Yet they additionally provide that the State party should be informed that the Committee will publish any case of ‘sanctions’ applied to persons who have cooperated with the Committee in the summary account.¹⁶⁷

90 Documents adopted by the Rapporteurs for reprisals are published online on the page of the OHCHR.¹⁶⁸ As the Committee’s policy on reprisal is fairly recent there is no public information available yet on actions taken against reprisals under Article 20.

¹⁶¹ The annual reports A/68/44 (n 158) para 29 and A/69/44, Annex XIII (n 79) para 25 also specifically refer to the Rapporteur for reprisals under Article 20 mentioning that it had to be designated at a later stage. However, in practice the function of the Rapporteur on reprisals under Article 20 was joint to that on reprisals under Article 22. In this sense see the subsequent annual reports CAT, ‘Report of the Committee Against Torture Fifty-third Session (3–28 November 2014) Fifty-fourth Session (20 April–15 May 2015)’ (2015) UN Doc A/70/44, para 19; A/71/44’ (n 155) para 18, which refer to ‘the rapporteur on reprisals under articles 20 and 22’.

Inter-State Communications

1. A State Party to this Convention may at any time declare under this article that it recognizes the competence of the Committee to receive and consider communications to the effect that a State Party claims that another State Party is not fulfilling its obligations under this Convention. Such communications may be received and considered according to the procedures laid down in this article only if submitted by a State Party which has made a declaration recognizing in regard to itself the competence of the Committee. No communication shall be dealt with by the Committee under this article if it concerns a State Party which has not made such a declaration. Communications received under this article shall be dealt with in accordance with the following procedure:

- (a) If a State Party considers that another State Party is not giving effect to the provisions of this Convention, it may, by written communication, bring the matter to the attention of that State Party. Within three months after the receipt of the communication the receiving State shall afford the State which sent the communication an explanation or any other statement in writing clarifying the matter, which should include, to the extent possible and pertinent, reference to domestic procedures and remedies taken, pending or available in the matter;
- (b) If the matter is not adjusted to the satisfaction of both States Parties concerned within six months after the receipt by the receiving State of the initial communication, either State shall have the right to refer the matter to the Committee, by notice given to the Committee and to the other State;
- (c) The Committee shall deal with a matter referred to it under this article only after it has ascertained that all domestic remedies have been invoked and exhausted in the matter, in conformity with the generally recognized principles of international law. This shall not be the rule where the application of the remedies is unreasonably prolonged or is unlikely to bring effective relief to the person who is the victim of the violation of this Convention;
- (d) The Committee shall hold closed meetings when examining communications under this article;
- (e) Subject to the provisions of subparagraph (c), the Committee shall make available its good offices to the States Parties concerned with a view to a friendly solution of the matter on the basis of respect for the obligations provided for in this Convention. For this purpose, the Committee may, when appropriate, set up an ad hoc conciliation commission;
- (f) In any matter referred to it under this article, the Committee may call upon the States Parties concerned, referred to in subparagraph (b), to supply any relevant information;
- (g) The States Parties concerned, referred to in subparagraph (b), shall have the right to be represented when the matter is being considered by the Committee and to make submissions orally and/or in writing;

- (h) The Committee shall, within twelve months after the date of receipt of notice under subparagraph (b), submit a report:
- (i) If a solution within the terms of subparagraph (e) is reached, the Committee shall confine its report to a brief statement of the facts and of the solution reached;
 - (ii) If a solution within the terms of subparagraph (e) is not reached, the Committee shall confine its report to a brief statement of the facts; the written submissions and record of the oral submissions made by the States Parties concerned shall be attached to the report.

In every matter, the report shall be communicated to the States Parties concerned.

2. The provisions of this article shall come into force when five States Parties to this Convention have made declarations under paragraph 1 of this article. Such declarations shall be deposited by the States Parties with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall transmit copies thereof to the other States Parties. A declaration may be withdrawn at any time by notification to the Secretary-General. Such a withdrawal shall not prejudice the consideration of any matter which is the subject of a communication already transmitted under this article; no further communication by any State Party shall be received under this article after the notification of withdrawal of the declaration has been received by the Secretary-General, unless the State Party concerned has made a new declaration.

1. Introduction

1 As most contemporary human rights treaties, the Convention against Torture provides for the establishment of a series of monitoring procedures aiming at enforcing the compliance of States parties with their respective treaty obligations.¹ As with other human rights treaties,² the CAT allows States Parties to complain about alleged violations of the treaty by another State Party through the inter-State communication procedure.³

¹ Ahcene Boulesbaa, The UN Convention on Torture and the Prospects for Enforcement (Martinus Nijhoff 1999) 279.

² Inter-State communications procedure are similarly envisaged by the following UN human rights treaties: CCPR (arts 41–43); CERD (arts 11, 12); CESCO-OP (arts 10); CRC-OP- IC (art 12); CMW (art 76); CED (art 32). Similarly, among regional mechanisms see ECHR (art 24); ACHR (art 45); ACHPR (art 47).

³ In the present article the terms inter-State communication procedure and inter-State complaint procedure are used interchangeably.

2 The inter-State communication procedure represents the weakest monitoring procedures under the Convention. As of December 2017, only 63 out of a total of 162 States parties have made the optional declaration under Article 21(1) recognizing the competence of the Committee against Torture to receive and consider inter-State communications. To date none of them has ever resorted to such procedure. Despite this, the article below will give an overview of how this procedure works.

3 *Original Swedish Draft (18 January 1978)*⁴

1. A State party may at any time declare under this article that it recognizes the competence of the Human Rights Committee to receive and consider communications to the effect that a State Party claims that another State Party is not fulfilling its obligations under the present Convention. Communications under this article may be received and considered only if submitted by a State Party which has made a declaration recognizing in regard to itself the competence of the Human Rights Committee. No communications shall be received by the Human Rights Committee if it concerns a State Party which has not made such a declaration.

2. Communications received under this article shall be dealt with in accordance with the procedure provided for in article 41 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and in the Rules of Procedure of the Committee.

Article 19

If a matter referred to the Human Rights Committee in accordance with article 18 is not resolved to the satisfaction of the States Parties concerned, the Committee may, with the prior consent of the States Parties concerned, appoint an ad hoc Conciliation Commission. The procedures governing the Commission shall be the same as those provided for in article 42 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and in the Rules of Procedure of the Human Rights Committee.

4 *Swedish Proposal for Implementation Provisions (22 December 1981)*⁵

1. A State Party to the present Convention may at any time declare under this article that it recognizes the competence of the Committee to receive and consider communications to the effect that a State Party claims that another State Party is not fulfilling its obligations under the present Convention. Such communications may be received and considered according to the procedures laid down in this article only if submitted by a State Party which has made a declaration recognizing in regard to itself the competence of the Committee. No communication shall be dealt with by the Committee under this article if it concerns a State Party which has not made such a declaration.

⁵ Draft Articles Regarding the Implementation of the International Convention Against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment Submitted by Sweden (1981) UN Doc E/CN.4/1493.

Communications received under this article shall be dealt with in accordance with the following procedure.

- (a) If a State Party considers that another State Party is not giving effect to the provisions of this Convention, it may, by written communication, bring the matter to the attention of that State Party. Within three months after the receipt of the communication the receiving State shall afford the State which sent the communication an explanation or any other statement in writing clarifying the matter, which should include, to the extent possible and pertinent, reference to domestic procedures and remedies taken, pending or available in the matter.
 - (b) If the matter is not adjusted to the satisfaction of both States Parties concerned within six months after the receipt by the receiving State of the initial communication, either State shall have the right to refer the matter to the Committee, by notice given to the Committee and to the other State.
 - (c) The Committee shall deal with a matter referred to it under this article only after it has ascertained that all domestic remedies have been invoked and exhausted in the matter, in conformity with the generally recognized principles of international law. This shall not be the rule where the application of the remedies is unreasonably prolonged or is unlikely to bring effective relief to the person who is the victim of the violation of this Convention.
 - (d) The Committee shall hold closed meetings when examining communications under this article;
 - (e) Subject to the provisions of subparagraph (c), the Committee shall make available its good offices to the States Parties concerned with a view to a friendly solution of the matter on the basis of respect for the obligations provided for in this Convention. For this purpose, the Committee may, when appropriate, set up an ad hoc Conciliation Commission.
 - (f) In any matter referred to it under this article, the Committee may call upon the States Parties concerned, referred to in subparagraph (b), to supply any relevant information.
 - (g) The States Parties concerned, referred to in subparagraph (b), shall have the right to be represented when the matter is being considered by the Committee and to make submissions orally and/or in writing.
 - (h) The Committee shall, within 12 months after the date of receipt of notice under subparagraph (b), submit a report:
 - (i) If a solution within the terms of subparagraph (e) is reached, the Committee shall confine its report to a brief statement of the facts and of the solution reached.
 - (ii) If a solution within the terms of subparagraph (e) is not reached, the Committee shall confine its report to a brief statement of the facts; the written submissions and record of the oral submissions made by the States Parties concerned shall be attached to the report.
 - (iii) In every matter, the report shall be communicated to the States Parties concerned.
2. The provisions of this article shall come into force when five States Parties to this Convention have made declarations under paragraph 1 of this article. Such declarations shall be deposited by the States Parties with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall transmit copies thereof to the other States Parties. A declaration may be withdrawn at any time by notification to the Secretary-General. Such a withdrawal shall not prejudice the consideration of any matter which is the subject of a communication already transmitted under this article; no further communication by any State Party shall be received under this article after the notification of withdrawal of the declaration has been received by the Secretary-General, unless the State Party concerned has made a new declaration.

5 *Draft Implementation Provisions, Submitted by the Chairman-Rapporteur (1 February 1982)*⁶

1. The States Parties to the Convention shall seek a solution to any dispute that may arise between them concerning the interpretation or application of the Convention through the means indicated in article 33 of the Charter of the United Nations.
2. The existence of such a dispute shall particularly be recognized when a State Party to the Convention has addressed to another State Party a written communication alleging that this other State Party has failed to fulfil of its obligations under the Convention and the State Party to whom the communication has been addressed denies the allegation or fails to reply within 45 days.
3. If after the expiry of a period of 45 days after the existence of the dispute is recognized the States Parties concerned have not agreed on another method of settlement, any of them may set in motion the procedure of conciliation specified in the Annex to the present Convention, through a request made to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Annex

1. A list of conciliators consisting of persons of high moral character and recognized competence in the field of human rights shall be maintained by the Secretary-General of the United Nations. To this end, every State Party to the Convention shall be invited to nominate two conciliators, and the names of the persons so nominated shall constitute the list. The term of conciliator, including that of any conciliator nominated to fill a vacancy, shall be five years and may be renewed. A conciliator whose term expires shall continue to fulfil any function for which he shall have been chosen under the following paragraphs.
2. When a request has been made to the Secretary-General in accordance with article 20, paragraph 3, of the Convention, the Secretary-General shall bring the dispute before a Conciliation Commission constituted as follows.

The State or States constituting one of the parties to the dispute shall appoint:

- (a) one conciliator of the nationality of that State or one of those States, who may or may not be chosen from the list referred to in paragraph 1, and
- (b) one conciliator of the nationality of that State or of any of those States, who shall be chosen from the list.

The State or States constituting the other party to the dispute shall appoint two conciliators the same way. The four conciliators chosen by the parties to the dispute shall be appointed within 45 days following the date on which the Secretary-General receives the request.

The four conciliators shall, within 45 days following the appointment of the last of them, appoint a fifth conciliator from the list, who shall be the chairman of the Conciliation Commission.

⁶ Draft Implementation Provisions of the International Convention Against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhumane or Degrading treatment or Punishment Submitted by the Chairman-Rapporteur of the Working Group (1982) UN Doc E/CN.4/1982/WG.2/WP.6.

If the appointment of the chairman or any of the other conciliators has not been made within the period prescribed above for such appointments, it shall be made by the Secretary-General within 45 days following the expiry of that period. Any of the periods within which the appointments must be made may be extended by agreement between the parties to the dispute.

Any vacancy shall be filled in the manner prescribed for the initial appointment.

3. The Conciliation Commission shall decide its own procedure. Decisions and recommendations of the Commission shall be made by a majority vote of five members.

4. The Commission shall hear the parties to the dispute and examine the claims and objections. It may make recommendation at any time and shall present a Final Report within 180 days after its constitution. The report, and any recommendation made by the Commission, shall not be binding upon the parties and shall have no other character than that of recommendations submitted for the considerations to the parties.

5. The Secretary-General shall provide the Commission such assistance and facilities as it may require for the performance of its function. The expenses of the Commission shall be borne by the United Nations.

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

6 The Working Group of the Human Rights Commission did not deal with the supervisory mechanism of the Convention in its sessions between 1978 and 1980. Although the proposal by the IAPL did not contain any form of inter-State communication procedure, such a procedure was provided for in the original Swedish proposal under its Article 18. In this proposal, the Human Rights Committee was envisaged as a treaty monitoring body for the CAT as well, and as such could receive communications to the effect that another State is not fulfilling its obligations under the Convention. Nevertheless, it was further proposed that communications could only be issued by a State which had made a declaration explicitly recognizing the competence of the Human Rights Committee with respect to this communication procedure, and could only be issued against a State which had done so as well. Further, Article 19 provided for the establishment of an ad hoc Conciliation Commission which would be set up according to the provisions provided for in Article 42 CCPR.

7 In 1978, however, several States made written comments regarding Article 18 of the original Swedish draft.⁷ Austria generally supported the possibility for the Human Rights Committee to receive communications.⁸ Spain argued that since the rules of application of the Covenant and the new Convention were basically identical, it was not able to see the added value of the new Convention in the fight against torture. It was suggested that the proposed texts would only lead to a duplication of instruments. Spain further pointed out that it was unlikely that States which had not signed the OP to the ICCPR would recognize the competence of the Human Rights Committee under Article 18 of the draft Convention.⁹

8 In 1981, the Dutch delegation submitted a document with comprehensive amendments to the Swedish draft.¹⁰ According to this text, the monitoring body of the Convention would no longer be the Human Rights Committee, but a new Committee composed of members of the Human Rights Committee would be established. The Dutch proposal also provided for a mandatory inter-State complaints procedure.¹¹

9 The Committee began its real deliberations on the inter-State communications procedure only at the Working Group session in 1982.¹² At this session, Sweden submitted a draft text on the implementation provisions,¹³ regulating the inter-State procedure under Article 31. In this document, the inter-State procedure was drafted along very similar lines to Article 41 CCPR. Contrary to the original Swedish proposal, it envisaged that the competence to receive and consider communications rested with an ad hoc body, the Committee against Torture. Some delegations expressed their support for the complaint procedure under Article 31.¹⁴ Others feared that with the establishment of an ad hoc Committee against Torture there would be a risk of duplication or even (worse) a conflict between the CCPR and CAT procedures.¹⁵ Another key element of the Swedish proposal of 1982 was the optional character of the inter-State procedure. In light of this, some delegations went so far as to question the overall value of two optional complaints procedures (individual and inter-State), and suggested omitting them from the Convention altogether.¹⁶ In any event, the majority of the Working Group delegations preferred an optional inter-State complaint procedure.¹⁷

10 During the 1982 Working Group session, an unidentified State delegation further argued that State complaints based on the fact that another State is failing to give effect to the provisions of the Convention could simply be considered as a 'dispute' between States on the interpretation or the application of the Convention. Consequently, there would be no need to give the allegation of non-respect of the obligations the character of a 'complaint' and no need to establish an inter-State complaints procedure. Such a 'dispute' should be subject to the procedures for peaceful settlement set out in the Charter of the United Nations. Thus, in the event of such a 'dispute', the States parties concerned should be obliged to submit it to a mandatory conciliation procedure. The delegation argued that this would be preferable since States would more easily accept conciliation, as it would fall in the generally accepted treatment of inter-States disputes under a treaty.¹⁸

11 The 1982 sessions went on with the submission by the Chairman-Rapporteur of a draft implementation provision introducing a mandatory conciliation procedure.¹⁹ The proposal was based on the conciliation procedure provided in the VCLT²⁰ and reflected the discussions held on the original Swedish draft, thus suggesting not to provide for an inter-State communication procedure, but only for a procedure regarding disputes. Such a proposal was not, however, supported by the delegations in the Working Group.²¹ Some States pointed out that the international treaties on which the Chairperson-Rapporteur based his draft were based on subjects of an entirely different character. Others expressed the opinion that there was a difference between disputes regarding the application of the Convention, such as disputes related to jurisdiction and extradition, and disputes concerning the occurrence of torture. Disputes over the non-respect of the provisions under the Convention and/or the occurrence of torture would be more naturally the subject of the complaints procedures. The complaint procedure included in the Swedish proposal was deemed preferable as it would not only involve the States parties, but also the implementation organ of the Convention.²²

12 Consequently, in 1983, the Working Group discussed the inter-State complaints procedure on the basis of the Swedish draft. The Swedish delegation informed the Working Group that it wished to maintain its proposal. The discussions were rather brief and the Chairman referred to the extensive discussions concerning the inter-State complaints procedure in 1982. Only one State assured that it could accept an optional inter-State complaints procedure as suggested by Sweden, but that it could not accept a mandatory procedure. Thus, the Working Group temporarily closed its debate on this draft Article and decided that this question, as well as the mandatory conciliation procedure for disputes between States, would be discussed at a later stage when the final clauses were under consideration.²³

13 In 1984, all Working Group members agreed on a final version of the provision which provided for an optional inter-State communication procedure according to the Swedish proposal. Subsequently, Article 31 of the Swedish proposal was adopted with some minor drafting changes, as Article 21 CAT.²⁴

3. Issues of Interpretation

3.1 Scope of Application

14 As recalled in the introduction, similarly to other international treaties, the CAT allows States parties to complain about alleged violations of the treaty by another State party. This inter-State communication procedure is regulated by Article 21 and Rules 91 to 101. Article 21 CAT is taken almost literally from Article 41 CCPR.

15 Pursuant to Article 21(1), a State party may submit a communication when it claims that 'another State party is not fulfilling its obligations under this Convention'. On the other hand, the wording of Article 21(1)(a) is different, stipulating that a State party may bring its initial written communication to another State party if it considers that the latter 'is not giving effect to the provisions of this Convention'. The formulation of both provisions indicates, however, that the subject of an inter-State communication may relate to any alleged violation of a substantive or procedural provision of the Convention.

²³ Report of the Working Group of the Commission on Human Rights (1983) UN Doc E/CN.4/1983/63, paras 63–64.

²⁴ Report of the Working Group of the Commission on Human Rights (1984) UN Doc E/CN.4/1984/72, para 57. Main differences to Art 41 ICCPR: Art. 21(1)(c) regarding requirement of exhaustion of domestic remedies adds exception where it 'is unlikely to bring effective relief to the person who is the victim of the violation of this Convention'; Art 21(1)(e) makes reference to a friendly solution on the basis of 'respect for the obligations provided in this Convention'. In contrast to the CCPR, the CAT is silent on the establishment and functioning of an ad hoc Conciliation Commission. Art 21 enters into force when five States parties have made a declaration under paragraph 1; see Burgers and Danelius (n 11) 165.

For instance, a State party may complain that another State party has practised torture in violation of its prevention duty under Article 2; has violated the non-refoulement principle under Article 3; has not exercised universal jurisdiction in accordance with Articles 5(2) and 7; or has not complied with any of its reporting obligations under Article 19.

16 The scope of application of Article 21 should also be read in conjunction with Article 30 on dispute settlement. As it was seen in the analysis of the travaux préparatoires, the opportunity to include a procedure on inter-State communications and/or dispute settlement was widely discussed during the Working Group sessions. Eventually, it was decided that the Convention should include both. The Convention, however, does not explicitly regulate the relationship between the two articles and thus the question arises as to whether they have the same scope of application.²⁵ For example, the question remains open as to whether a State's claim that another State is systematically practising torture can be considered only under Article 21 or also under Article 30 as a dispute between States. During the drafting history some delegations pointed out that there was a difference between disputes regarding the application of the Convention, such as disputes related to jurisdiction and extradition, and disputes concerning the occurrence of torture. In the latter case especially, it seemed important that the matter was not exclusively dealt with between the States parties and that the Committee would be involved in the matter.²⁶

3.2 Optional Character

17 Though the drafting history of the Convention shows that a mandatory inter-State complaints procedure had been discussed,²⁷ all Working Group members had eventually agreed on an optional inter-State communication procedure. The optional character of the procedure implies that every State party may submit a declaration recognizing the Committee's competence to receive and consider inter-State communications.²⁸

18 As of December 2017, 63 out of a total of 162 States parties have made the optional declaration under Article 21.²⁹ There are several reasons for the reluctance of States to make the optional declaration and/or to lodge inter-State complaints:

- Inter-State complaints represent the traditional means of States to solve disputes amongst themselves under international law. However, since human rights violations do not constitute disputes between States, this means of conflict resolution is not considered an adequate remedy. But individual complaints against States to an international monitoring body were only gradually accepted as a more appropriate means to hold States accountable. In the early days of international human rights protection, inter-State complaints were, therefore, regarded as a substitute.
- The submission of a formal complaint against another State accusing it of violating human rights constitutes an unfriendly act. In the 1950s and 1960s, when the UN Human Rights Commission was blocked by the 'no power to take action doctrine', this seemed, however, the only effective method by which States could express their concerns about gross and systematic human rights violations in other States. Today,

²⁵ Under Article 21(1), a State party may claim that 'another State party is not fulfilling its obligations under this Convention'. Art 30(1), however, refers to a 'dispute between two or more States Parties concerning the interpretation or application of this Convention'.

²⁸ Art 21(1); see also Rule 91.

²⁹ For more details see Appendices A3 and A4.

there are many less formal and more effective ways and means for States to raise human rights concerns in the Human Rights Council, the General Assembly, and even in the Security Council.

- In certain cases, such as the situation of gross and systematic human rights violations in Greece during the military dictatorship of the late 1960s, or in Turkey during the military regime of the early 1980s, a joint inter-State complaint lodged by a group of States³⁰ might be more effective than many individual complaints. But this only holds true if the inter-State complaint can lead to a final decision by an independent human rights monitoring body. Under UN human rights treaties, the procedure is, however, much weaker than under regional human rights treaties or respective ILO procedures.
- With respect to the CAT, it is more effective for States to provide the Committee with reliable information about the systematic practice of torture and to request it to start an ex officio inquiry under Article 20 CAT,³¹ because this procedure leads to a quasi-judicial assessment of the situation and to suggestions of how to improve it.

19 The procedure functions on a reciprocal basis. At the time a communication is submitted by State A against State B, both States must have made the relevant declaration in accordance with Article 21(1). The wording of Article 21 clearly states that the reciprocity relates to the date on which the communication is submitted to the Committee and not to the date of the alleged violation. Thus, a State party may submit a communication to the Committee although it had not yet made the declaration of the Committee's competence on the day of the alleged violation. In other words, a State party may issue such a declaration and the next day transmit a communication to another State party about a human rights violation which occurred several years ago, but still after the entry into force of the Convention for the State party concerned.³²

20 Under Article 21(2) States parties may also withdraw at any time their previously made declarations recognizing this optional procedure by notification to the Secretary-General. Such a withdrawal 'shall not prejudice the consideration of any matter which is the subject of a communication already transmitted under this article'. As a consequence of the withdrawal, 'no further communication by any other State party shall be received'. Since Article 21 uses the term 'communication' to describe both the initial communication by State A to State B (Article 21 (1) (a)) and the communication to the Committee (Article 21 (1) (b)), this provision requires some interpretation. While this was not elaborated on during the drafting phase of the CAT, the same issue was discussed when Article 41(2) of the CCPR was drafted. Hence, an analysis of the travaux préparatoires of the CCPR can provide some clarity. During the discussion in the third Committee of the GA, the position prevailed that the term 'communication' refers not to the communication to the Committee but rather to the initial communication by State A to State B. Otherwise, it would be possible for State B to withdraw its declaration after receipt of the initial communication and thereby to avoid the adoption of the matter by the Committee.³³ Similarly, it can be concluded that a withdrawal, pursuant to Article 21(2) CAT, does not have an effect on any existing communications but simply precludes the acceptance of new communications. To date no State party has withdrawn its previous declaration under Article 21.

3.3 Procedure

3.3.1 Preliminary Procedure (Article 21(1)(a))

21 Before the Committee can receive a communication the complaining State must first try to resolve the matter by sending a written communication to the State accused of not giving effect to the provisions of the Convention. Pursuant to Article 21(1)(a), within three months after the receipt of the communication, the receiving State shall give the State which sent the communication an explanation or any other statement in writing clarifying the matter. If appropriate and possible, the communication should include references to domestic procedures and remedies taken, pending, or available on the matter.

3.3.2 Notification of the Committee (Article 21(1)(b))

22 If the matter is not treated to the satisfaction of both States concerned within six months after the State has received the written communication, both States may refer the matter to the Committee by giving notice both to the Committee and the other State. Rule 92(2) RoP requires that the communication referred to the Committee shall contain, or be accompanied by information regarding (a) steps taken to adjust the matter in accordance with Article 21(1)(a) and (b), including the text of the initial communication and any subsequent written explanation or statement by the States parties; (b) steps taken to exhaust domestic remedies; (c) any other procedure of international investigation or settlement resorted to by the States parties concerned.³⁴ The Secretary-General maintains a permanent register of all inter-State communications received by the Committee.³⁵

3.3.3 Admissibility Requirements (Article 21(1)(b) and (c))

23 In addition to the declaration under Article 21, two additional requirements must be respected for the Committee to consider an inter-State communication: the six month time limit prescribed in Article 21(1)(b); and the exhaustion of domestic remedies as required by Article 21(1)(c).³⁶

24 Under the latter requirement, the Committee may only consider a communication if all domestic remedies have been invoked and exhausted. The exhaustion of domestic remedies requirement in Article 21(1)(c) is subject to conformity with the 'generally recognized principles of international law'.³⁷ However, as established in the final sentence of Article 21(1)(c), there are two exceptions to this admissibility requirement: the first applies when the remedy is unreasonably prolonged, the second when the remedy is

‘unlikely to bring effective relief to the person who is the victim of the violation of this Convention’.³⁸

25 Article 21, however, does not contain any provision to the effect that the Committee shall not consider an inter-State communication if the same matter has already been examined under, or is pending before, another procedure of international investigation or settlement. In contrast, Article 22(5)(a) prohibits the double consideration of individual communications. The absence of the non-duplication principle with respect to the inter-State communications procedure corresponds to international practice and points to the fact that States and individuals are different legal subjects under international law. While individuals should not be encouraged to submit multiple complaints on the same subject, States ‘should be able to use cumulatively every peaceful means of settling disputes’.³⁹ But Rule 92(c) requires the complaining State when referring the matter to the CAT Committee to inform it of any other international procedure to which it had previously resorted. Even if one of the States parties concerned has referred the same dispute to an arbitration mechanism or the ICJ in accordance with the procedure foreseen in Article 30 CAT, the Committee would not be empowered to declare the communication inadmissible.⁴⁰

26 Although no other admissibility requirements are mentioned in this Article, the Committee must nonetheless examine whether the communication is compatible with the Convention ratione materiae, loci, personae, and temporis. If the alleged violation concerns an obligation which is either not contained in the Convention or which occurred before the entry into force of the Convention for the State party concerned, the Committee may declare such communication inadmissible ratione materiae or temporis, respectively.

3.3.4 Friendly Solution (Article 21(1)(e))

27 The main function of the Committee in the inter-State communication procedure is to mediate, that is to ‘make available its good offices to the States Parties concerned with a view to a friendly solution of the matter on the basis of respect for the obligations provided for in this Convention’ in accordance with Article 21(1)(e).⁴¹ As soon as the Committee has declared an inter-State communication admissible, it shall attempt to mediate between the States parties concerned. The procedure for dealing with inter-State communications represents a pure mediation and conciliation procedure without the possibility of a final decision if the efforts to reach conciliation fail.⁴²

28 On the other hand, a friendly solution must be reached ‘on the basis of respect for the obligation provided for in this Convention’. Thus, it is important that the Committee does not simply mediate between the States parties concerned, but that it ensures that any

The second exception concerning ineffective remedies is not included in any other UN human rights treaties see eg ICCPR (art 41(1)(c)); CESCR-OP (art 10 (1)(c)); CERD (art 11 (3)); and CMW (art 76 (1) (c)), which all provide only that domestic remedies shall not be unreasonably prolonged. The texts of CED (art 32) and the CRC-OP-IC (art 12) do not provide any exception of this kind. For an example by the ECtHR see Ireland v the United Kingdom (1978) Series A no 25.

⁴⁰ On the relationship between the Arts 21 and 30 see below Art 30, 3.4.

⁴¹ Rule 98; in this sense see also Ingelse (n 31) 198. ⁴² cf Nowak, CCPR Commentary (n 32) 759.

friendly solution is based on the respect for the obligations under the CAT, as required by Article 21(1)(e). One should bear in mind that an inter-State complaints mechanism does not relate to a classical dispute among States, which might be settled by means of compensation or trade-offs, but to allegations of serious human rights violations relating to the absolute and non-derogable prohibition of torture and ill-treatment. If the Committee finds that torture is indeed practised systematically in the State party against which a communication had been lodged, it would not be compatible with this provision if that State offered to pay a certain amount of compensation to the State party which had submitted the communication. The State found to violate the obligations under the Convention would have to ensure by legislative and other measures that the systematic practise of torture stops, that the victims of torture are provided with adequate reparation in accordance with Article 14 CAT, and that the perpetrators of torture are brought to justice.

29 Article 21(1)(e) further stipulates that ‘when appropriate’ the Committee may establish an ad hoc Conciliation Commission for the purpose of its activities in the context of its good offices.

30 Conciliatory Commissions are equally envisaged in other UN treaties, such as the CERD (Articles 11 to 13) and the CCPR (Article 42). Each of the three treaties, however, regulate the ad hoc Commission in a different manner. While the procedure under the CCPR is triggered only if the Human Rights Committee failed its efforts to achieve a friendly solution,⁴³ the CAT does not set up a similar condition and simply states that the Committee may set up an ad hoc Conciliation Commission if it finds it ‘appropriate’, which means for example also at an early stage of the proceedings. In both treaties, however, the establishment is optional. Yet, unlike the Human Rights Committee, the CAT Committee does not need the prior consent of the States parties concerned. In contrast, the setting up of an ad hoc Commission under CERD is mandatory and envisaged as a second phase after the CERD Committee has collected all relevant information on admissibility and fact-finding. Under CERD, the Commission shall additionally submit a report including its findings on the relevant factual questions and recommendations for resolving the dispute.

31 Whilst the CERD and CCPR include elaborate provisions on the establishment and functioning of such ad hoc Commissions,⁴⁴ the CAT simply confers the power to establish a Commission to the CAT Committee but is silent on the composition, mandate, and procedure that the ad hoc Commission should have.⁴⁵ Since the RoP also do not contain any provisions to this effect, it will be up to the Committee, when establishing such a Conciliation Commission, to amend its RoP or else leave this entirely up to the Conciliation Commission itself. To facilitate the achievement of an amicable solution it seems, however, useful to appoint the members of the Conciliation Commission in agreement with the States parties concerned, as provided for in Article 42(1)(b) CCPR.⁴⁶ As it currently stands, Article 42 CCPR has the potential to serve as a model for conciliation if ever the Committee against Torture is confronted with a disagreement or inter-State communication to that effect.

⁴⁶ Article 42(1)(b) CCPR states that ‘The Commission shall consist of five persons acceptable to the States Parties concerned. If the States Parties concerned fail to reach agreement within three months on all or part of the composition of the Commission, the members of the Commission concerning whom no agreement has been reached shall be elected by secret ballot by a two-thirds majority vote of the Committee from among its members.’

3.3.6 Other Procedural Provisions (Article 21(1)(d), (f), (g))

32 The inter-State communication procedure is confidential. This follows from the requirement of Article 21(1)(d) that the Committee shall hold closed meetings when examining such communications.

33 Furthermore, pursuant to subparagraph (g), States Parties have the right to be represented when the matter is being considered by the Committee and make submissions, except during the Committee's deliberations on the report.⁴⁷ For this reason, the States parties concerned shall be informed of the opening date and duration of the session as early as possible.⁴⁸ In addition, Rule 96 provides that the Committee, after consultation with the States parties concerned, may issue communiqués for the use of the information by the media and the general public regarding its activities under Article 21, including during ongoing proceedings.

34 Finally, under Article 21(1)(f), the Committee may request States Parties to submit additional information,⁴⁹ and set up a deadline for the submission of the requested information.⁵⁰

3.4 Conclusion of the Procedure and Report (Article 21(1)(h))

35 Unlike the individual complaints procedure, under Article 21 the Committee is not empowered to adopt a decision, but can only 'submit a report'. Such report shall be adopted within twelve months after having received the notice by one of the States parties concerned.

36 Pursuant to Article 21(1)(h) if a solution is reached (due to the good offices provided by the Committee) the report shall be confined to a brief statement of the facts and of the solutions reached.⁵¹ If the attempts of the Committee, and perhaps also of the ad hoc Conciliation Commission, to reach a friendly solution fail, the Committee shall submit a report which shall, according to Article 21(1)(h)(ii), contain a brief statement of the facts as well as the written and oral submissions of the States parties concerned.⁵²

37 Although the final report of the Committee shall not contain any legal assessment whether or not the State party concerned violated its obligations under the Convention, it shall in any case (whether a friendly solution has been achieved or not) contain a 'brief statement of the facts'. This requires at the very least, a minimum of fact-finding as well as the evaluation of such facts. But Article 21(1)(h), in contrast to Article 20(3), does not authorize the Committee to carry out fact-finding missions to the territory of the State party concerned. It may only call upon the States parties concerned to 'supply any relevant information' pursuant to Article 21(1)(f) and Rule 99 as well as to hold oral hearings in accordance with Article 21(1)(g) and Rule 100. Although neither the Convention nor the RoP use the term 'oral hearing', this clearly derives from the right of the States parties concerned under Article 21(1)(g) 'to be represented when the matter is being considered by the Committee and to make submissions orally and/or in writing'.⁵³

38 Taking into account that the Committee only meets a few times a year, it seems very difficult for it to carry out its various fact-finding and mediation functions, including oral hearings and the establishment of an ad hoc Conciliation Commission, within one year. Nevertheless, the Committee is required to submit a report. In practice, such a report will most likely only be of a preliminary nature, since nothing in the Convention prevents the Committee from continuing its fact-finding and mediation efforts after this date and supplementing its preliminary report with a concluding report at a later stage.

39 Although the Committee is not authorized to make a legal assessment as to whether or not the State party concerned violated its obligations under the Convention, the statement of the facts, of course, contains a certain evaluation whether or not torture was in fact practised or whether other obligations were implemented or violated. It would, therefore, also be advisable for the Committee to provide for a certain follow-up to such a report to ensure that the State party concerned complies with the terms of the friendly solution. In particular, nothing would prevent the Committee from ex officio initiating an inquiry procedure under Article 20 CAT on the basis of the information which it received in the course of an inter-State communications procedure, provided that such information is reliable and contains well-founded indications that torture is being systematically practised in the territory of the State party concerned. In this case, the Committee would be authorized to conclude with a legal assessment, findings, and suggestions and to include at least a summary account of the results of the proceedings in its annual report.⁵⁴ Finally, any State party concerned is authorized to submit this unsolved dispute to another arbitration mechanism and, in the last instance, to the ICJ under the procedure provided for in Article 30.⁵⁵

40 The Convention is silent regarding the possibility of publishing the final report or at least a summary account of the results of the proceedings in the annual report, as provided for in Article 20(5). The fact that the report, according to the last sentence of Article 21(1), shall be communicated only to the States parties concerned may be used as an argument against such publication.⁵⁶ On the other hand, the confidentiality requirement described above only refers to 'meetings', and similar provisions relating to the individual complaints procedure in Article 22(6) and (7) have not prevented the Committee, along with other UN treaty monitoring bodies, from publishing the full text of all final decisions in the annual reports. It follows, therefore, that the Committee is authorized also to publish the full text of its reports under Article 21(1)(h).⁵⁷

3.5 Entry into Force (Article 21(2))

41 Article 21(2) provides that the inter-State communication procedure shall enter into force when five States Parties had made a declaration under Article 21(1). The low number of signature required by the Convention was meant to facilitate the entry into force of the provision, avoiding that the mechanism would enter into force only years after, as it happened for Article 41(2) CCPR.⁵⁸ In practice, the inter-State communication procedure entered into force, together with the Convention on 26 June 1987.⁵⁹ The first five States parties to accept the CAT inter-State procedure were: Argentina, France, Norway, Sweden, and Switzerland.⁶⁰

⁵⁷ In this sense see also Ingelse (n 31) 199.

⁵⁸ Art 41 of the CCPR required ten declarations. The CCPR inter-State procedure entered into force only on 28 March 1979, that is, more than three years after the Covenant.

⁵⁹ For the entry into force of the Convention see below Art 27.

⁶⁰ Declarations were made on 2 December 1986. See A/43/46, Annex I. But see A/61/44, Annex III, which indicates that Uruguay might have made its declaration on 24 October 1986, ie before Switzerland. According to the latter annual report, seven States parties (including Hungary which at that time was a still a Socialist State) had recognized the inter-State communication procedure by the date of entry into force of the Convention on 26 June 1987.

Individual Complaints Procedure

1. A State Party to this Convention may at any time declare under this article that it recognizes the competence of the Committee to receive and consider communications from or on behalf of individuals subject to its jurisdiction who claim to be victims of a violation by a State Party of the provisions of the Convention. No communication shall be received by the Committee if it concerns a State Party which has not made such a declaration.
2. The Committee shall consider inadmissible any communication under this article which is anonymous or which it considers to be an abuse of the right of submission of such communications or to be incompatible with the provisions of this Convention.
3. Subject to the provisions of paragraph 2, the Committee shall bring any communications submitted to it under this article to the attention of the State Party to this Convention which has made a declaration under paragraph 1 and is alleged to be violating any provisions of the Convention. Within six months, the receiving State shall submit to the Committee written explanations or statements clarifying the matter and the remedy, if any, that may have been taken by that State.
4. The Committee shall consider communications received under this article in the light of all information made available to it by or on behalf of the individual and by the State Party concerned.
5. The Committee shall not consider any communications from an individual under this article unless it has ascertained that:
 - (a) The same matter has not been, and is not being, examined under another procedure of international investigation or settlement;
 - (b) The individual has exhausted all available domestic remedies; this shall not be the rule where the application of the remedies is unreasonably prolonged or is unlikely to bring effective relief to the person who is the victim of the violation of this Convention.
6. The Committee shall hold closed meetings when examining communications under this article.
7. The Committee shall forward its views to the State Party concerned and to the individual.
8. The provisions of this article shall come into force when five States Parties to this Convention have made declarations under paragraph 1 of this article. Such declarations shall be deposited by the States Parties with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall transmit copies thereof to the other States Parties. A declaration may be withdrawn at any time by notification to the Secretary-General. Such a withdrawal shall not prejudice the consideration of any matter which is the subject of a communication already transmitted under this article; no further communication by or on behalf of an individual shall be received under this article after the notification of withdrawal of the declaration has been received by the Secretary-General, unless the State Party has made a new declaration.

1. Introduction

1 The right of victims of torture, ill-treatment, and other torture-related violations stipulated in the CAT, such as violations of the non-refoulement principle under Article 3, to an effective remedy and reparation derives from the human right not to be subjected to torture, ill-treatment, and similar violations of the Convention. Since torture constitutes a typical example of a gross violation of human rights, this important procedural right is also underlined by the Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy and Reparation for Victims of Gross Violations of International Human Rights Law and Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law.¹ This right shall primarily be provided by respective complaints procedures on the domestic level. Most importantly, Article 13 CAT contains the obligation of States parties to ensure that any victim of torture and other forms of ill-treatment has ‘the right to complain to, and to have his case promptly and impartially examined by, its competent authorities’.² If such domestic remedies are not effective or, for whatever reason, do not provide satisfactory redress, the victim shall be granted the possibility of submitting an individual complaint to a competent international monitoring body.

2 While a mandatory right of individual complaints is guaranteed, for example, by Article 34 ECHR and Article 44 ACHR, UN human rights treaties only provide for optional individual complaints mechanisms to quasi-judicial bodies.³ The respective provisions of UN treaties, most of which were drafted during the Cold War and constitute a kind of lowest common denominator between the Western and the Socialist concepts of human rights,⁴ contain extremely weak language. Instead of complaints, they speak of ‘communications’, instead of judgments or at least decisions on the merits, they use the term ‘views’, which are considered as non-legally binding even vis-à-vis States parties that have explicitly and voluntarily accepted the competence of the respective monitoring bodies to receive and consider individual complaints.

3 Nevertheless, over the course of the years the Human Rights Committee (HRC) and the Committee against Torture (CAT Committee or Committee) have developed these weak procedures into fairly effective quasi-judicial complaints procedures by clearly going beyond the powers originally entrusted to them. The CAT Committee even changed the terminology and speaks about individual complaints and decisions on the merits (Rule 118 (4)), which in their structure and substance clearly resemble judicial decisions. Following the model of the HRC, it also developed the practice of issuing requests for interim measures and appointing Rapporteurs on follow-up.

4 Only 68 out of a total of 162 States parties to the Convention have accepted the optional individual complaints procedure, and the clear majority of these States are from

Europe and Latin America and are also subject to the respective mandatory complaints procedures under the ECHR and the ACHR.

5 During the roughly thirty years of its existence, the CAT Committee has registered 825 complaints concerning thirty-eight States parties. Up until May 2017, 234 of them were discontinued, 86 found inadmissible, 175 were still pending, and in the remaining 329 cases the Committee took a decision on the merits.⁵ In 131 cases of all decisions on the merits, the Committee established violations of one or more provisions of the Convention. The vast majority of decisions on the merits do not concern allegations of the practise of torture or other forms of ill-treatment itself, but allegations of the violation of the non-refoulement principle in Article 3 CAT.⁶ This is the result of the fact that European and other industrialized States constitute the majority of States parties which accepted the optional complaints procedure. In addition victims of torture and other forms of ill-treatment in countries known for their practise of torture often lack effective access to international complaints procedures or are afraid of submitting complaints.

1. A State Party may at any time declare under this article that it recognizes the competence of the Committee to receive and consider communications from individuals subject to its jurisdiction who claim to have been subjected to torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment in contravention of the obligations of that State Party under the present Convention. No communication shall be received by the Committee if it concerns a State Party which has not made such a declaration.

2. Communications received under this article shall be dealt with in accordance with the procedure provided for in the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and in the Rules of Procedure of the Human Rights Committee.

1. A State Party to the present Convention may at any time declare under this article that it recognizes the competence of the Committee to receive and consider communications from or on behalf of individuals subject to its jurisdiction who claim to be victims of a violation by a State Party of the provisions of the Convention. No communication shall be received by the Committee if it concerns a State Party to the Convention which has not made such a declaration.

3. Subject to the provisions of paragraph 2, the Committee shall bring any communications submitted to it under this article to the attention of the State Party to the present Convention which has made a declaration under paragraph 1 and is alleged to be violating any provisions of the Convention. Within six months, the receiving State shall submit to the Committee written explanations or statements clarifying the matter and the remedy, if any, that may have been taken by that State.
4. The Committee shall consider communications received under this article in the light of all information made available to it by or on behalf of the individual and by the State Party concerned.
5. The Committee shall not consider any communications from an individual under this article unless it has ascertained that
 - (a) the same matter has not been, and is not being, examined under another procedure of international investigation or settlement
 - (b) the individual has exhausted all available domestic remedies; this shall not be the rule where the application of the remedies is unreasonably prolonged or is unlikely to bring effective relief to the person who is the victim of the violation of the present Convention.
6. The Committee shall hold closed meetings when examining communications under this article.
7. The Committee shall forward its views to the State Party concerned and to the individual.
8. The provisions of this article shall come into force when five States Parties to the present Convention have made declarations under paragraph 1 of this article. Such declarations shall be deposited by the States Parties with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall transmit copies thereof to the other States Parties. A declaration may be withdrawn at any time by notification to the Secretary-General. Such a withdrawal shall not prejudice the consideration of any matter which is the subject of a communication already transmitted under this article; no further communication by any State Party shall be received under this article after the notification of withdrawal of the declaration has been received by the Secretary-General, unless the State Party concerned has made a new declaration.

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

8 Deliberations in the Working Group on Article 22 only began in 1982. However, in 1978 some States had already submitted their comments to Article 20 of the original Swedish draft.⁹ Austria had objected to the examination of individual complaints under the CAT by the HRC, arguing that this would mean that obligations voluntarily assumed by States under the CAT would be monitored by a body whose nominating States had not assumed the same obligations. Austria therefore suggested that individual complaints be referred to a sub-group (or chambers) of the Committee composed of nationals of

States which had made the declaration under Article 20.¹⁰ Whilst noting that no Arab State and only few African, Asian, and Latin American States had made a declaration recognizing the competence of the HRC in accordance with the OP to the CCPR, Morocco expressed its support for the individual complaints procedure to the HRC provided for in draft Article 20.¹¹

9 In 1982, the Working Group based its discussions on the individual complaints procedure (as well as the inter-State communications) on a revised draft text on the implementation provisions submitted by Sweden.¹² Draft Article 32, which later became Article 22 CAT, was modelled on the provisions of the first OP to the CCPR. Some delegations expressed their support for the individual complaints procedure under draft Article 32. Other delegations felt that, in light of the fact that the proposal also suggested two parallel Committees, the HRC and the CAT Committee, there would be a risk of duplication or, even worse, a conflict between the two procedures. Some delegations even went as far as suggesting that it be considered that the two complaints procedures (individual and inter-State complaint procedure) be omitted from the Convention, given that they were of an optional character.¹³

10 In 1983, the complaints procedures (under Articles 31 and 32 of the new Swedish proposal) were discussed only briefly in the Working Group. The Swedish delegation informed the Working Group that it wished to maintain its proposal. Switzerland expressed its strong support for including an individual complaints procedure in the draft Convention.¹⁴ No other delegation expressed its opinion on the issue at this stage.

11 In the 1984 Working Group session all States agreed on the inclusion of an optional individual complaints procedure as provided for in draft Article 32 and consequently the Article was adopted without any substantial changes.¹⁵

12 At the fortieth session of the Commission on Human Rights in 1984, States had a substantial debate on the achievements of the Working Group. During this session Bangladesh expressed concern with regard to Article 22 that complaints could only be launched against States which had made the declaration. The delegation wondered how many States would be willing to make the declaration. With regard to the requirement of exhaustion of all available domestic remedies before submission of a complaint to the Committee, the delegation stated that it would be extremely difficult for political opponents to do so and to fulfil this condition. Despite these comments, Bangladesh expressed its support for the draft Convention and hoped that it would be transmitted to the General Assembly as soon as possible.¹⁶

3.1 Optional Character

13 In contrast to the mandatory character of individual complaints under regional human rights treaties,¹⁷ the UN has been for long time extremely reluctant to accept the right of victims of human rights violations to submit complaints. Therefore, they only provide for optional individual complaints mechanisms to quasi-judicial bodies on the basis of a separate optional protocol or an optional clause in the text of the respective treaty. Individual complaints are provided for by all nine treaty bodies.¹⁸

14 The drafting history of Article 22 shows that the optional character of the individual complaints procedure under the CAT, which is modelled on the provisions of the first OP to the CCPR, was never seriously put into question.¹⁹ Consequently, victims of alleged violations of the CAT may only submit a complaint to the Committee against a State party which has made a declaration explicitly recognizing the competence of the Committee to deal with such complaints in accordance with Article 22(1).

15 The procedure concerning declarations is regulated by Article 22(1) and (8) and Rule 102. A State party may declare that it recognizes the competence of the Committee at any time.²⁰ Such declarations are deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who acts as the depositary of the Convention.²¹ As of December 2017, 68 States parties have made a declaration under Article 22.²²

16 Article 22(8) CAT provides for the possibility for States parties to withdraw declarations under Article 22(1) at any time by notification to the Secretary-General. In contrast to a denunciation under Article 12 of the first OP to the CCPR, which takes effect three months after the date of receipt of the notification by the Secretary-General, the withdrawal of a declaration under Article 22(8) CAT takes effect immediately, ie the day after the notification of withdrawal is received. Yet, as indicated in Rule 102(2), the withdrawal of the declaration ‘shall not prejudice the consideration of any matter which is the subject of a complaint already transmitted under that article’. Thus, all individual complaints which reach the OHCHR in Geneva prior to the notification of withdrawal shall be accepted, registered, and considered by the Committee. Any subsequent complaints are to be declared inadmissible by the Committee pursuant to Article 22(2) as incompatible ratione personae, regardless of whether the alleged violation of the Convention has occurred at a date on which the State party still had accepted the individual complaints

¹⁷ See ECHR Art 34; ACHR Art 44; ACHPR Art 55.

²⁰ See Article 22(1) and (8) CAT; Rule 102 (1) as lastly amended by the Committee at its fiftieth meeting in 2013 (CAT/C/3/Rev.6; hereinafter: the Rule of Procedure). Normally declarations are made upon ratification or accession but they can be made also after.

procedure.²³ While some States have made use of their right to denounce the first OP to the CCPR,²⁴ to date no State party to the CAT has withdrawn its declaration under Article 22(8) CAT.²⁵

17 Article 22(8) stipulates that five declarations are needed for the individual complaints procedure to enter into force. Since among the first twenty States that ratified or acceded to the Convention in accordance with Articles 25 and 26, there were more than five States which also made the respective declaration under Article 22(1), the individual complaints procedure entered into force together with the Convention on 26 June 1987.²⁶

3.2 Article 22(1): Standing of the Applicant

3.2.1 Meaning of 'individuals'

18 By making an optional declaration under Article 22(1), a State party accepts the competence of the Committee to 'receive and consider communications from or on behalf of individuals subject to its jurisdiction who claim to be victims of a violation by a State party of the provisions of the Convention'. This formulation is based on Articles 1 and 2 of the first OP to the CCPR.²⁷

19 First of all, only individuals have standing to lodge a complaint to the Committee. As with the first OP to the CCPR, the CAT individual complaints procedure does not provide a remedy for the violation of collective rights. Legal persons such as corporations, NGOs, or religious groups cannot claim to be victims under Article 22. While this requirement seems too narrow for a general human rights treaty such as the CCPR, and has led to controversial discussions as to the standing of groups and legal entities,²⁸ it is less problematic in relation to victims of torture and other forms of ill-treatment. The right not to be subjected to torture or other forms of ill-treatment is a typical individual right, and it is difficult to imagine how a legal entity might become a victim.

20 However, torture can be practised systematically against a particular group of individuals, and victims can collectively suffer harm, as stated by the Committee in its General Comment No 3 to Article 14.²⁹ In such cases collective complaints may be divided into individual cases by the Secretariat in accordance with Rule 111(5).³⁰ Thus, complaints may be brought on behalf of a group of individuals, as long as each individual is identified. In practice, the Committee has received very few such complaints.

²⁹ See CAT, 'General Comment No 3 on the Implementation of Article 14 by States Parties' (2012) UN Doc CAT/C/GC/3, para 3, which states 'Victims are persons who have individually or collectively suffered harm, including physical or mental injury, emotional suffering, economic loss or substantial impairment of their fundamental rights, through acts or omissions that constitute violations of the Convention'.

3.2.2 Meaning of 'victim'

21 Complaints can only be submitted by or on behalf of a victim, generally a person who is directly affected by a violation of a provision of the Convention by a State party. The victim requirement aims at preventing an actio popularis, ie the challenging of a law, State policy or practice in the abstract without demonstrating how the alleged victim is individually affected. In this regard, the Committee clarified that to be victims and, thus, have legal standing individuals have to be 'personally and directly affected by the alleged breach in question'.³¹ For example, in Rosenmann v Spain, concerning a Spanish citizen of Chilean origin claiming that Spain had violated Articles 5, 8, 9, 13, and 14 by failing to investigate and prosecute alleged acts of torture falling within its jurisdiction and to pursue the extradition proceedings to the furthest extent possible, the Committee found that the victim requirement was not met. The main reason for this was that the complainant was not a civil party to the criminal proceedings in Spain against the alleged offender (General Pinochet) nor did his case form part of the Spanish extradition request. In other words, the Committee noted that 'even if General Pinochet had been extradited to Spain, the complainant's situation would not have been materially altered (at least without further legal action on the complainant's part)'. The fact that he had standing under Spanish law to join the case if he wished did not seem to be relevant for the Committee, as the complainant had failed to demonstrate that he was a victim of the alleged failure of the State 'at the time of the communication'.³²

22 More recently, however, the question arose as to whether the Convention also covers indirect victims. For what concerns Article 14, this issue has been addressed by the Committee in its General Comment No 3, where it was clarified that the notion of victim extends to 'affected immediate family or dependants of the victim as well as persons who have suffered harm in intervening to assist victims or to prevent victimization'.³³ Similarly, under Article 14(1), dependants are entitled to compensation in case of death of the direct victim.³⁴

23 More in general, since the CAT, as a specialized treaty aimed at strengthening the universally recognized absolute prohibition of torture and other forms of ill-treatment, primarily contains procedural obligations of States, the question arises whether any non-compliance with such obligations necessarily produces victims with the right to submit an individual complaint to hold the respective State party accountable. A victim is a person whose human rights have been violated by a State party. Consequently, the right to submit a complaint under Article 22 only refers to violations of CAT provisions which entail subjective rights of individuals. Every right of an individual creates a corresponding obligation of States, but not every obligation of States corresponds to a particular individual right. The obligation to submit periodic State reports certainly belongs to the second category, and nobody has the right to submit a complaint alleging to be a victim of a violation of Article 19. On the other hand, the prohibition of refoulement under Article 3 is a subjective right which can be enforced by the victims through individual complaints, as the rich case law of the Committee in relation to Article 3 illustrates. But for certain provisions, it is difficult to assess whether an alleged violation had a direct effect on a particular person who would therefore meet the victim requirement. Often, this can only be decided on a case-by-case basis taking into account all circumstances of the specific case.³⁵

24 In this regard it may be useful to look at the Committee's jurisprudence. Strictly speaking, the Convention does not contain a specific right not to be subjected to torture or other forms of ill-treatment. But a person who has been subjected to torture can claim to be a victim of a violation of the respective State party's obligation under Article 2 to take effective measures to prevent torture. In such cases, the Committee normally finds a violation of Article 2 alone or in conjunction with Article 1.³⁶ Similarly, in the case of other forms of ill-treatment, the Committee found violations of the States' obligations to prevent such acts in accordance with Article 16.³⁷ Thus far the Committee has equally found violations of the obligations enshrined by Articles 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15.³⁸ Several questions remain with regard to Article 10. Does the failure of a State party to include the prohibition of torture in the training of staff at a particular prison in clear violation of Article 10 constitute a legitimate subject of a complaint by every detainee of this prison, or only by detainees who have been tortured, or does the victim have to prove that the lack of training was the decisive reason for his or her being subjected to torture? Those questions have not yet been addressed by the Committee.³⁹

25 More difficult to answer is the question whether a failure of a State party to criminalize torture with appropriate penalties under domestic law in accordance with Article 4 or to establish the respective types of jurisdiction, including universal jurisdiction, in accordance with all requirements laid down in Articles 5 to 9, and to bring alleged perpetrators of torture to justice constitutes a violation of respective rights of torture victims. In the leading case of Guridi v Spain, the Committee admitted a claim of torture victims and found a violation of Article 4 in view of the much too lenient measures taken by the Spanish authorities against the perpetrators.⁴⁰ Similarly, in the Hissène Habré case, the Committee found violations of Articles 5 and 7 CAT by Senegal for its failure to establish universal jurisdiction in its criminal justice system and to take respective action either to extradite the former dictator of Chad to Belgium or to bring him to justice before Senegalese courts.⁴¹ On the other hand, in Rosenmann v Spain, the Committee denied that a victim of the Pinochet regime had a right under Articles 5(1)(c), 8 and 9 such that the Spanish authorities should insist on the extradition of General Pinochet from the United Kingdom to Spain.⁴²

3.2.3 Meaning of 'on behalf of individuals'

26 Complaints may also be submitted 'on behalf of individuals'. These words were inserted already in the Swedish draft of 1981 on the basis of the experience with many complaints which had been submitted to the HRC on behalf of detainees in Uruguay by family members who had fled the country.⁴³ The RoP give some guidance on how this could be interpreted providing that '[t]he complaint should be submitted by the individual himself/herself or by his/her relatives or designated representatives, or by others on behalf of an alleged victim when it appears that the victim is unable personally to submit the complaint and, when appropriate authorization is submitted to the Committee'.⁴⁴

27 Unlike Rule 110 on the conditions for registration, Rule 113 does not require that relatives bringing the complaint be 'close' to the victim. Although the admissibility language seems more inclusive, in practice during the admissibility phase the Committee may apply the standards more strictly than at the registration stage.⁴⁵

28 In addition, Rule 113 provides for a residual category of unspecified 'other persons' that may act on behalf of the victim. More specifically, Rule 113(a), as modified in 2002, provides that 'other persons' can only act on behalf of a victim 'when appropriate authorization is submitted to the Committee'. The amendment setting up a much stricter criteria for the concept of 'other persons' aimed at minimizing the risk of persons acting without good reasons or even against the intentions of the victim.⁴⁶ The previous text of the Rule, in fact, stated

[t]he communication should be submitted by the individual himself or by his relatives or designated representatives or by others on behalf of an alleged victim when it appears that the victim is unable to submit the communication himself, and the author of the communication justifies his acting on the victim's behalf.⁴⁷

29 The standing requirement was interpreted by the Committee in JHA v Spain. In this case, the complaints were lodged by a member of a Spanish NGO acting on behalf of a number of Indian citizens held in detention outside Spain (in Mauritania) but under Spanish de facto control. Although recognizing Spain's jurisdiction, the Committee declared the case inadmissible due to the lack of standing (locus standi) of the complainant.⁴⁸ The Committee found that the alleged victims should have expressly authorized the complainant to approach the Committee on their behalf, unless it was impossible for them to do so, given the situation. In the present case, the Committee did not find it to be impossible to obtain express authorization, especially because the alleged victims had previously provided authorization to lodge a domestic appeal to the Spanish Commission for Refugee Assistance, and had been interviewed by representatives of various international and NGOs during their detention.⁴⁹

30 If the reasons beyond the 2002 amendments to Rule 113 are understandable, one should similarly avoid to apply the standing requirement in a too restrictive manner as

⁴⁵ On the registration criteria see also below §§ 134–43.

⁴⁶ The Rule was amended by CAT Committee at its twenty-eighth Session in 2002 (CAT/C/3/Rev.4), and then confirmed by the Committee at its Fiftieth Sessions (CAT/C/3/Rev.6); see also Vandenhoe (n 35) 260.

this may frustrate the very reason of why this provision was adopted. It is clear from this provision that complaints may be submitted directly by the victim, by duly authorized representatives (lawyers, NGOs, or other representatives explicitly authorized by the victim), or by other persons who are not explicitly authorized by the victim but who act on the victim's behalf because he or she is unable personally to submit a complaint. This is the case, for example, if a torture victim is held incommunicado, has disappeared, if he or she has been tortured to death, or has been disabled, or for similarly serious reasons is unable to act personally. In such exceptional cases, relatives, close friends, or other persons may submit a complaint on behalf of the victim, but they must justify this with good reasons. It is, therefore, recommended that the wording 'appropriate authorization' should be interpreted in a broad sense of justifying why the author is unable to provide a proper authorization by the victim.

3.3 Article 22(1): Individuals Subject to Its Jurisdiction

31 In order to submit a complaint to the Committee, an individuals must be subject to that State party's jurisdiction. The concept of jurisdiction of States parties goes beyond their immediate territory and also applies to persons and territories where authorities of the respective State party exercise 'directly or indirectly, in whole or in part, de jure or de facto effective control, in accordance with international law'.⁵⁰ The Committee has further clarified this concept with regard to interception measures. In JHA v Spain, it stipulated that the broad interpretation of the concept of jurisdiction is applicable not only 'in respect of article 2, but of all provisions of the Convention, including article 22'.⁵¹ In this case, the Committee recognized Spain's jurisdiction with regard to a complaint lodged on behalf of a number of Indian citizens who were rescued in international waters by a Spanish vessel and, after days of negotiations between the Spanish and Mauritanian authorities, disembarked in Mauritania in the port of Nouadhibou, where they were held in detention in a former fish-processing plant. Given these circumstances, the Committee found that Spain had indeed exercised constant de facto control over the complainants 'from the time the vessel was rescued and throughout the identification and repatriation process that took place at Nouadhibou', and it had done so 'by virtue of a diplomatic agreement concluded with Mauritania'.⁵² Similarly, in Sonko v Spain the Committee concluded that the complainants were subject to Spain's jurisdiction due to the control exercised by Spanish officers on board the vessel, despite the interception measure was performed in the territorial waters of another State (Morocco).⁵³

32 The issue as to how the term 'individuals subject to its jurisdiction' within the meaning of Article 22 should be interpreted arose in two leading cases on universal criminal jurisdiction. In the Guengueng et al v Senegal case, Senegal argued that the communication invoking Articles 5 and 7 was inadmissible because the torture acts alleged by the complainant were suffered by foreign nationals, had occurred in a foreign country and were committed by a foreign actor. Senegal further argued that the complainants were not subject to its jurisdiction under Article 22, since in such cases its domestic law did not allow to lodge a complaint before Senegalese courts regardless of the victims' nationality.⁵⁴ In this case, however, the Committee rejected Senegal's arguments, holding that in order to establish whether a communication falls within the jurisdiction of a State party under Article 22, various factors that are not confined to the complainant's nationality must be considered. The Committee also noted that Senegal did not 'dispute that the authors were the plaintiffs in the proceedings brought against Hissène Habré in Senegal' and considered that, as required by domestic law, the complainants had accepted Senegalese jurisdiction in order to pursue the proceedings against Habré, which they instituted. Based mainly on these considerations, the Committee found that the complainants were indeed subject to the jurisdiction of Senegal for the purpose of Article 22 and thus declared the communication admissible.⁵⁵ Without elaborating further, the Committee concluded by saying that 'the principle of universal jurisdiction enunciated in article 5 ... and article 7 of the Convention implies that the jurisdiction of States parties must extend to potential complainants in circumstances similar to the complainants'.⁵⁶

33 The issue of jurisdiction within the meaning of Article 22 arose again in HBA v Canada. In this case, Mr Bush (former President of the US) travelled to Toronto to give a talk. The complainants, alleging to be torture victims of the CIA detention programme, argued that the presence of Mr Bush in the territory of Canada triggered universal jurisdiction. The complainants' counsel called upon the Attorney General of Canada to launch a criminal investigation against Mr Bush for his role in authorizing and overseeing his administration's torture programme. As no reply had been provided, the complainants' counsel attempted to file information to commence private prosecution, a procedure allowed under Canadian law.⁵⁷ Such procedure was, however, ultimately stayed. Mr Bush was not questioned, investigated, or prosecuted by the Canadian authorities who also did not take any measure to secure his presence, hence he returned to the US. Under these circumstances, the complainants claimed that Canada had violated Articles 5, 6, and 7 CAT. In this case, the Committee reiterated the argument made in Guengueng et al v Senegal that various factors that are not only confined to the complainant's nationality should be considered, and specified that 'a decisive factor is whether the complainant has accepted the jurisdiction of a particular State party in order to pursue the proceedings that the complainant has initiated against an alleged perpetrator of torture'.⁵⁸ When applying such principles to the present case, the Committee observed that Canada, contrary to Senegal, had disputed that the complainants were party to the private prosecution brought against Mr Bush in Canada.⁵⁹ It further noted that the complainants, who were

On 4 July 2000, the Indictment Division dismissed the charge against Hissène Habré and the related proceedings on the grounds of lack of jurisdiction, affirming that 'Senegalese courts cannot take cognizance of acts of torture committed by a foreigner outside Senegalese territory, regardless of the nationality of the victims: the wording of article 669 of the Code of Criminal Procedure excludes any such jurisdiction.' The decision was later confirmed by the Senegalese Supreme Court.

⁵⁸ HBA et al v Canada, No 536/2013 (n 56) para 9.7.

⁵⁹ Canada argued that victims of torture were not 'party' to the prosecution because they did not show that they were present in Canada's territory nor that they had accepted its jurisdiction and therefore could be said to have accepted or be subject to the State's jurisdiction within the meaning of Article 22(1). In this last regard, Canada maintained that 'a person seeking to commence a private prosecution must appear before the judge who receives the information as the laying of criminal charges proceeds by an individual swearing to the listed as victims of torture, did not show to have authorized the person who submitted the information before the Canadian prosecution (the Director of the Canadian Centre for International Justice) to act as their legal representative before Canadian authorities.⁶⁰

34 While the two cases mentioned above provide some guidance for the interpretation of this provision in cases of criminal universal jurisdiction, various questions remain. Namely, what requirements need to be fulfilled by a complainant in order to be considered a 'party' of a criminal proceeding for the purpose of establishing jurisdiction under Article 22? Does the Committee consider that the acceptance of the State's jurisdiction within the meaning of Article 22 can be exercised by victims of torture that are not present on the territory of the State party through a legal representative? In replying to those questions it will be of utmost importance not to set up too strict requirements, as this would risk, on the one side, to weaken the States obligations under Articles 5, 6, and 7 and, on the other side, to frustrate the subjective rights of victims of torture, above all, the victims' right to bring a complaint before the Committee.

3.4 Article 22(2): Inadmissibility of Anonymous Complaints

35 As established by Article 22(2) a complaint shall not be anonymous. It is a general rule of individual complaints procedures under international law that the identity of the applicant must be revealed to the authorities of the State party, otherwise, the State party would not be in a position to investigate and respond properly to the allegations. Rule 104(b) suggests that anonymous complaints are not even registered by the Secretariat, in that they do not fulfil the criteria for registration.⁶¹ Yet under Rule 105(a) the Secretariat may also request clarification from anonymous applicants as to their name, address, age, occupation, and the verification of their identity. A combined reading of these provisions seems to suggest that in order to comply with Article 22(2) the Committee and at least its Rapporteur on new complaints must have an opportunity to review such a decision of the Secretariat.⁶²

36 The need to reveal the identity of applicants to the respondent State party and the Committee does, however, not require to reveal the identity of all applicants to the public. Upon request the Committee will normally agree to keep a complainant's identity anonymous to the public in both inadmissibility and decisions on the merits.⁶³

truth of the information and any supporting facts; the individual must be within the jurisdiction of the court for purposes of enforcement of any orders against them, inter alia so that they may be held accountable for malicious prosecution' (see HBA et al v Canada, No 536/2013 (n 56) paras 9.7, 4.11, 4.12, 6.1, 6.2). On the other side, the applicants claimed that 'by ratifying and implementing the Convention, including enacting legislation to exercise its jurisdiction over alleged torturers present in its territory, and lodging a declaration under Article 22, Canada accepted jurisdiction over all victims of alleged torturers present in Canada ... This is to say that when an alleged torturer is present in territory of a State party and thus falls within the jurisdiction of that State, its jurisdiction extends to all victims of alleged torturer because any of those victims is a potential complainant' (see the submission of the complainants of 17 July 2014 submitted by the CCR and the CCIJ <<https://ccrjustice.org/sites/default/files/assets/17%20July%202014%20Final%20Reply%20UN%20CAT%20CCR%20CCIJ.pdf>> accessed 2 November 2017).

3.5 Article 22(2): Abuse of the Right of Submission

37 Inadmissibility on grounds of abuse is an exception in the practice of the Committee.⁶⁴ As with the HRC, the CAT Committee is extremely reluctant to make use of its power under Article 22(2) and Rule 113(b) to declare a complaint inadmissible because of considering it as an abuse of the right to submit a complaint. So far, the Committee has rarely dismissed a complaint on grounds that the complaint constitute an abuse of right.⁶⁵

38 In order for a complaint to be inadmissible for abuse of right, the Committee requires that one of the following conditions are met: (1) the submission amount to a malice or a display of bad faith or intent at least to mislead, or be frivolous; or (2) the acts or admissions referred to must have nothing to do with the Convention.⁶⁶ Typical examples of abusing the right of submitting a complaint are attempts to mislead the Committee with incorrect information, the use of extremely insulting and offensive language, or facts which show that the applicant is not taking the procedure seriously at all.

39 In contrast, complaints concerning related victims and similar, but not identical facts are not re-submissions of an already decided issue, and do not, therefore, constitute abuse of process.⁶⁷ Furthermore, in Thabti v Tunisia, Abdelli v Tunisia, and Ltaief v Tunisia, the Committee rejected the State party's arguments that complainants had abused their right to submit communications by virtue of their alleged political and partisan commitments.⁶⁸ In response to Tunisia's further allegations that the complaints constituted defamation and thus, also abuse of procedure, the Committee noted that reports of torture were always serious and could not be deemed defamatory without a review on the merits.⁶⁹

3.6 Manifestly Unfounded

40 Although not explicitly provided for in Article 22, Rule 113(b) regulates the inadmissibility ground of manifestly unfounded complaints. As with the HRC,⁷⁰ the CAT Committee applied this controversial inadmissibility ground and rejected as inadmissible a number of cases where it considered the complaint to lack sufficient evidence to substantiate the applicant's claim. As will be seen below, this bar to admission has been used mainly in the rejection of Article 3 claims but also other Convention Articles such as Article 16.

41 Sometimes, it is difficult to distinguish between manifestly unfounded complaints and those declared inadmissible as incompatible ratione materiae,⁷¹ and both inadmissibility grounds usually involve the risk of deciding questions on the merits at the admissibility stage. Since the CAT Committee usually combines both questions in one decision, this risk is less serious than with other procedures. To avoid such risk, the Committee has often decided that that ‘the arguments before it raise substantive issues which should be dealt with on the merits and not on admissibility considerations alone’.⁷²

42 Similarly, it is not always easy to identify what standards the Committee applies to determine whether or not a complaint is sufficiently substantiated in accordance to Rule 113(b), especially because normally the Committee gives very few details as to why a certain conclusion is reached.⁷³ From the case law, it emerges that the Committee has declared complaints inadmissible on this ground mainly when they provided almost no evidence or arguments at all; or when the evidence or arguments provided were insufficient to substantiate the claim.

43 In the first category, the Committee has normally rejected complaints as inadmissible because they fail to raise to the basic level of substantiation required for purposes of admissibility,⁷⁴ especially when the complainants had ample opportunity to provide evidence before domestic authority. The same conclusion was reached when no ‘fresh evidence’ casting doubts on the findings of the domestic authorities was submitted.⁷⁵

44 More controversial are, instead, decisions rejecting complaints for failing to provide sufficient evidence or arguments to substantiate the claim.⁷⁶ In conducting such an assessment the Committee has, for example, taken into consideration whether the complaint included a detailed and punctual description of the facts, the legal proceedings/complaints initiated against the alleged violations, and their results;⁷⁷ but above all whether the complainant had submitted any corroborating documentary evidence supporting the claim,⁷⁸ such as a copy of the domestic judgment,⁷⁹ and especially medical evidence.⁸⁰

45 For example, in its jurisprudence on Article 3, in RS v Denmark the Committee has rejected the complaint for failing to establish a prima facie case because the complainant had not provided evidence supporting the claim that he was politically active, or explaining why the political group he worked for was targeted by the State.⁸¹ Moreover, even if provided, the Committee may find that medical evidence is not sufficient if it is inconclusive about the reasons underlying the complainant's physical and psychological symptoms,⁸² or if it substantiates only past incidents of torture, without providing sufficient proof or argument as to why the alleged victim would be at risk in the future.⁸³

46 For cases invoking Article 16 in relation to medical care while in detention, the Committee further considered whether the complainant submitted any medical or other evidence concerning the medical treatment received while in detention or any deterioration of the victim's state of health as well as information on any complaints he/she might have lodged.⁸⁴ This ground was equally applied in regard to Article 16 cases alleging that a return measure to the country of origin of the complainant would constitute a violation of Article 16 per se due to the complainant's state of health.⁸⁵ In these cases, the Committee has consistently repeated that an aggravation of the condition of an individual's physical or mental health by virtue of a deportation is generally insufficient, in the absence of additional factors, to amount to a violation of Article 16.⁸⁶ In its assessment the Committee also considered whether health care was available in the country of origin.⁸⁷

3.7 Article 22(2): Incompatibility with the Provisions of the Convention

47 Pursuant to Article 22(2) and Rule 113(c), the Committee shall consider inadmissible any complaints which are incompatible with the provisions of the Convention. As with other complaints procedures, there are four incompatibility grounds: ratione personae, materiae, loci, and temporis.⁸⁸

3.7.1 Ratione personae

48 Incompatibility ratione personae deals with the requirements of active and passive legitimacy of complaints.

49 Active legitimacy concerns the legal standing of the complainant. This means that the Committee may dismiss complaints on the basis of this ground if they are not submitted by an individual who is a victim of a Convention's violation or on his/her behalf.⁸⁹

50 Passive legitimacy concerns the State party against which a complaint has been lodged before the Committee and can encompass various situations: first, this grounds allows the Committee to dismiss complaints that are submitted against States that have not ratified the Convention or States that have ratified the Convention but have not made the optional declaration under that Article 22 and, hence, do not recognize the competence of the Committee to receive and consider individual complaints. Second, complaints directed against other States or against non-State actors are to be declared inadmissible ratione personae, if they are not imputable to the State party in question.⁹⁰ In this regard, in Roitman Rosenmann v Spain the Committee declared the claim inadmissible ratione personae because in the circumstances of the case Spain was neither the State responsible for the acts of torture, nor the State in whose territory General Pinochet was found at the time of the submission of the communication.⁹¹ In doing so, it seems that the Committee considered Articles 13 and 14 justiciable vis-à-vis only either the State responsible for the acts of torture or the other States in whose territory the alleged torturer may be found. Similarly, complaints directed against non-State actors, such as private individuals, business corporations, insurgent groups, inter-governmental, or non-governmental organizations, are to be declared inadmissible as incompatible ratione personae.⁹² This does not, of course, rule out State responsibility for violations of the Convention by non-State actors, as torture and other forms of ill-treatment can also be committed by mere acquiescence.

3.7.2 Ratione materiae

51 The purpose of the individual complaints system under Article 22 is that victims claim violations by States parties of provisions of the Convention against Torture. Complaints alleging violations of provisions falling outside the scope of the Convention or covered by other treaties will, therefore, be declared inadmissible as incompatible ratione materiae. In Roitman Rosenmann v Spain, for example, the Committee decided that Spain had no obligation under the Convention to request the extradition of General Pinochet from the United Kingdom, and that the complaint was, therefore, incompatible ratione materiae with the respective provisions of the CAT.⁹³ The Committee, referring to Article 5(1)(c), considered that the latter provision establishes a discretionary faculty rather than a mandatory obligation to make, and insist upon, an extradition request.⁹⁴ This decision strongly resembles a decision on the merits.

52 Sometimes, inadmissibility decisions based on this incompatibility ground address difficult questions regarding the scope of application of a particular provision. In TM v Sweden, the Committee ruled that the scope of the non-refoulement obligation under Article 3 only covers the risk of torture, but does not extend to the risk of other forms of ill-treatment in accordance with Article 16. Consequently, the claims relating to the expulsion of the applicant were declared incompatible ratione materiae already at the admissibility stage.⁹⁵ In other situations, however, the Committee addressed such issue within

The decision to declare the case inadmissible ratione materiae due to the fact that the article did not apply to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment was criticized in an individual dissenting opinion of the Member Mr Fernando Mariño Menéndez, who maintained that the Committee should have ruled ‘in keeping with the Committee’s jurisprudence in case BS v Canada (Case No 166/2000, Decision adopted on 14 November 2001) it would, in my judgement, have been more correct to find that the complaint raised substantive issues relating to a possible violation of article 16 which should be dealt with at the merits and not at the admissibility stage.’ See also Vandenhoe (n 35) 264.

the considerations on the merits.⁹⁶ In Kirsanov v Russia, for example, the Committee rejected the claims under Articles 14 and 15 when considering the merits of the case and held that the scope of application of the said provisions only refers to torture in the sense of Article 1 of the Convention and does not cover other forms of ill-treatment.⁹⁷

53 In Z v Switzerland the Committee equally declared the case outside the scope of Article 3 and, hence, inadmissible ratione materiae the claim from an applicant who, despite holding a short-term residence permit in Switzerland on the basis of his wife's employment, argued to be at risk of refoulement to Armenia because his wife could lose her job and the permit was renewable only on a yearly basis with the sponsorship of his wife's employer. In this case, the Committee clarified that 'a complainant cannot be entitled to a protection under a particular legal status such as asylum if such protection can instead be guaranteed through other kinds of legal arrangements' and that 'having obtained a residence permit, the author is no longer at risk of removal'.⁹⁸

3.7.3 Ratione temporis

54 It is a generally recognized principle of international law that a treaty is not applicable to situations that took place or ceased to exist prior to entry into force of the treaty in the State concerned. Consequently a complaint must refer to an alleged violation of the Convention provisions which took place after the entry into force of the Convention for the State in question. The ratione temporis condition was reaffirmed by the Committee in its decision in OR, MM and MS v Argentina, which stated that the provisions of the Convention did not cover torture that took place in 1977, ten years before the entry into force of the Convention, thus declaring the communications inadmissible.⁹⁹

55 But the Committee is entitled to deal with complaints when the Convention continues to be violated following its entry into force or when effects constituting a violation first became evident after this date.¹⁰⁰ For example, if an applicant, who was tortured shortly before the entry into force of the Convention, complained about the fact that his/her complaints were not properly investigated, that the perpetrators were not brought to justice, and that he did not receive adequate reparation, and if this situation continued after the entry into force of the Convention, the Committee may find violations of the respective obligations under Articles 12, 13, 14, and 7 CAT.

56 More controversial is the question whether the Committee may examine violations of the Convention that occurred after entry into force of the Convention but prior to entry into force of Article 22, ie if a State first becomes party to the Convention and only later accepts the individual complaints procedure.

57 By way of a declaration, certain States parties have explicitly limited the right to submit individual communications concerning situations that have taken place after entry into force of Article 22.¹⁰¹ For these States parties individual complaints concerning such situations are normally considered inadmissible ratione temporis. But the question remains for States parties that have not made such a declaration. The HRC tends to apply this interpretation even to States which have ratified the first OP to the CCPR without making any specific declaration, although this jurisprudence is controversial.¹⁰²

58 To a certain extent, the issue was addressed by the CAT Committee in Gerasimov v Kazakhstan.¹⁰³ As Kazakhstan ratified the Convention in 1998 but made the declaration under Article 22 only on 21 February 2008, the question arose as to whether the Committee was competent in deciding on complaints alleging violations occurred after the ratification of the Convention but before the declaration under Article 22. In this case, the Committee stated that although a State Party's obligations under the Convention apply from the date of its entry into force for that State party ... it can examine alleged violations of the Convention which occurred before a State party's recognition of the Committee's competence under article 22 if the effects of these violations continued after the declaration, and if the effects constitute in themselves a violation of the Convention.¹⁰⁴

For this purpose, the Committee considered that 'a continuing violation must be interpreted as an affirmation, after the formulation of the declaration, by act or by clear implication, of the previous violations of the State party.'¹⁰⁵ This approach was also confirmed in General Comment No 4.¹⁰⁶

59 So far, however, the Committee has not yet had the chance to specifically address the issue with regard to violations with no continuing effect. On this point, Ingelse seems to follow the HRC approach when he asserts that 'the alleged violation must have been committed after formal acceptance by the State party in question of the Committee's competence to receive individual complaints with respect to that State'.¹⁰⁷ To conclude, the date of entry into force of Article 22 is relevant only with respect to the right of victims to submit a complaint.¹⁰⁸ In other words, if a State ratified the Convention in 2000 and made the declaration under Article 22 in 2004, an individual who was tortured in 2003 may submit a complaint in 2005, and the Committee is competent to deal with this complaint even if the practice of torture ceased in 2003 and had no continuing effect in 2004.

3.7.4 Ratione loci

60 Article 2(1) CAT clearly establishes the obligation of States parties to prevent acts of torture 'in any territory under its jurisdiction'. The CAT Committee has interpreted this provision in its General Comment No 2, clarifying that a State party's jurisdiction includes any territory where the State party exercises, directly or indirectly, in whole or in part, de jure or de facto effective control, in accordance with international law.¹⁰⁹ De facto effective control of the State party may include for example occupation, leasing of territory, or simply by carrying out of sovereign actions on foreign territory, by military, police, intelligence, diplomatic, or other authorities.¹¹⁰ It follows that complaints against actions taken by agents of a State party abroad shall not be declared inadmissible as being incompatible ratione loci.

61 Article 22(1) mirrors this interpretation by granting the Committee the competence to deal with complaints of individuals ‘subject to its jurisdiction’, ie of the respective State party. Unlike Article 2, the wording of Article 22 does not refer to the wording ‘any territory under its jurisdiction’ but only to ‘jurisdiction’. This calls for an even broader interpretation of jurisdiction. Whilst the Committee has used several time Article 22(1) to declare a complaint inadmissible, it has so far not declared any complaint inadmissible on ground of incompatibility ratione loci.

3.8 Article 22(5)(a): Examination under Another Procedure

62 According to Article 22(5)(a) and Rule 113(2)(d), the Committee does consider communications only if it ascertains that the same matter ‘has not been, and is not being, examined under another procedure of international investigation or settlement’.

3.8.1 Meaning of ‘another procedure of international investigation or settlement’

63 The term ‘another procedure of international investigation or settlement’ covers only individual complaints procedures under international or regional human rights treaties, such as the ECHR, ACHR, first OP to CCPR, CERD, CMW, CED, OP to CRPD, and the OP to CEDAW, as well as certain ILO procedures.¹¹¹ With regard to other UN bodies, the Committee has consistently held that extra-conventional procedures or mechanisms established by the Commission on Human Rights or the Human Rights Council, whose mandates are to examine and report publicly on human rights situations in specific countries or territories or on cases of widespread human rights violations worldwide, do not generally constitute an international procedure of investigation or settlement within the meaning of article 22, paragraph 5 (a), of the Convention.¹¹²

64 Not covered by the inadmissibility ground of Article 22(5)(a) are, for example, all reporting and inquiry procedures as well as complaints procedures before the UN Human Rights Council and its special procedures, such as for example the Special Rapporteur on Torture¹¹³ and the Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary, or arbitrary executions.¹¹⁴ The Geneva Refugee Convention or the Statute of the UNHCR does not provide for a procedure for international investigation or settlement which might prevent the CAT Committee from examining an allegation of a violation of the non-refoulement principle under Article 3.¹¹⁵ Also the procedures of preventive visits to places of detention before the European Committee for the Prevention of Torture¹¹⁶ or the UN Subcommittee on Prevention of Torture are not considered procedures of settlement or investigation according to Article 22(5)(a). Moreover, since the same matter must relate to allegations of torture or other forms of ill-treatment, the application of this provision is further limited. For example, the Committee has observed that the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention is not a 'procedure' within the meaning of Article 22(5)(a) also because its mandate concerns, ratione materiae, the issue of arbitrary deprivation of liberty and not torture.¹¹⁷

3.8.2 Meaning of 'has not been, and is not being'

65 The wording of Article 22(5)(a) shows that this provision applies not only to complaints that are simultaneously being examined under another comparable procedure but also to those that have been examined in the past. In comparison with the first OP to the CCPR, which prevents the HRC from considering individual complaints only if the same matter is simultaneously 'being examined' under another comparable procedure,¹¹⁸ Article 22(5)(a) CAT is broader and extends this inadmissibility ground also to any previous examination of the same matter by another procedure of international investigation or settlement.¹¹⁹

66 The Committee's jurisprudence on this aspect is not always consistent. Some clarifications on the meaning of 'being examined' were given by the Committee in the 2008 case of Keremedchiev v Bulgaria.¹²⁰ There, notwithstanding that an application on the same matter was pending before the ECtHR, the Committee considered the case as admissible. In doing so, it noted that, by the time the complaint was lodged before the Committee, the application before the ECtHR had been only registered but not yet communicated to the Government. For this reason, it held that the complaint could not be seen as 'being' or 'having been' considered under another procedure of international investigation or settlement.¹²¹ However, in other instances the Committee rejected cases still pending before the ECtHR without considering whether or not they were communicated to the respective Government.¹²² Furthermore, the Committee did not consider inadmissible the claim of a complainant who had already lodged an application before the ECtHR but then withdrawn it before it was examined, even though the ECtHR had already rejected the applicant's request for interim measures.¹²³ This practice has been criticized as it contributes to the multiplication of international procedures on the same matter by leaving open the possibility for complainants to first lodge an application and request for interim measures in Strasbourg and, then, should this be unsuccessful, try before the Committee.¹²⁴

3.8.3 Meaning of 'examined'

67 The most difficult question of interpretation is what the term 'examined' under another international procedure means. The Committee's jurisprudence sheds little light on the issue.

68 If the ECtHR or Inter-American Court of Human Rights (IACHR) have considered on the merits the torture allegations of the same applicant and found that the treatment suffered by the applicant amounted neither to torture nor to other forms of ill treatment, then the same matter has certainly been examined by a competent body and the CAT Committee shall declare the complaint inadmissible.

69 Yet if the ECtHR or the IACHR have declared this application inadmissible, it is much more difficult to assess whether the same matter was in fact examined. Certain inadmissibility grounds, such as the six-month time limit in Article 35(1) ECHR and Article 46(1)(b) ACHR, simply do not exist in Article 22 CAT and a dismissal of a complaint on this ground does not prevent the CAT Committee from considering such a case.¹²⁵ This holds true for most other inadmissibility grounds, even if similar provisions can be found in Article 22 CAT. The fact that the ECtHR declared the complaint of the same applicant as incompatible with the ECHR ratione temporis or ratione personae may have no relevance as the CAT may have entered into force for the State party concerned before the ECHR and the State concerned may be a party to the CAT but not to the ECHR. In other words, the CAT Committee shall only consider an inadmissibility decision by another monitoring body as having examined the same matter if it is sure that it really concerned the same inadmissibility requirement, such as the non-exhaustion of domestic remedies. But even in such a case it might be more prudent to rely on Article 22(5)(b) than on Article 22(5)(a).¹²⁶

70 In practice, the Committee is reluctant to declare inadmissible complaints that have been rejected only for procedural reasons by the other international bodies and seems to interpret the term 'examined' as requiring at least some examination on the merits of the case. In respect to the IACHR, the Committee held that the decision of the IACHR to lift the provisional measures and archive the file, indicating that 'in this matter there is no related individual petition being processed before the Commission', did not involve any consideration of the merits of the case and, thus, held that such procedures did not constitute an examination of the matter within the meaning of Article 22(5)(a).¹²⁷ Similarly, in respect to the ECtHR, the Committee accepted a complaint when the previous application before the ECtHR has been rejected 'on procedural grounds' and without a clear examination of the merits. In doing so, the Committee has taken in particular consideration the fact that the ECtHR's inadmissibility decision had a very limited reasoning and only stated that the admissibility requirements set out in articles 34 and 35 of the ECHR had not been met. Such limited reasoning, the Committee held, did not allow to conclude that the ECHR had 'examined the complainant's application, including whether it conducted a thorough analysis of the elements related to the merits of the case'.¹²⁸ On the other hand, if the ECtHR explicitly has declared the applications before it inadmissible on grounds that they 'do not disclose any appearance of violation of the rights and freedom set out in the Convention', the CAT Committee concludes that the ECtHR's decision is not 'solely based on mere procedural issues, but on reasons that indicate a sufficient consideration of the merits of the case' and declares the communications before it inadmissible under Article 22 (5)(a).¹²⁹

3.8.4 Meaning of 'same matter'

71 With regard to the requirement of 'the same matter', the Committee has followed the jurisprudence of the HRC by stating that the term must be understood as relating to 'the same parties,¹³⁰ the same facts and the same substantive rights'.¹³¹

72 In principle, the possibility for the Committee to review its earlier inadmissibility decision in accordance with Rule 116(2) also applies to cases which were declared inadmissible under Article 22(5)(a). Since Article 22(5)(a) also applies to previous examinations by another monitoring body it is difficult to imagine a case in which the earlier reasons for inadmissibility 'no longer apply'. In fact, this rule primarily, if not exclusively, applies to the exhaustion of domestic remedies requirement in Article 22(5)(b).

3.9 Article 22(5) (b): Exhaustion of Domestic Remedies

73 It is a generally recognized principle of international law that international human rights monitoring bodies can only be resorted to once all national appeals instances have failed to provide relief.¹³² The aim of such a rule is to allow national authorities to address Convention violations first within their domestic systems.

74 The Convention against Torture contains quite a number of domestic remedies for torture victims which States parties are required to provide and implement. For example, any torture complaint shall be promptly and impartially examined by a competent authority under Article 13, perpetrators of torture shall be brought to justice under criminal laws,¹³³ and torture victims are guaranteed by Article 14 a comprehensive right to obtain redress and adequate reparation, including as full rehabilitation as possible.

75 Despite these extensive obligations, torture victims in many countries do not enjoy any effective remedies and even if such remedies exist in theory, they are often put under strong pressure not to lodge any complaints regarding their torture experiences.¹³⁴ This is the reason why Article 22(5)(b) and Rule 113(e) provide that the exhaustion of domestic remedies rule shall not be applied if the respective remedy ‘is unreasonably prolonged or is unlikely to bring effective relief to the person who is the victim of the violation of this Convention’.¹³⁵

76 It is difficult in practice for the Committee to strike a fair balance between the requirement that domestic remedies must be exhausted before lodging a complaint under Article 22 and the practical problems faced by many applicants in a considerable number of States parties. This applies not only to the situation in countries where torture actually is widely practised, but also to countries that wish to expel applicants to other countries where a real risk exists that they will be subjected to torture after return.

77 Though it is difficult to develop general rules of interpretation from the Committee’s jurisprudence, as decisions have to be taken on a case-by-case basis taking into account all relevant circumstances of the case, the following paragraph provides an illustration of the most important aspects of the Committee’s practice of the application of non-exhaustion rule. The analysis of the rich case law of the Committee shows that, despite certain inconsistencies, the Committee has succeeded in striking a fair balance between the legitimate interest of States that applicants make use of reasonable remedies they offer, and the convincing arguments of many applicants that effective remedies were either not available at all, would unreasonably prolong the proceedings, or would be unlikely to bring effective relief.

3.9.2 Meaning of ‘all available domestic remedies’

3.9.2.1 Compliance with domestic procedures

78 In exhausting domestic remedies, the complainant must respect procedural requirements established by national law and pursue such remedies with due diligence.¹³⁶ For example, in X v Switzerland, the Committee declared a complaint inadmissible, inter alia, because the author had not proved that the appeal was submitted within the deadline prescribed in law.¹³⁷

79 Non-observance of national procedural requirements is not necessarily a bar to admissibility. For example, the Parot v Spain a complaint invoking Article 13 was admitted although the alleged victim had failed formally to request an investigation.¹³⁸ As he had, however, complained to an investigating magistrate about ill-treatment, the Committee concluded that even if his ‘attempts to engage available domestic remedies may not have complied with procedural formalities prescribed by law, they left no doubt as to Mr Parot's wish to have the allegations investigated'.¹³⁹ Similarly, in Sodupe v Spain the Committee accepted a complaint under Article 12 despite the non-compliance with the domestic legal requirements for the application for amparo given that the complainant had anyway informed the competent domestic court that he had been tortured and torture is an offence that must be prosecuted ex officio.¹⁴⁰

80 On a few occasions, the Committee avoided assessing whether the procedural requirements established under national law were met. In MAK v Germany, the Committee declined to pronounce itself on the specific procedural requirements governing the submission of a constitutional complaint, holding that a complaint is inadmissible only if it exhibits a manifest failure to comply with the exhaustion requirement.¹⁴¹

81 The complainant's ignorance of the available remedies is generally not a defence, as was established by the Committee in the case of R v France.¹⁴² In Helle Jensen v Denmark, the Committee rejected the complainant's argument that she was exempt from the exhaustion requirement because Denmark's Public Prosecution had not answered a letter from her counsel, in which he had indicated that a lack of response from the Director would be taken as acknowledgment that domestic remedies had been exhausted. The Committee considered that it was not the Director of Public Prosecutions' function to inform counsel whether domestic remedies have been exhausted.¹⁴³ Also, an alleged error made by a privately retained lawyer, who advised the complainant not to apply for judicial review, cannot normally be attributed to a State party and has not been considered a justification for failing to exhaust domestic remedies.¹⁴⁴ Similarly, 'alleged mental and emotional problems' affecting the complainant at the time of an expulsion were not considered enough to absolve him from the requirement to exhaust domestic remedies.¹⁴⁵

3.9.2.2 Existence of Several Remedies

82 In certain cases, national law may provide for more than one remedy (criminal, administrative, civil), and the question may arise as to whether the complainant should exhaust only one or all of them. This issue was addressed in Osmani v Serbia, where the Committee clarified that 'having unsuccessfully exhausted one remedy one should not be required [. . .] to exhaust alternative legal avenues that would have been directed essentially to the same end and would in any case not have offered better chances of success'.¹⁴⁶

3.9.2.3 Existence and Appropriateness

83 Applicants are only obliged to exhaust domestic remedies which are available in theory and in practice. In several cases concerning Article 3, the Committee has noted that a domestic remedy should encompass a judicial review of the merits of the case and not merely a judicial review 'of the reasonableness' or 'gross errors of law'.¹⁴⁷

84 Similarly, extraordinary remedies are not a substitute for available judicial remedies. According to the Committee, in fact, neither procedures before the Ombudsman¹⁴⁸ nor those before National Human Rights Commissions¹⁴⁹ constitute a remedy within the meaning of Article 22. In AH v Sweden, for example, the Committee did not accept the complainant's argument that the submission of a complaint to the Swedish Government and the Swedish Parliament's Ombudsman absolved him from the duty to exhaust the judicial ones, consequently rejecting the complaint as inadmissible.¹⁵⁰ Similarly, in Martínez et al v Mexico the Committee held that, due to the very nature of the Commission's recommendations, investigations conducted by the National Human Rights Commission, did not constitute an effective and enforceable remedy in terms of the exhaustion of domestic remedies.¹⁵¹

85 Over the years, the Committee has often been called to pronounce itself on whether an application for permanent residence on humanitarian and compassionate grounds and an appeal against the refusal to such permit are to be considered remedies that need to be exhausted before submitting a complaint under Article 22. Although in its early jurisprudence the Committee had been reluctant to consider such type of remedies as ineffective,¹⁵² as of 2001 the Committee revised its approach and has since then provided detailed guidance on what would constitute an effective remedy. The first case of this type that the Committee declared admissible was BS v Canada.¹⁵³ There, it held that a humanitarian or compassionate application did not constitute a remedy likely to bring effective relief, since the same court, which had already denied other submissions of the complainant, would decide on such an application.¹⁵⁴ The Committee had, then, further elaborated its position in Falcon Ríos v Canada.¹⁵⁵ In this respect, once could identify three main lines of reasoning. The first concerned the fact that such remedies have a 'discretionary and non-judicial nature'. In this sense, the Committee observed that 'although the right to assistance on humanitarian grounds is a remedy under the law, such assistance is granted by a minister on the basis of purely humanitarian criteria, and not only on a legal basis, and is thus ex gratia in nature'. The second was based on the lack of independence of the civil servants deciding such appeals. In this sense, the Committee further noted that when judicial review is granted, the Federal Court returns the file to the body, which took the original decision or to another decision-making body and does not itself conduct the review of the case or hand down any decision. Rather, the decision depends on the discretionary authority of a minister and thus, of the executive.

The third concerned rather the scope of application of the principle of exhaustion of domestic remedies, which, according to the Committee's well established jurisprudence concerning Article 3 cases,¹⁵⁶ requires the petitioner to use remedies that are directly related to the risk of torture in the country to which he would be sent, not those that might allow him/her to remain in the sending State for other reasons.¹⁵⁷ With regard to the third argument, the Committee further clarified that it would not consider elements totally unrelated to the complainant's allegations relating to torture, such as his links with Swedish society or the fact that he had married a Swedish citizen.¹⁵⁸ This jurisprudence has been confirmed by the Committee over the years,¹⁵⁹ and in General Comment No 4.¹⁶⁰

86 On a similar note, in *Guridi v Spain*¹⁶¹ the Committee rejected the State party's exception on non-exhaustion of domestic remedies because it did not find that the judicial review of King's pardon was a remedy within the meaning of Article 22(5)(b). In doing so, it considered: first, the fact that, under Spanish law, the injured party was not entitled to be a party to pardon proceedings, but he could have only be heard if he opposed the pardon; and second, that he did not have a 'right as such' to request that no pardon be allowed. In these circumstances, the Committee concluded that no remedies 'with a reasonable chance of success' were available to the victim and accordingly considered the communication admissible.

87 Another question that is usually discussed is whether appeals before Constitutional Courts are to be considered domestic remedies within the meaning of Article 22(5)(b). The issue arose in Roitman Rosenmann v Spain where the Committee was called to assess if the complaint has to be declared inadmissible due to the fact that the applicant did not appeal the Supreme Court's decision before the Spanish Constitutional Court.¹⁶² Unfortunately, however, the Committee did not elaborate on this question and simply concluded that it was not in a position to consider this amparo remedy as a priori futile.¹⁶³

88 In a number of instances, the Committee has recognized that, though available in law, remedies were not available 'in practice'. This is the case, for example, when the complainant's lawyer had received the decision after the deadline for appeal had expired,¹⁶⁴ or the complainant was not at all officially notified of the extradition order.¹⁶⁵ From an analysis of the Committee's jurisprudence, it also emerges that the Committee has considered factors such as whether the State party had effectively informed the complainant of the available remedies,¹⁶⁶ or whether the complainant was in a position of particular vulnerability.¹⁶⁷

89 Concerns that a specific domestic remedy might lead to an aggravation of the complainant's or other persons' legal situation have likewise not been acknowledged by the Committee to exempt complainants from exhaustion of domestic remedies. For example, in the case of AH v Sweden, the complainant explained that he had not appealed his expulsion order to the Court of Appeal because another appeal to the same body, in a previous procedure, had led to the imposition of a heavier sentence.¹⁶⁸

3.9.3 Meaning of ‘unlikely to bring effective relief to the person . . . ’

90 Article 22(5)(b) CAT does not require individuals to exhaust domestic remedies that are ‘unlikely to bring effective relief to the person’ within the meaning of Article 22.

91 Mere doubts or a priori assessments about the effectiveness of a domestic remedy have not been considered sufficient to absolve the complainant from seeking to exhaust such a remedy.¹⁶⁹ Instead, the Committee conducts such an assessment by taking into consideration the specific circumstances of the case. To this extent, complaints based on the assumption that domestic remedies are in abstracto ‘illusory’ or a ‘mere theoretical possibility’ but not furnishing evidence proving that such remedies would be unlikely to bring effective relief in their particular case have been normally rejected as inadmissible. For example, the Committee usually disregards the complainants’ arguments based on the probability that a positive decision is minimal, even if corroborated by statistical data or on prior jurisprudence from relevant domestic bodies, or the complainant’s own lack of success with previous domestic remedies.¹⁷⁰ The Committee seems to have been more lenient in the case of TPS v Canada, where it suggests that complainants need not exhaust all remedies if they can show that they vigorously pursued other available remedies. Here, the Committee admitted the applicant’s Article 3 complaint despite his failure to appeal one of several determinations by Canada that he belonged to an inadmissible category.¹⁷¹ He had, however, appealed the Government’s two subsequent decisions, which included a deportation order and an opinion presented by the Canadian Minister of Justice declaring him a threat to public safety. Given that the Canadian Federal Court rejected both of these subsequent appeals, the former before his deportation and the latter following it, the Committee judged that an appeal of the aforementioned inadmissibility decision would probably not have afforded an effective or necessary remedy.

92 The lack of financial means of the complainant was similarly repeatedly used as an argument to contest effectivity of a remedy. Where this argument was not substantiated, as the complainants failed to provide any information on the cost of legal representation, court fees or his/her efforts to obtain legal aid, the Committee has considered the case

See also MA v Canada, No 22/1995, UN Doc CAT/C/14/D/22/1995, 3 May 1995, para 4, where the Committee held that ‘it is not within the scope of the Committee’s competence to evaluate the prospects of success of domestic remedies, but only whether they are proper remedies for the determination of the author’s claims’.

¹⁷⁰ See eg MA v Canada, No 22/1995 (n 169) paras 3–4; SK and RK v Sweden, No 365/2008 (n 169) para 11.3; PMPK v Sweden, No 30/1995, UN Doc CAT/C/15/D/30/1995, 20 November 1995, para 7 (where the applicants claimed that only 5% of such cases were decided favourably); PS v Canada, No 86/1997, UN Doc CAT/C/23/D/86/1997, 18 November 1999 (where the complainant claimed that evidence indicated that the domestic court almost never intervened in similar cases, and when it did so it upheld almost 98% of the Immigration and Refugee Board’s decisions); RK v Canada, No 42/1996, UN Doc CAT/C/19/D/42/1996, 20 November 1997, para 6.4; Jensen v Denmark, No 202/2002 (n 149) paras 5.1, 6.3; Thu Aung v Canada, No 273/2005, UN Doc CAT/C/36/D/273/2005, 15 May 2006, paras 6.3–6.4 (where the complainant’s own lack of success with previous domestic remedies was not considered a sufficient indicator of ineffectiveness).

inadmissible.¹⁷² However, in ZT v Norway the Committee admitted a second complaint based on the fact that the Norwegian Government had rejected his application for legal aid. The Committee observed that, taking into consideration the financial situation of the complainant as well as his inability to represent himself in court, the denial of legal aid made a potential remedy unavailable for him. Thus, it declared the complaint admissible because the complainant was not in a position to exhaust potential remedies.¹⁷³ Similarly, in CM v Switzerland, considering the financial hardship of the complainant, the Committee held that it was unfair to oblige him to pay the sum of 1,200 Swiss francs to lodge an appeal before domestic courts and, hence, declared the communication admissible.¹⁷⁴

93 Domestic remedies have been equally considered ineffective when there existed procedural obstacles for the complainant and his/her lawyer to lodge them. In Saadi Ali v Tunisia, the authorities' refusal to allow the lawyer to register the complaint constituted an 'insurmountable procedural impediment' which rendered the remedy ineffective.¹⁷⁵

94 As most of its decisions concerned non-refoulement cases, the Committee has developed an extensive jurisprudence on this inadmissibility ground with regard to Article 3 complaints. Domestic remedies must also have a suspensive effect, ie they must stay the execution of the removal up until the final decision on the complainant's application. In Dar v Norway, for example, the Committee found the case admissible notwithstanding the complainant's asylum case was pending before the High Court at the time of consideration of admissibility. In doing so, it observed that such domestic proceeding did not have any suspensive effect, and that the complainant might have faced irreparable harm if returned to Pakistan before completion of the judicial review.¹⁷⁶ In its reporting procedure, the Committee regretted that a domestic appeal against a return (refoulement) or expulsion order had suspensive effect only if combined with a motion to stay execution, and pointed out that domestic remedies should have an automatic suspensive effect.¹⁷⁷ When the parties disagree on whether a remedy has suspensive effect, the Committee may be called to pronounce itself on the issue. In RAY v Morocco, the Committee had to assess whether a remedy of revocation against extradition orders was to be considered effective despite the fact that Moroccan domestic law did not 'explicitly' provide for it. In these circumstances, the Committee found the case admissible after giving careful consideration to 'the silence of Moroccan legislation on this matter and the fact that the State party has failed to provide any specific example of jurisprudence clarifying the suspensive nature of the application'.¹⁷⁸

95 Hence, according to the Committee's jurisprudence a remedy that 'remains pending after the act which it was designed to avert has already taken place, by definition, becomes pointless, since the irreparable harm can no longer be avoided even if a subsequent judgment were to find in favour of the complainant'.¹⁷⁹ In a number of cases, France had claimed that the authors had not exhausted domestic remedies, either because of pending administrative rulings regarding their removal or because domestic law provided an opportunity to appeal such rulings.¹⁸⁰ The Committee disagreed, noting that, on all occasions, the administrative bodies had failed to rule on the authors' fates until after they had already been removed from France. Given that the relevant remedy sought was suspension of deportation, once deported, the complainants no longer had access to further meaningful remedies. Even an eventual decision favourable to the complainant would be incapable of repairing the harm suffered. Any appeal of these decisions, the Committee emphasized, would be similarly ineffective. Assuming that the applicants could somehow appeal from abroad, which the Committee deemed unlikely, the effectiveness of the remedy would nevertheless be measured by its ability to prevent the deportation. Furthermore, even if repatriation to France were considered an effective remedy, the Committee was highly sceptical that the French courts would grant it. Thus, the Committee concluded that a remedy pending after deportation was 'by definition pointless' because irreparable harm could no longer be averted.

96 Furthermore, in order to be effective and not illusory, complainants must be afforded a reasonable time period in which to pursue the domestic remedies. The Committee admitted several cases in which States have deported the complainants immediately after notifying them of their deportation order, giving them no time or opportunity to access family or counsel, let alone to file an appeal.¹⁸¹ Contrary, in Mopongo et al v Morocco the Committee considered the complaint inadmissible, despite the fact that the authors had been expelled from Morocco to Algeria without receiving any notification at all, and in violation of the procedural guarantees provided for by the law. Yet, in that case, the complainants had not been admitted into Algeria and had been obliged to return back into Moroccan territory. The Committee, therefore, declared the complaint inadmissible as legal action could have been initiated later on, once the complainants were back in Morocco.¹⁸²

3.9.4 Meaning of 'unreasonably prolonged'

97 The rule on the exhaustion of domestic remedies does not apply when such remedies are unreasonably prolonged. Like the effectiveness assessment, a mere assumption that proceedings before a domestic authority would probably be unreasonably prolonged is not deemed sufficient by the Committee to establish that the remedy was unreasonably prolonged.¹⁸³ Consequently, the Committee decides on a case-by-case basis.

98 When torture and other forms of ill-treatment complaints are at stake, the effectiveness of the remedy will depend also on the promptness of the investigation as well as to provide redress to the victims. In Halimi Nedyibi v Austria, the Committee deemed unreasonably prolonged a torture investigation that took fifteen months to initiate and had been ongoing for almost two years at the time of the Committee's review.¹⁸⁴ Pending proceedings regarding torture complaints that had lain idle for years without formal dismissal do not bar the Committee from reviewing the authors' cases on the merits, if the Committee finds that the pending proceedings have been unreasonably lengthy.¹⁸⁵ The Committee equally admitted the cases of Thabti v Tunisia, Abdelli v Tunisia, and Ltaief v Tunisia on the grounds that the authors' complaints to the Tunisian authorities, made many years before, had not led to any of the steps described by the State party as appropriate and possible. In particular, the Committee voiced concern over the ten-year statute of limitations on bringing these proceedings, which may have apparently expired with relation to some of the acts.¹⁸⁶

99 In relation to Article 3 claims, a four-year delay in enforced repatriation proceedings was equally considered unreasonable. The fact that more than four years after their first request for asylum the complainants' fate had still not been decided made the Committee determine that the proceedings as a whole had not been concluded within a reasonable time.¹⁸⁷

100 On the other hand, the Committee declared inadmissible the case of Akhimien v Canada, inter alia, because of the parties' pending case before a Canadian civil court, in which they sought compensation for the treatment and death of their relative. The Committee considered and rejected the applicants' claim that the civil suit, which had allegedly been stalled for two years due to circumstances not attributable to them, was unreasonably prolonged.¹⁸⁸

3.9.5 Procedural Aspects Concerning Article 22(5)(b)

101 Although there is no statute of limitations for submitting a complaint before the Committee, the time elapsed since the exhaustion of domestic remedies should not be so unreasonably prolonged as to render consideration of the claims unduly difficult for the Committee or the State party (Rule 113 (f)). The issue arose in Haro v Argentina.¹⁸⁹ In this case, the Committee held a period of around two years was not as unreasonably prolonged as to make the complaint 'unduly difficult for the Committee or the State party'. In doing so, the Committee considered the date in which the request to reopen the case was denied, and not the date in which the original complaint alleging acts of torture and other forms of ill-treatment in the police station was dismissed by the Chief Prosecutor.¹⁹⁰

102 The requirement for the complainant to exhaust domestic remedies is normally determined with reference to the date on which the complaint is submitted to the Committee. Even if available and not exhausted at the time the applicant submitted the communication, the Committee will admit the case if it determines that domestic remedies are exhausted at the time it considers the complaint.¹⁹¹ Thus, a number of applicants have submitted a complaint to the Committee while domestic procedures were still pending. In PSS v Canada, the complainant had sought interim measures from the Committee while a number of domestic remedies were still available or pending because he feared that by the time all remedies were exhausted he would immediately be deported to India. Since at the time of consideration of the case by the Committee domestic procedures were still open to the complainant, the Committee had to declare the complaint inadmissible.¹⁹² This practice seems to be linked to the fact that the resubmission of an identical complaint when the domestic remedies have been subsequently exhausted is permitted.¹⁹³

103 At the outset, the burden of proof is on the complainant, who is required to bring an 'arguable claim' to the Committee and provide information on the national legal action he or she has taken in order to fulfil this condition. Thus, the applicant is responsible to demonstrate that he or she has either exhausted all remedies or that any open remedy is in practice not available to him or her, unreasonably prolonged or ineffective. Once an applicant has made credible allegations to this effect, the onus is on the State to refute these allegations, ie to give details on which timely and effective remedies the complainant should have pursued or could still pursue.¹⁹⁴ As it was seen, mere doubts or any a priori assumption that remedies in the respective State are generally not effective or unreasonably long will not suffice for the Committee.¹⁹⁵ If, on the other hand, the State party does not raise any objections regarding admissibility for reasons of non-exhaustion of domestic remedies, the Committee will assume that all available remedies have been exhausted.¹⁹⁶ However, if a State challenges admissibility on these grounds, it is responsible for specifying such claims. In cases where the State has contested admissibility due to non-exhaustion of domestic remedies, but has not specified what additional remedies had to be exhausted¹⁹⁷ or substantiated their claim as required by the RoP, the Committee declared the complaint admissible.¹⁹⁸ In Thabti v Tunisia, for example, the author explained that he had been severely tortured in 1991 and had complained about this at his own trial before a military court in 1992. However, the judge had ignored his statements and he was sentenced to a long prison term and later put under house arrest based on his confessions obtained under torture. Throughout this period he was prevented from lodging a complaint. In these circumstances, though the respondent State argued that he had not exhausted domestic remedies because he could have brought criminal charges against his perpetrators, the Committee found that, while Tunisian law in principle provided for a remedy, the State had not sufficiently demonstrated that it was willing to start any investigations into this case or to interrupt the statute of limitations of ten years for the crimes in question.¹⁹⁹

104 The Committee generally finds that new evidence, such as documentary or medical evidence, emerging after domestic proceedings have been concluded, must first be subjected to domestic review in order to give the authorities the opportunity to examine it.²⁰⁰ The State party should always have an opportunity to evaluate the new evidence before the communication is submitted for examination under Article 22 of the Convention. The same applies for new allegations that complainants raise for the first time before the Committee.²⁰¹ At the same time, despite the non-exhaustion of domestic remedies, the Committee seems not to completely disregard new evidence indicating that the complainant could have been subject to torture in the past.²⁰²

105 An inadmissibility decision on grounds of exhaustion of domestic remedies constitutes only a suspensive barrier to admissibility. Complaints that have been rejected for failing to exhaust domestic remedies can be reviewed again at a later date.²⁰³ When declaring a case inadmissible on these grounds, the Committee will at the same time state that this decision may be reviewed upon receipt of a written request by or on behalf of the alleged victim containing information to the effect that the reasons for inadmissibility cases, the State decided not to challenge admissibility although it found that there were still domestic remedies available to the complainants; in this regard see eg SS Elmi v Australia, No 120/1998, UN Doc CAT/C/22/D/120/1998, 14 May 1999, para 4.3; EVI v Sweden, No 296/2006 (n 72).

no longer apply.²⁰⁴ In certain cases, the Committee reopened the considerations of the communication. It declared inadmissible the first complaint submitted in the case of Parot v Spain because of a pending examination by an investigating magistrate.²⁰⁵ Two years later, however, it admitted the case based on new evidence that the alleged victim's complaint to the investigating magistrate had been to no avail.²⁰⁶ ZT v Norway was first rejected on the grounds that the complainant had neither initiated judicial review proceedings, nor had he proven his lack of financial resources to pursue that legal avenue.²⁰⁷ The Committee admitted a second complaint four years later based on evidence that the Norwegian Government had rejected his application for legal aid, and that he remained unable to finance the lawsuit and was unable to represent himself successfully.²⁰⁸

3.10 Interim Measures

3.10.1 Authority of the Committee to Request Interim Measures

106 Although the Convention does not grant the Committee an explicit authority to request interim measures, it has in urgent cases developed the practice of requesting States parties to take such interim measures as are necessary to avoid irreparable damage to the victim. As with the HRC²⁰⁹ and other treaty monitoring bodies, above all the ECtHR and IACHR,²¹⁰ this raises the controversial questions as to the power of the Committee to request interim measures and their binding nature.²¹¹ Article 63(2) ACHR explicitly empowers the IACHR in cases of extreme gravity and urgency to 'adopt such provisional measures as it deems pertinent in matters it has under consideration'. In the Constitutional Court case, in which judges of the Peruvian Constitutional Court had been illegally removed from office, the Inter-American Court held in 2000 that the ACHR makes it 'mandatory for the state to adopt the provisional measures ordered by this Tribunal' and based this decision on a 'basic principle of the law of international state responsibility, supported by international jurisprudence, according to which States must fulfil their conventional obligations in good faith (pacta sunt servanda)'.²¹² Similarly, in the LaGrand case, which concerned the execution of a German citizen in the United States despite an order for provisional measure by the ICJ, the ICJ held in 2001 that its order of provisional measures was 'binding in character and created a legal obligation'.²¹³ This question was disputed because Article 41 of the ICJ Statute authorizes the Court only to 'indicate' rather than to 'order' or 'adopt' provisional measures, as in Article 63(2) ACHR.

107 Contrary to the ACHR and the ICJ Statute, the ECHR does not contain any provision concerning interim measures. That is the main reason why the ECtHR originally took the view that interim measures requested by the former ECommHR were not binding.²¹⁴ But in the judgment of Mamatkulov and Abdurasulovic v Turkey, which concerned the extradition of two Uzbek citizens by Turkey to Uzbekistan, the European Court, relying on general principles of international law, held that Turkey's failure to comply with the Court's indication of interim measures resulted in a breach of its obligations under the ECHR. It clarified that when a State ratifies a treaty and accepts the competence or jurisdiction of the tribunal charged with the enforcement of the rights protected in the treaty, the State must comply in good faith not only with the substantive provisions of the treaty but also with its procedural and regulatory provisions.²¹⁵

108 The same arguments, in principle, also apply to quasi-judicial bodies, such as the HRC and the CAT Committee.²¹⁶ In this sense, the General Comment No 33 of the HRC, has shed some light not only on the HRC's power to request interim measures, but also their binding legal status. It clarified that the provisions on interim measures contained in its RoP were adopted 'in order to be in a position to meet these needs under the Optional Protocol' and that '[f]ailure to implement such interim or provisional measures is incompatible with the obligation to respect in good faith the procedure of individual communication established under the Optional Protocol.'²¹⁷ Of course, no decisions of these Committees, including decisions on the merits, are legally binding in a formal sense. But the obligations under the respective UN treaties are legally binding, and by becoming parties to these treaties States accepted the competence of the respective treaty bodies to monitor their compliance with such legally binding obligations by means of different procedures. The individual complaints procedure is one of the most powerful procedures in which treaty monitoring bodies have the exclusive authority to decide whether or not a particular State party in a specific case violated certain obligations or not. Interim measures constitute an essential element of individual complaints procedures in order to prevent, in urgent cases, irreparable harm to the applicants. If States parties to the CAT choose to ignore a request for interim measures issued by the CAT Committee, they violate their binding obligations under Article 22 CAT to cooperate in good faith with the Committee in exercising its task of considering individual complaints, and the Committee has the exclusive competence to hold States responsible for such violation, even if its decisions, strictly speaking, are not legally binding.²¹⁸

109 Pursuant to Rule 114(1), at any time after the receipt of a complaint, the Committee, a Working Group, or the Rapporteur(s) for new complaints and interim measures, may transmit to the State party concerned, for its urgent consideration, a request that it take such interim measures as the Committee considers necessary to avoid irreparable damage to the victim or victims of alleged violations. Interim measures are also commonly referred to as 'provisional measures' and 'precautionary measures'.

110 Interim measures may be requested with a view to obtaining a negative action from the State. In the Committee's jurisprudence, complainants frequently requested preventive protection in connection to Article 3 CAT, particularly in cases concerning imminent expulsion or extradition.²¹⁹ Most requests for interim measures were, indeed, issued in relation to non-refoulement cases concerning the immediate risk of deportation of the applicant.²²⁰ Yet the Committee has applied Rule 114 also in other situations. For example, in the Hissène Habré case, when the Government of Senegal was requested not to expel the former dictator of Chad and to bring him to justice before its own courts,²²¹ in PE v France when the State party was asked not to extradite the complainant on the basis of Article 15,²²² or in Rached Jaïdane v Tunisia to prevent any threats or acts of violence to which the complainant and his family might be exposed, particularly as a result of having lodged the present complaint, and to keep the Committee informed of the measures taken with that end in view.²²³

111 But interim measures may also request a positive action. This was for example the case in Martinez v Mexico, where the Committee applied the Rule to request that Mexico provides appropriate specialized medical care and support to one of the complainants during his detention. In this case, the Committee considered 'irreparable harm' the risk for the complainant to lose his eardrum if he did not undergo urgent microsurgery, as diagnosed by a specialist practitioner.²²⁴

112 Strictly speaking the wording of Rule 114 would allow to grant interim measures only to 'victim or victims of the alleged violations'. In literature some authors have suggested that the notion of victims of the alleged violations should be interpreted broadly including also measures to protect lawyers and human rights defenders.²²⁵ So far the Committee has never pronounced itself on such issue. In those cases, however, the Committee's policy on reprisals would apply.²²⁶

The Committee declared the case inadmissible insufficiently substantiated because it was 'unclear whether the complainant has ever raised the claim that the refusal of shelter amounts to inhuman and degrading treatment before the domestic authorities'.

the Rapporteur was first discussed during the thirteenth session in 1994, when the Committee considered possible ways to make its methods of work under Article 22 CAT more effective.²²⁷ In light of the communications received by the Committee, in particular with regard to Article 3, the Committee took the view that it was necessary to appoint from among its members inter-sessional rapporteurs who would take urgent action on new communications submitted to the Committee and report on any action taken to the Committee at the beginning of its subsequent session.²²⁸ Amendments were adopted at a private meeting in November 1994 concerning the designation of Special Rapporteurs from among its members to assist in the handling of communications received under Article 22.²²⁹

114 At its twenty-eighth session, in 2002, the Committee further revised its RoP and established the function of Rapporteur for new complaints and interim measures. The mandate of the Rapporteur²³⁰ includes, inter alia:

- requesting interim measures of protection pursuant to Rule 108;
- withdrawing requests for interim measures in appropriate cases;
- following up on State compliance with requests for interim measures of protection;
- deciding on the registration of new complaints in such cases where the Secretariat has sought instructions on registration;
- informing the Committee at each session on action taken during the intersessional period; and
- drafting recommendations for the Committee's consideration of the admissibility of complaints.

Where a request for interim measures is made by the Working Group or Rapporteur(s), they should inform the Committee members of the nature of the request and the complaint to which the request relates at the next regular session of the Committee. The Secretariat maintains a list of such requests.²³¹

115 The Committee has conceptualized formal and substantive criteria for granting or rejecting requests for interim measures of protection. With regard to formal criteria, the Committee specifies that the request for interim measures must, first, be submitted in a timely manner. This means that complainants may submit a request 'at any time after the receipt of a complaint'. Such requirement differs from the original wording of the

²²⁹ Rule 114(9) was amended to reflect this: 'In the course of the consideration of the question of the admissibility of a communication, the Committee or the working group or a special rapporteur designated under Rule 112, paragraph 3, may request the State party to take steps to avoid a possible irreparable damage to the person or persons who claim to be victim(s) of the alleged violation. Such a request addressed to the State party does not imply that any decision has been reached on the question of the admissibility of the communication.' A new paragraph was further added to Rule 112: '(3) The Committee may designate special rapporteurs from among its members to assist in the handling of communications.'

Committee's RoP on interim measures,²³² which allowed for the Committee to request interim measures only during the examination of the merits phase, ie at the stage when the communication had already been declared admissible.²³³ Secondly, the request must respect the basic admissibility criteria set out in Article 22 CAT. In this last regard, it is noted that the requirement of exhaustion of domestic remedies can be lifted, if the only remedies available to the complainant are without suspensive effect. In such cases, the Rapporteur may request the State party to refrain from deporting an applicant, while his or her complaint is under consideration by the Committee, even before domestic remedies have been exhausted.

116 As for the substantive criteria, a complaint must have a substantial likelihood of success on the merits for it to be concluded that the alleged victim would suffer irreparable harm.²³⁴ Moreover, in cases concerning imminent expulsion or extradition where a complaint failed to establish a prima facie case, the complainant is requested in writing to confirm his or her interest in having his or her communication considered by the Committee, despite the rejection, by the Rapporteur, of the respective request for interim measures.²³⁵ In practice, as of May 2017 the Committee has granted interim measures in forty-five out of seventy requests.²³⁶ In respect to other human rights mechanisms, it seems that the Committee grants interim measures quite generously.²³⁷

3.10.4 Revision and Withdrawal of Interim Measures

117 According to Rule 114 the decision to grant interim measures may be adopted on the basis of information provided in the complainant's submission. Such decision does not, however, imply a determination of the admissibility or merits and may, therefore, be reviewed at the request of the State party.

118 In this sense, the Rapporteur must inform the State party,²³⁸ which may, in a timely manner, submit information to the effect that the submission is not justified and the complainant does not face any prospect of irreparable harm, together with any subsequent comments from the complainant' (Rule 114(3)). Moreover, as provided by Rule 114(7), the State party should also inform the Committee that the reasons for the interim

In doing so, the Committee shall inform the State party concerned that such expression of its views on interim measures does not prejudice its final views on the merits of the communication.' See former Rule 114(9) in CAT/C/3/Rev.1, which stated '[i]n the course of the consideration of the question of the admissibility of a communication, the Committee or the working group may request the State party to take steps to avoid a possible irreparable damage to the person or persons who claim to be victim(s) of the alleged violation. Such a request addressed to the State party does not imply that any decision has been reached on the question of the admissibility of the communication.'

measures have lapsed or present arguments why they should be lifted. Requests for interim measures may be then confirmed or withdrawn by the Committee (Rule 114(8)).

119 Some States parties have adopted the practice of systematically requesting the Rapporteur to withdraw his request for interim measures of protection. In the view of the Rapporteur on new complaints and interim measures, such requests need only be addressed 'if based on new and pertinent information which was not available to him or her when he or she took his or her initial decision on interim measures'.²³⁹

120 The first decision to withdraw a request for interim measures was made in GK v Switzerland in January 2003.²⁴⁰ In this case, the complainant, a German national, was awaiting extradition from Switzerland to Spain where she had been indicted on counts of collaboration with Euzkadi Ta Askatasuna (ETA) and storage of firearms and explosives. The Committee had issued interim measures not to extradite her while her complaint (that extradition to Spain would constitute a violation of Articles 3 and 15 CAT) was under consideration and, at the same time, specified that this request could be reviewed in light of new arguments presented by Spain or on the basis of guarantees and assurances from the Spanish authorities. On receiving the aforementioned legal guarantees from the State party, the Committee subsequently decided to withdraw its request and the complainant was extradited to Spain.

3.10.5 Non-Compliance of Interim Measures

121 In the vast majority of cases where the Committee requested interim measures, States parties acceded to the request. However, from an early stage, the Committee met with resistance from certain States parties who expressed dissatisfaction with the procedure and questioned the legal status of interim measures.²⁴¹

122 Since various governments disputed the competence of the Committee to issue requests for interim measures and openly ignored them, the Committee, in a number of well-known cases, took the view that non-compliance with the interim measures entails a violation of Article 22. If in some earlier cases it refrained to explicitly labelling the non-compliance as a violation of Article 22,²⁴² the Committee has then then revised its approach and found an express violation of Article 22 for the first time in Brada v France.²⁴³ Since then, it has consistently confirmed the Brada jurisprudence²⁴⁴ observing that the adoption

123 The Committee has found violations of Article 22 because of non-compliance with requests for interim measures on several occasions. In some cases, the violation of Article 22 was found despite the main claim was inadmissible²⁴⁹ or not in violation of the Convention.²⁵⁰ In several cases, the State party received the request for interim measures after the deportation/expulsion had already been carried out.²⁵¹

124 This practice has been contested in several individual dissenting opinions by Committee member Bruni. Departing from the fact that interim measures are contained only in the RoP but not explicitly regulated by Article 22 of the Convention, Bruni concludes that the Committee has no competence to find a breach of Article 22 for the violation of an interim measure by the State. In contrast, and despite acknowledging that non-compliance with an interim measures shows 'a clear sign of non-cooperation undermining the Committee's effectiveness of its mandate',²⁵² Bruni argues that the Committee is only entitled to 'raise serious doubts about the State willingness to implement Article 22 in good faith' or 'blame' the State.²⁵³

125 But the practice of finding a violation of Article 22 in case of non-compliance with interim measures has been confirmed also by General Comment No 4 of 2017. There, the Committee has stated that non-compliance would ‘constitute a serious damage and obstacle to the effectiveness of the Committee’s deliberations and would cast a serious doubt on the willingness of the State party to implement Article 22 of the Convention in good faith’ and that ‘[t]his has resulted in the Committee’s determination that the non-compliance with its request for interim measures constitutes a breach of Article 22 of the Convention’.²⁵⁴

3.10.6 Remedying a Violation of Article 22 for Non-Compliance

126 In the case of Dar v Norway, the CAT Committee indicated how a breach of Article 22 might be remedied by the State party concerned. After having deported the applicant to Pakistan in violation of a request for interim measures, the Norwegian authorities had facilitated the safe return of the applicant and granted him a residence permit for three years, which the Committee considered as an effective remedy and reparation.²⁵⁵

3.11 Article 22(3), (4), (6) and (7): Procedure before the Committee

127 The Convention only contains rudimentary rules regarding the procedure of receiving and considering individual complaints. Complaints must be submitted to the State party concerned for its written explanations and clarifications, the procedure is written and confidential. These few principles are based on Articles 4 and 5(3) of the first OP to the CCPR.

128 In practice, the CAT Committee has developed these rudimentary rules into a much more sophisticated procedure of dealing with individual complaints, which is also reflected in its respective RoP.²⁵⁶ Rules 102 to 121 of the RoP regulate in detail the procedure before the Committee. They are modelled on the RoP to Articles 1 to 6 of the first OP to the CCPR and have over the years been subject to various amendments in view of improving the procedure.²⁵⁷

129 The individual complaints procedure is confidential; the meetings during which complaints are examined are closed and all documents are confidential.²⁵⁸ If the

In its opinions, Bruni also noted that ‘... the Committee must, at least, notify the State party that it considers a non-compliance with its rule 114 as a breach of the State party’s obligations under article 22 of the Convention before taking the decision that the State party has violated that article’ (RS et al v Switzerland, No 482/2011 (n 244); Khairullo Tursunov v Kazakhstan, No 538/2013 (n 244); X v Russian Federation, No 542/2013 (n 197)); and that in contrast to OP to the CEDAW (Art 5), the OP to the CRPD (Art 4), the CED (Art 31) and the OP to the ICESCR (Art 5), the CAT does not contain an explicit provision on interim measures, hence in order for the CAT Committee to find violations of Article 22 it ‘should be either amended in accordance with their amending mechanisms or provided with an additional optional protocol to explicitly include the notion of legally binding interim measures of protection’ (Subakaran R. Thirugnanasampanthar v Australia [2017] CAT No 614/2014).

Committee decides so, meetings during which general issues regarding Article 22 are discussed may be public.²⁵⁹

130 According to Rule 109, Committee members who have a personal interest in the case; have participated in any capacity, other than as a Committee member, in the making of any decision; are nationals of or employed in the State party concerned, shall not take part in the examination of a complaint. Where any of the grounds apply, the Committee member ‘shall not be present during any non-public consultations or meetings of the Committee, as well as during any discussion, consideration or adoption related to that complaint’.²⁶⁰ Any questions regarding this rule are to be decided by the Committee without the participation of the member concerned. In addition, Rule 110 provides an optional non-participation clause, according to which a Committee member may ‘for any reason’ decide that he/she should not take part or continue to take part in the examination of a complaint.²⁶¹ In practice, Committee members have occasionally withdrawn. For example, in the case *Agiza v Sweden*²⁶² some Committee members withdrew because they had directly participated in the disposition of the case at national level and because their country of origin was involved.²⁶³

131 The Committee takes on average about two-and-a-half years to consider a complaint. In urgent cases the procedure normally only lasts some months.²⁶⁴

3.11.2 Submitting a Complaint

132 Complaints must be submitted in writing via email, fax, or regular post to the Secretariat, specifically, the Petitions Unit of the OHCHR in Geneva.²⁶⁵ Model complaint forms are available on the Secretariat’s website.²⁶⁶ Only complaints in one of the official languages of the UN can be accepted. These are also ‘to the extent possible’ the working languages (Rule 27).²⁶⁷ However, complaints submitted in languages other than the working languages are likely to be delayed.

133 Neither Article 22 nor the Rules of Procedures impose a condition of legal representation, nor do they provide for financial assistance to indigent complainants who lack the means to secure competent counsel. Further, communications need not invoke particular articles of the Convention to be registered, or even to be deemed admissible. Cases are registered in their entirety, meaning that all allegations within the complaint will be reviewed during admissibility, even if some of them seem manifestly implausible.²⁶⁸

3.11.3 Rapporteurs and Working Group

Committee. The function of Rapporteur was introduced for the first time in the framework of Article 22 in 1993, at the ninth session, when the Committee appointed two of its members as Rapporteurs responsible for specific communications in order to expedite the examination of communications.²⁶⁹ Later, during its thirteenth session in 1994, the Committee amended its RoP and decided, in light of the number of recent communications received, in particular with regard to Article 3, that ‘any member of the Committee may act as an inter-sessional rapporteur for a new communication and examine the communication received by the Committee and take urgent action’ during intersessional periods and report on any action taken to the Committee at the beginning of its subsequent session.²⁷⁰

135 Since the twenty-eighth session, the Committee introduced several Rapporteurs, including those relevant for the individual complaint procedure, ie the Rapporteur for new complaints and interim measures and the Rapporteur for follow-up on decisions adopted under Article 22.²⁷¹ At the same session, the Committee, according to Rule 61(1), additionally established a Pre-sessional Working Group on Complaints of three to five members which assist the plenary in its work.²⁷² Its members are elected by the Committee every two sessions. The idea of forming a Working Group began in 1999, but the first Working Group did not meet until April 2002. As provided by Rule 112(3), the Working Group may designate Rapporteurs from among its members to deal with specific complaints. However, since 2005 a Working Group has no longer been in place.²⁷³

3.11.4 Registration of Complaints

136 While Rule 104 of the RoP provides that complaints can be registered by the Committee, by the Secretariat or by the Rapporteur for new complaints and interim measures, in practice, they are usually registered by the Special Rapporteur on new complaints and interim measures on the proposal of the Secretariat, ie the Petitions Unit at the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights in Geneva.²⁷⁴ The Secretariat maintains a permanent register of all complaints.

137 As required by Rule 103(1), the Secretariat staff (according to RoP terminology, the Secretary-General) conducts a first screening to determine whether a complaint meets basic information requirements. First, the Secretariat staff verifies if the complaint is directed towards the CAT Committee, and if so, whether the registration requirements indicated in Rule 104 are complied with.

138 The Petitions Unit, which is also responsible for processing complaints to other UN treaty bodies, often receives complaints that are addressed to multiple treaty bodies or that do not specify any particular to whom they are addressed to. In those cases, the Secretariat will, on the basis of Rule 103(2), contact the author of the complaint asking whether he or she wishes to have his or her complaint submitted to the CAT Committee. In cases which might equally be treated by the CAT Committee or the HRC, the complainant is asked to choose between one of the two bodies. Generally, complainants who face deportation are more likely to submit their complaints to the CAT Committee because of the particularly strong protection offered by Article 3. Otherwise, complaints that may also involve violations of provisions or rights not covered by the CAT, such as arbitrary detention and discrimination, are usually submitted to the HRC.²⁷⁵

139 The Secretariat staff then verifies whether the complainant has provided all necessary information. To this extent, the Secretariat may also ask the complainant for clarification (Rule 105).

140 Rule 104(2) establishes the minimum requirements that need to be satisfied in order for a complaint to be registered. The Rule provides that the Secretariat does not register a complaint:

- a) which concerns a State party which has not made a declaration under Article 22(1);
- b) by an anonymous author;
- c) which is not submitted in writing by the alleged victim, by close relatives of the alleged victim on his or her behalf or by a representative with appropriate written authorization.

141 In contrast to Rule 113(1)(a), which refers generally to ‘relatives’ of the victim, Rule 104(2)(c) refers to ‘close relatives’. In practice, however, the Secretariat has registered cases by non-immediate relatives and even friends.²⁷⁶ Standards may be applied more strictly at the admissibility stage. The case of BM'B v Tunisia, for example, was successfully registered but later found inadmissible due to the complainant’s failure to submit sufficient proof of his authorization to act on behalf of the victim and his family.²⁷⁷

142 Once it has collected the necessary information, in accordance with Rule 104, the Secretariat prepares a list with complaints that meet the initial requirements with a brief summary of their contents and a recommendation on registration and forwards it to the Rapporteur, who decides whether or not to register the case or if there is a need to request additional information. In prima facie cases, the registration is done immediately and, as is the case for all other registered cases, the Secretariat drafts a summary of the relevant information received and, according to Rule 106, circulates it to the Committee members.²⁷⁸ In practice, the summary is first forwarded to the Rapporteur on new complaints and interim measures.²⁷⁹

143 When the registration conditions are not met, the Secretariat staff will send applicants standard letters specifying why their complaints cannot at this stage be accepted. If the complaint is registered, the Secretariat will brief applicants on the ensuing procedure, including that their complaints will be confidentially transmitted to the State party concerned (Rule 105(5)).

144 All complaints received are recorded in a log, even if they are not formally registered and forwarded to the Committee. As soon as possible after it has been registered, the complaint should be transmitted to the State party in accordance with Article 22(3) and Rule 115.

3.11.5 Procedure on Admissibility

145 In most of the cases, admissibility and merits are treated jointly. The State party is requested to submit a written reply within six months on both questions of admissibility and the merits. Only in exceptional cases may the Committee or the Rapporteur on new complaints request a reply that relates only to the question of admissibility (Rule 115(2)). Within two months States parties may request in writing that the examination on the questions of admissibility and merits are separated. The Committee or the Special Rapporteur may decide whether or not to grant such request. (Rule 115(3)).

146 Both parties may be asked for additional written information, clarification, or observations within the timeframe indicated by the Committee (Rule 115(4) (5) and (6)). A complaint may only be declared admissible if the State party had an opportunity to furnish information or observations (Rule 115(8)).

147 Given the lack of funds for legal assistance, plenty of time is often spent requesting further information from complainants who have poor or no legal representation. As with other requests for submission, parties must comply within a given time limit to avoid undue delay. Failure to comply with this time limit will not prevent the reviewing body from continuing its admissibility determination using the information available. Additionally, the State party and the complainant are given the opportunity to respond, also within a given time limit, to the other party's submission. The RoP do not provide for an oral consideration during this phase.

148 Admissibility determinations can be made by the Committee or the Working Group.²⁸⁰ The latter decides on admissibility (by majority vote) or on inadmissibility (by unanimity) of cases and makes recommendations to the Committee regarding the merits of complaints.²⁸¹ In practice, most decisions on admissibility are made by the whole Committee, which may also choose to consider several communications jointly or to sever consideration of complaints by multiple complainants.²⁸²

149 Communications do not need to invoke the correct Convention articles, or even any specific provisions at all to be admitted. If the Committee, Working Group, or Rapporteur finds that the facts suggest a violation of a particular Article that is not alleged by the complainant, it can admit the complaint ex officio.²⁸³ It may also decide to admit the case on some of the alleged grounds, but not others.²⁸⁴

150 Decisions on inadmissibility should be promptly communicated to the complainant and to the State party concerned (Rule 116(1)). These may be later reviewed at the request of a Committee member or at the written request of the complainant. A complainant making such a request must include evidence indicating that the reasons for inadmissibility referred to in Article 22(5) no longer apply.

3.11.6 Procedure on the Merits

151 As it was seen above, there are two possible paths leading to the consideration of the merits of a complaint by the Committee: first, and in most cases, when the Committee considers the admissibility and merits jointly together; second, when the Committee, Working Group, or Rapporteur has decided to separate the consideration of the merits from the admissibility question.

²⁸⁰ Rule 115(1).

²⁸² Rule 115(4) and (5).

²⁸³ See eg OR et al v Argentina, Nos 1/1988, 2/1988 and 3/1988 (n 99) para 7.4.

²⁸⁴ Abdelli v Tunisia, No 188/2001 (n 67).

152 Once the Committee or the Working Group has decided that a complaint is admissible, the Committee should inform the parties and forward any submissions not already transmitted (Rule 117(1)). The Committee then establishes a period of time²⁸⁵ within which the State party should submit written explanations or statements²⁸⁶ clarifying the case and if any, the measures that it may have taken in relation to it. Any explanations or statements by the State party are to be forwarded to the complainant who has, within a time limit to be decided by the Committee, the possibility to submit additional written information or observations.²⁸⁷

153 In a few cases, in which the decision on the admissibility had already been taken during an earlier session, States parties presented further information and called upon the Committee to reconsider its decision on admissibility. This new information can relate to earlier submissions and reveal their erroneous nature, or demonstrate that a certain situation has changed since the Committee's decision on admissibility. In accordance with Rule 117(5) the Committee may revoke its decision that a complaint is admissible, but only after having transmitted the explanations or statements of the State party to the complainant, so that he or she in turn may submit additional information within a time limit set by the Committee. In general, the Committee considers the new information and takes note of such requests in the introductory part of its views on the merits.²⁸⁸ There has, however, been at least one case in which the Committee changed its decision with regard to one Article claimed to have been violated.²⁸⁹

154 Where a party has not submitted additional written information, clarifications or observations relevant to the question of the merits (or the question of admissibility) within the time period set by the Committee, the Working Group, or Rapporteur(s), they are entitled to take a decision without these submissions in order to avoid undue delay (Rule 115(7)). In Dragan Dimitrijevic v Serbia and Montenegro, the State party did not submit any information at all, leading the Committee to the conclusion that 'the State party has not contested the facts as presented by the complainant ... In the circumstances ... due weight must be given to the complainant's allegation ...'²⁹⁰ In its submission in Danilo Dimitrijevic v Serbia and Montenegro, the State party only said that it accepted the complaint, explaining some months later, in a second submission, that 'acceptance' only implied the recognition of the competence of the Committee to consider the complaint, but not 'the responsibility of the State concerning the complaint'. Furthermore, the State promised to provide the Committee with some data collected by the Ministry on Human and Minority Rights in Serbia, but in fact never submitted this information to the Committee.²⁹¹ Consequently, the Committee considered (the admissibility and) the merits in the light of the information available in accordance with Rule 115(7). With regard to the alleged violation of Article 14, the Committee made its decision that the State party had effectively violated its obligations under Article 14, inter alia, on the basis of the fact that the State party had not contested this allegation.²⁹²

²⁸⁵ Until the amendments of the RoP at its twenty-eighth session, the Committee granted a six-month period to States parties to submit additional information. This term was then changed to 'the period established by the Committee' providing the Committee with more latitude.

²⁸⁶ During its discussions of the amendments at the twenty-eighth session, the Chairperson of the Committee confirmed the interpretation that statements by States parties would also include oral statements: CAT/C/SR.518, Add.1, para 6.

155 As under other human rights conventions, the individual complaints procedure of the CAT is mainly a written one, but the RoP provide for the possibility of oral hearings (Rule 117(4)).²⁹³ The Committee can invite the complainant or his or her representative as well as representatives of the State party to closed meetings with the aim of further clarifying points in relation to the merits of the complaint. Should only one party be heard during the meeting, an invitation has nevertheless to be forwarded to the other party. Non-appearance does not prejudice the consideration of the case (Rule 117(4)). On the request of the State party, an oral hearing was held in the case Abdussamatov et al v Kazakhstan.²⁹⁴

156 Furthermore, at least in one case one of the complainants requested the Committee to proceed with an independent assessment of the authenticity of the documentary evidence and to grant a personal hearing in order to witness his emotional distress when talking about his torture experiences.²⁹⁵

157 On the other hand, the Committee interprets Article 22(4) in a broad sense by not only basing its decisions on information made available by the parties, but by also soliciting information from other sources (Rule 118(2)). The inclusion of ‘other sources’ was the result of an amendment to the RoP during the Committee’s twenty-eighth session in 2002 allowing for the inclusion of information from NGOs.²⁹⁶ Rule 63 provides for similar sources, but goes somewhat further by allowing the Committee to make requests relevant to any activity under the Convention. In practice, the Committee has referred, for example, to initial and periodic reports of the State party under Article 19 CAT or to the HRC,²⁹⁷ UNHCR documents,²⁹⁸ information the Committee has gathered in the course of a visit to a State party,²⁹⁹ reports of Rapporteurs of the Commission on Human Rights regarding the situation in a specific country,³⁰⁰ or reports by the CPT.³⁰¹

158 Since torture usually takes place behind closed doors without independent witnesses and is regularly denied by States, it is probably the human rights violation which ²⁹³ While Article 5(1) of the first OP to the CCPR requires the HRC to decide on individual complaints in the light of all ‘written information’ made available by both parties, the word ‘written’ was deleted from the text of Article 22(4) CAT. This word was already missing in Art 32(4) of the Swedish draft of 1981: see above § 7.

²⁹⁵ SNAW et al v Switzerland, No 231/2003, UN Doc CAT/C/35/D/231/2003, 24 November 2005, para 5.3. The Committee did not accede to this request, since it found that the complainants had not adduced in relation to their Article 3 case sufficient grounds for believing that they would run a substantial, personal and present risk of being subjected to torture upon return to their country of origin, and it therefore would not need to consider the complainant’s request. is most difficult to prove. The limited possibilities for the Committee to take evidence, therefore, constitute a serious problem. One of the possibilities to provide equality of arms is to shift the burden of proof at least partly from the applicant to the State party.³⁰² If an applicant can prove, for example, that he or she entered a police station without any injuries and left it a few days later with visible injuries, it is up to the authorities of the State party to prove the reason for such injuries. Mere allegations that these were self-inflicted shall not be sufficient to dismiss well-substantiated allegations of the applicant.

159 Having said this, it is important to remember that the Committee emphasized in its General Comment No 4

it is the responsibility of the author ... to provide exhaustive arguments for his/her complaint of alleged violation of Article 3 of the Convention in such a way that, from the first impression (prima facie) or from subsequent submissions, if necessary, the Committee finds it relevant for consideration under article 22 of the Convention and fulfilling each of the requirements established under Rule 113 of the Committee's rules of procedure.³⁰³

It further stated that it is also the author's task to collect and present evidence in support of his or her account of events.³⁰⁴ Furthermore, 'it made it clear that it is not the Committee's place to question the evaluation of evidence by domestic courts unless it amounts to a denial of justice',³⁰⁵ that it would be not competent to pronounce itself on the standard of proof applied by national courts,³⁰⁶ and 'reiterate[d] that it is not an appellate, quasi-judicial or administrative body'.³⁰⁷

160 The Committee is not limited to the purported violations forwarded by the author,³⁰⁸ but has, ex officio, the possibility to widen the scope of the complaint. This has already been done during the consideration of the first three complaints concerning Argentina.³⁰⁹

161 In accordance with Rule 50 the decisions of the Committee require a majority vote of all members present. Rule 50 (2) provides that 'before voting, the Committee shall endeavour to reach its decisions by consensus, provided that the Convention and the rules of procedure are observed and that such efforts do not unduly delay the work of the Committee'.³¹⁰ In line with this, the Committee has mostly reached unanimous decisions on its cases.³¹¹ However, individual Committee members availed themselves of the possibility of appending an individual opinion to the decision as provided for by Rule 119.³¹²

³¹¹ On certain absurd consequences of maintaining the principle of consensus even in decisions on individual complaints with dissenting opinions see Nowak, CCPR Commentary (n 23) 708. Similarly, Ingelse (n 35) 106.

³¹² Strictly speaking Rule 113 provides for dissenting as well as concurring opinions. So far all individual opinions have been at least partly dissenting see TPS v Canada, No 99/1997 (n 171); Hajrizi Dzemajl et al v Yugoslavia, No 161/2000 (n 198); Agiza v Sweden, No 233/2003 (n 66); Roitman Rosenmann v Spain, No 176/2000 (n 31), TM v Sweden, No 228/2003 (n 95).

162 The Committee's adopted findings on the merits, which are called 'decisions' or 'views',³¹³ are presented in an article-by-article manner and explain if and why the Committee has found a violation of the Convention.

163 In accordance with Article 22(7) and Rule 118, the Committee shall forward its views to the State party concerned and to the complainant.

3.11.7 Decisions and Their Legal Effect

164 As with Article 5(4) of the first OP to the CCPR, Article 22(7) CAT uses the term 'views' for the final decisions on the merits. In reality, the 'final views' of the HRC and the CAT Committee are well-reasoned decisions of quasi-judicial expert bodies, which in their structure and quality of legal reasoning are fully comparable to judgments of international or domestic human rights courts.³¹⁴ This is the reason why in 2002 the CAT Committee amended its Rule of Procedures and decided to call its findings on the merits 'decisions' rather than 'views'.³¹⁵ The quasi-judicial nature of the Committee's decisions is also underlined by the right of Committee members provided by Rule 119 to append their individual opinions. As with all other treaty monitoring bodies of the United Nations, the Committee's decisions on the merits, from a strictly legal point of view, are not binding under international law.³¹⁶ This is certainly one of the major weaknesses of UN human rights treaty bodies in general.³¹⁷ On the other hand, the Committee's decisions can be considered as authoritative interpretation of the Convention under international law.³¹⁸ If the Committee, therefore, finds that a particular State party violated provisions of the Convention or requests that State party to adopt interim measures aimed at preventing a deportation in a given case, then these findings and decisions constitute an authoritative interpretation of the obligations under the Convention and any non-compliance by States parties must be considered as a violation of the respective obligations under the Convention.

165 The answer to the question of how far the Committee's decisions are actually binding upon the States parties is evidently a most crucial one, and ranks pivotal when it comes to the enforceability of individual rights embodied in the Convention.

166 As Ingelse notes, there are a number of arguments which, at first sight, would suggest that the individual complaints procedures carry insufficient legal weight, and could therefore be disregarded by States. The Convention does not contain any Article explicitly obliging States parties to put the decisions into practice, and the denotation of the Committee's decisions as 'views' instead of 'judgments' further reflects the non-binding character on a semantic level. This absence of binding and thus legally enforceable decisions is described by Schmidt as one, if not the, major lacuna, of the UN individual complaints procedures, including Article 22 CAT.³¹⁹

167 However, and despite these certainly important points, the decisions of the Committee are more than just mere recommendations that can be taken up by States parties at their discretion. They are, as stated by Hanski and Scheinin with regard to decisions by the HRC (which follows the same procedure as the CAT Committee), ‘the end result of a quasi-judicial adversarial international body established and elected by the States parties for the purpose of interpreting the provisions . . . and monitoring compliance with them’.³²⁰ They further argue that the basis of the procedure would be undermined if a State did not accept the Committee’s decision and replaced it with ‘its own interpretation’ after having ‘voluntarily subject[ed] itself to such a procedure’.³²¹

168 The CAT Committee, as the HRC, has chosen a detailed and powerful structure and method to consider individual complaints under Article 22(4). The ‘views’ or decisions taken by the CAT Committee are, as observed by the former HRC member Christian Tomuschat, ‘. . . a quasi-diplomatic communiqué but rather a statement clearly borrowing from judicial ideals’.³²²

169 A further entry-point establishing the quasi-binding nature of Article 22 decisions is Article 14 obliging States parties to offer redress to a victim whose rights under the Convention have been violated. Ingelse underlines that the States parties have mandated the Committee to adopt ‘a legal approach in order to come to an objective, Convention-based assessment of the observance of Convention obligations’.³²³ Once the Committee has established a violation, the State party is under an obligation to indicate how it will comply with Article 14 and provide remedy or redress for the violation.

170 During discussions in June 2006 on the information received from France on the follow-up of the cases *Arana v France*³²⁴ and *Brada v France*³²⁵ pursuant to the introduction of new follow-up measures, the Committee noted that many States parties implicitly do not understand their obligations under Article 22 when it comes to interim measures. Consequently, the Rapporteur on follow-up suggested that a general reminder explaining that the Committee is exercising legitimate powers under Article 22 should be added to future requests to States parties for updated information on decisions of the Committee. Further, he said that although the Committee’s decisions were not strictly mandatory, States parties have an obligation to comply with them in good faith. In addition, the Rapporteur stated that the practice of following up decisions was well established in customary law and the Committee should resist attempts that try to challenge this practice.³²⁶

171 Rule 121 stipulates that the Committee ‘shall include in its annual report the text of its final decisions under article 22, paragraph 7 of the Convention’. The Rule applies to both decisions on the merits and admissibility. The cases which are found to be inadmissible by the Committee have been published, except in the early years of the Committee, without the name of the complainant.³²⁷ Similarly, the Committee ‘may’ also decide to include a summary of the complaints examined, and, where considered appropriate, add a summary of the explanations and statements of the States parties concerned and of the Committee’s evaluation thereof.³²⁸ In practice, though the RoP have not formally changed, as of its annual report of 2015, the Committee has no longer included the full text of its decisions in the annual report.³²⁹

3.12 Follow-up Procedure

3.12.1 Development of the Follow-up Procedure

172 In contrast with established procedures on the regional level, the question of follow-up to decisions of UN human rights bodies has been a fairly new phenomenon gaining momentum only in the course of the 1990s. With the establishment of the Rapporteur for Follow-up on Views in 1990, the HRC was the first body to do so.³³⁰ The CAT Committee followed in 2002.

173 Under the Convention, the issue of follow-up was for a long time not formalized and not included in the annual reports.³³¹ A first step in this regard was taken during its twenty-fourth session in 2000, when the Committee took the decision that whenever a State party failed to respond within the time limit given, the Secretariat should, in consultation with the Rapporteur of the communication, send a reminder to the State concerned. This allowed the Committee to take the matter up in its subsequent session and could include it in its annual report, should this action not trigger any reaction by the State.³³² Not long after, at its twenty-eighth session in 2002, the Committee established the function of the Rapporteur for follow-up to decisions on complaints submitted under article 22.³³³

174 Although there is no explicit basis in the Convention for a follow-up procedure, there is nothing in it that would rule out the Committee staying in touch with the State party with respect to responses to its decisions.³³⁴ Article 22 mandates the Committee to ‘consider communications’, a wording not necessarily implying that a complainant’s consideration would be finalized with the adoption of the views.³³⁵ Furthermore, the implementation of a follow-up procedure can be qualified as power implicitly vested in the Committee, since it may enhance the effectiveness of the Convention.³³⁶

3.12.2 Indication of Reparation Measures by the Committee

175 According to Rule 118(5), the Committee shall invite a State party which was found to have violated the Convention to provide information within a ‘specific time period’ of the actions it has taken in conformity with the Committee’s decision. In practice, this time limit is set at ninety days.³³⁷ For each decision on the merits, in which it finds one or more violations of the Convention, the Committee indicates the need for appropriate measures of reparation and requests the State party concerned to report on the action it has taken in conformity with the Committee's decision.³³⁸

Until the amendment of the RoP during the twenty-eighth session, the State party was invited to reply more generally within ‘due course’ instead of a ‘specific time period’. The amendment, however, did not influence the Committee’s practice in setting a limit of 90 days. See CAT/C/3/Rev.3, para 111(5), A/57/44 (n 230) 232. The 90-day limit is modelled on the practice of the Human Rights Committee: see Nowak, CCPR Commentary (n 23) 896, § 43.

176 If in some cases the Committee limited itself to a very general statement, where it indicated that 'it wishes to be informed, within 90 days, on the steps taken by the State party to respond to this decision'.³³⁹ In others, it has included more detailed indications of the measures the State party should take in order to implement its decision. It has, for example, indicated that the State party should conduct a proper impartial and independent investigation conducted in line with the Istanbul Protocol,³⁴⁰ ordered the immediate release of the complainant,³⁴¹ or indicated the necessary legal reforms to be undertaken.³⁴² For example, in Ktiti v Morocco,³⁴³ the Committee urged 'the State party to review its legislation in order to incorporate a provision prohibiting any statement obtained under torture from being invoked as evidence in any proceedings, in conformity with article 15 of the Convention.' The follow-up to this case was, however, closed once the complainant had been released,³⁴⁴ and no real consideration seems to have been given to the more general legislative reforms specified by the Committee.

177 In this sense, there seems to be a clear trend in the Committee's jurisprudence to include in the final decisions on the merits not only specific and targeted remedies for the victim but also general recommendations to ensure the non-repetition of similar violations in the future, such as changes in law and practice. Such practice was also suggested as a 'common', 'good' practice for the strengthening of individual communications procedures by the OHCHR.³⁴⁵

3.12.3 The Rapporteur for Follow-up and Its Practice

178 The competence to follow-up to the decisions of the Committee resides with the Rapporteur for follow-up. The function of the Rapporteur for follow-up is regulated by Rule 120, which states that the Rapporteur may make contacts, take action, and make recommendations as appropriate for the due performance of the follow-up mandate and report accordingly to the Committee' (Rule 120(2)).

Its mandate covers, inter alia, the following activities:³⁴⁶

- monitoring compliance with the Committee's decisions by sending notes verbales to States parties enquiring about measures adopted pursuant to the Committee's decisions;
- recommending to the Committee appropriate action upon the receipt of responses from States parties, in situations of non-response, and upon the receipt henceforth of all letters from complainants concerning non-implementation of the Committee's decisions;
- meeting with representatives of the permanent missions of States parties to encourage compliance and to determine whether advisory services or technical assistance by OHCHR would be appropriate or desirable;

- conducting, with the approval of the Committee, follow-up visits to States parties;³⁴⁷
- preparing periodic reports for the Committee on his or her activities.

179 During its thirty-fourth session in November 2004, the Committee extended the Rapporteur's scope of duties by requesting the provision of information on follow-ups to all decisions in which the Committee had found a violation, including also those which had been decided prior to the establishment of the Rapporteur's mandate.³⁴⁸

180 The Rapporteur is obliged to inform the Committee regularly on the follow-up activities undertaken (Rule 120(3)). The reports of the Rapporteur have been included in the annual reports of the Committee until the fifty-second session.³⁴⁹ From the fifty-third session, reports were published as separate documents,³⁵⁰ and only general information on follow-up activities were included in the annual report.³⁵¹ The follow-up reports collect information, if received, from the State party as well as from the applicant. Moreover, since 2004 the Committee publishes a country-by-country list containing information on the Committee's decisions and the follow-up information received.³⁵² Such lists generally compile information received from States parties and complainants in the previous session.

181 In contrast to the follow-up to concluding observations, no guidelines have been published on the follow-up to individual complaints.³⁵³ Consequently, the criteria on the basis of which the Rapporteur assesses the implementation of the Committee's decisions are not made public. According to the latest available information, the Committee has closed the follow-up dialogue with a note of satisfactory or partially satisfactory resolution with regard to 55 out of a total of 131 communications where it had found violations of different provisions of the Convention.³⁵⁴ A note of 'satisfactory resolution' means that the Rapporteur closes the follow-up procedure and considers the decision fully implemented. In Article 3 cases, for example, the Committee has closed the follow-up dialogue with a note of satisfactory resolution when the complainant is granted refugee status or permanent residence.³⁵⁵ Less clear is the category of 'partially satisfactory resolution'. This means that the Rapporteur has decided to close the follow-up procedure although it does not consider the decision fully implemented. In practice, to date, the Rapporteur has made use of this category in three cases. In the first two instances, the Rapporteur has taken into consideration factors such as the fact that the State had paid individual financial compensation together with the fact that the case was 'quite old'.³⁵⁶ The third note of 'partially satisfactory resolution' was taken with regard to Keremedchiev

³⁴⁷ Since direct contacts with the States parties' missions in Geneva have so far been sufficient, no Rapporteur for Follow-up has ever made use of the possibility of carrying out an in-situ follow-up visit in a State party against which violations of the Convention had been found in an individual case. In addition, there are only limited budgetary means available in the Committee's budget for this purpose.

v Bulgaria.³⁵⁷ In this case, the Rapporteur did not refer to the years elapsed since the decision was taken, but only to the fact that the Bulgarian Government had agreed to pay individual financial compensation (5000 BGN). This may be explained with the fact that the Committee had recommended to provide not only financial compensation but ‘an effective remedy . . . including fair and adequate compensation for the suffering inflicted, in line with the Committee’s General Comment No 2, as well as medical rehabilitation’. The dialogue on follow-up was, in this case, kept open until the complainant was contacted to enquire whether he had been notified of the decision to provide him with compensation.³⁵⁸

182 When the Rapporteur deems that the State party has not yet taken the necessary measures indicated by the Committee’s decision³⁵⁹ or simply because it has not provided the requested information,³⁶⁰ the follow-up procedure is kept open and the dialogue with the State party continues. Under certain circumstances, the Rapporteur had decided to discontinue the follow-up procedure,³⁶¹ namely at the request of the complainant;³⁶² when the complainant had returned voluntarily to his country of origin,³⁶³ when a considerable period of time has lapsed.³⁶⁴

183 More generally, another way to follow-up to the Committee’s decision may be the Universal Periodic Review (UPR). Making reference to the Committee’s decisions and recommendations in the UPR will not increase the chances of implementation but also facilitate a more coordinated and integrated approach between different mechanisms.³⁶⁵

3.13 Reprisals

184 In contrast to other human rights treaties, the CAT does not contain a provision addressing expressly the issue of reprisal against individuals or organizations as a consequence for having communicated with its Committee. However, in setting out the right to compliant under Article 13, the Convention stipulates that ‘steps shall be taken to ensure that the complainant and witnesses are protected against all ill-treatment or intimidation as a consequence of his complaint or any evidence given’.³⁶⁶

³⁶⁶ Such an explicit provision is included in OPCAT (Art 15); OP3-CRC (Art 4); OP-ICESCR (Art 13); OP-CEDAW (Art 11). Some treaty bodies have regulated reprisals in their RoPs, ie CESCR; CEDAW; CRC;

185 As with other UN treaty bodies,³⁶⁷ the CAT Committee has recently clarified its position on reprisal. At its forty-ninth session in 2012 it decided to adopt a mechanism to prevent, monitor, and follow-up cases of reprisals against civil society organizations, human rights defenders, victims, and witnesses that engage and cooperate with the CAT mechanism.³⁶⁸

186 Further, at its fifty-first session the Committee adopted a statement on reprisal³⁶⁹ and established two rapporteurs: the Rapporteur on reprisals under Article 19 and the Rapporteur on reprisal under Articles 20 and 22.³⁷⁰ These decisions came soon after the 2012 recommendations on the strengthening of human rights treaty bodies, urging treaty bodies to set up ‘mechanisms for action’ against reprisals and a ‘focal point among its membership to draw attention to such cases’.³⁷¹

187 Finally, as a clear endorsement of the San José Guidelines by the Chairpersons of the treaty bodies, at its fifty-fifth session the Committee adopted detailed Guidelines on the receipt and handling of allegations of reprisals against individuals and organizations cooperating with the Committee under articles 13, 19, 20, and 22 of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.³⁷² The Guidelines indicate various ways of handling reprisals, including sending warnings to the State to protect the author of a communication from pressure or threats; bring to the attention of the authorities allegations of threats, acts of intimidation or other forms of reprisal against representatives of complainants, such as lawyers, relatives, or organizations, and if necessary, make an official protest and ask for remedial action. The same measures may be taken also in cases of ‘fear of reprisals’. Documents adopted by the Rapporteurs for reprisals are published online on the page of the OHCHR.³⁷³

However, in practice the function of the Rapporteur on reprisals under Article 20 was joint to that on reprisals under Article 22. In this sense see the subsequent annual reports A/70/44 (n 346) para 19; A/71/44 (n 351) para 18, which refer to ‘the rapporteur on reprisals under articles 20 and 22’.

Privileges and Immunities

The members of the Committee and of the ad hoc conciliation commissions which may be appointed under article 21, paragraph 1 (e), shall be entitled to the facilities, privileges and immunities of experts on mission for the United Nations as laid down in the relevant sections of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations.

1. Introduction

1 The system of privileges and immunities of United Nations (UN) officials and experts has its origin in Article 105 UN Charter, which reads as follows:

1. 'The Organization shall enjoy in the territory of each of its Members such privileges and immunities as are necessary for the fulfilment of its purposes.
2. Representatives of the Members of the United Nations and officials of the Organization shall similarly enjoy such privileges and immunities as are necessary for the independent exercise of their functions in connection with the Organization.
3. The General Assembly may make recommendations with a view to determining the details of the application of paragraphs 1 and 2 of this Article or may propose conventions to the Members of the United Nations for this purpose'.

2 In accordance with Article 105(3), the General Assembly adopted a resolution on 13 February 1946 in which it approved the General Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations.¹ This UN treaty applies to both UN officials and experts on mission. Since the UN human rights treaty monitoring bodies, with the exception of the Committee on Economic, Social, and Cultural Rights which was established by ECOSOC, are in the strict legal sense not organs of the UN, the UN Legal Counsel recommended during the drafting of the Covenants the adoption of a specific provision aimed at extending the privileges and immunities of UN experts on mission to the members of the Human Rights Committee (HRC). Consequently, a respective provision was adopted in Article 43 CCPR, which applies not only to the members of the HRC, but also to those of ad hoc conciliation commissions established under Article 42 CCPR.² This provision served as the model for Article 23 CAT. Other UN human rights treaties, such as CERD, CEDAW, and CRC, do not contain a similar provision, but there seems to be no doubt that the members of the respective treaty monitoring bodies shall be entitled to the same privileges and immunities. Later treaties, such as Article 72(9) CMW, Article 26(8) CED and Article 34(13) CRPD, and Article 35 OPCAT contain more precise provisions referring to the relevant sections of the Immunities Convention.

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

5 The Working Group of the Human Rights Commission did not deal with the supervisory mechanism of the Convention in its sessions between 1978 and 1980. However, the written comments of several States, made in 1978, on the implementation provisions of the original Swedish draft convention⁵ shaped the subsequent discussions of the Working Group.⁶

6 The first time the implementation provisions were discussed within the Working Group was in 1981. The general debate which took place during that session was largely based on the original Swedish draft.⁷ In 1982 the Working Group considered implementation provisions more thoroughly,⁸ that time on the basis of a revised Swedish draft.⁹

7 The wording of Article 23 of the draft Convention submitted by the Working Group in 1983 was identical to that of Article 33 proposed by Sweden in 1981.¹⁰ This provision did not give rise to further discussions, but was not formally adopted at that stage.¹¹ In 1984, draft Article 23, which met with no objections from the Working Group, was formally adopted.¹²

3. Issues of Interpretation

8 Article 23 CAT is taken verbatim from Article 43 CCPR. Comparable provisions are also included in regional international human rights instruments.¹³ Conversely, certain UN treaty monitoring bodies have not been granted such explicit privileges and immunities.¹⁴ Following some early discussions and proposals within the Human Rights Commission regarding Article 43 CCPR,¹⁵ it was finally decided to grant members of the HRC and of the ad hoc Conciliation Commission established in accordance with Article 42 CCPR the same facilities, privileges, and immunities as those of experts in the field of the UN. The same status applies to members of the Committee against Torture and of its ad hoc Conciliation Commissions.

9 As stated in Section 23 of the Immunities Convention, the basic principle of this immunity is designed to serve the interests of the UN as an organization, rather than the interests of individuals themselves. The privileges and immunities laid out in the latter cover immunity from personal arrest or detention; seizure of personal baggage; legal process with respect to words spoken or written and acts performed in the course of the Committee functions, as well as the inviolability of all papers and documents and the right to use codes for communications with the UN.¹⁶ These privileges and immunities apply to all States in which Committee members perform their tasks, or through whose territory they travel for this purpose. Since Committee members only exceptionally carry out field missions,¹⁷ Article 23 primarily applies to Switzerland and the home countries of the Committee members.

10 As they pertain to words spoken or written, as well as to acts performed by experts in their official capacity, these immunities are said to be functional.¹⁸ Moreover, as clearly stated in Section 22(b) of the General Convention, members of the Committee will continue to be granted this specific immunity even when they are no longer in UN service.¹⁹

Annual Report

The Committee shall submit an annual report on its activities under this Convention to the States Parties and to the GA of the United Nations.

3.2 Publication of the Annual Report	647

1. Introduction

1 The annual reports of human rights treaty monitoring bodies provide the public with a comprehensive description of the various activities of the respective committees as well as of the controversial issues discussed among their members. Since these expert bodies are, legally speaking, not organs of the United Nations (UN), the annual reports also serve the purpose of strengthening the link to the relevant political bodies of the UN which have the task and power to ensure that the findings of these expert bodies are in fact implemented by States parties. Consequently, some human rights treaties explicitly provide that the respective treaty bodies shall in their annual reports make suggestions and general recommendations to the political UN bodies based on their monitoring experiences.¹ However, neither Article 45 CCPR nor Article 24 CAT contains a similar provision.

2 The respective treaty provisions differ as to the addressee of annual reports. Article 9(2) CERD provides that the Committee shall report through the Secretary-General to the General Assembly (GA). Articles 45 CCPR, 21 CEDAW, and 44(5) CRC require the respective reports to be submitted through ECOSOC to the GA, but the CEDAW report shall also be transmitted to the Commission on the Status of Women. Article 74(7) of the Migrant Workers Convention requests the Committee to present its report directly to the GA, but the Secretary-General shall also transmit this report to the States parties, ECOSOC, the Commission on Human Rights (since 2006 Human Rights Council), the Director-General of the ILO and other relevant organizations. The CED Committee shall, based on Article 36, report to the States parties and to the GA. According to Article 39 Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (CRDP), the treaty monitoring body of this Convention shall submit a report to the GA and to the ECOSOC only every two years. Finally, the Subcommittee on Prevention, pursuant to Article 16(3) OP, shall present a public annual report on its activities to the Committee against Torture.²

3 The CAT Committee is, together with the CED Committee,³ the only treaty monitoring body which, pursuant to Article 24 CAT, shall report directly to the States parties and the GA. As explained by Herman Burgers and Hans Danelius, ‘the authors of the present Convention considered that the responsibility of the Committee against Torture towards the States Parties which have elected it should come first and foremost’.⁴ In practice, it does not make much difference to which organ the reports are officially addressed. They are public documents,⁵ and any political body of the UN with a human rights function can take them up, discuss any relevant issue and adopt recommendations to the respective treaty bodies as well as to the States parties with the aim of improving their implementation of the relevant treaty obligations. After the establishment of the Human Rights Council in June 2006, the universal periodic review has become an important forum to urge governments to comply with the respective decisions and recommendations of human rights treaty bodies.⁶

4 The annual reports of the CAT Committee are published as Supplements to the Official Records of the GA and are at the same time transmitted to all States parties to the Convention. In addition to organizational and procedural matters, the annual reports contain comprehensive chapters on the activities of the Committee under the State reporting, inquiry and individual complaints procedures.

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

12 The Working Group of the Human Rights Commission did not deal with the supervisory mechanism of the Convention in its sessions between 1978 and 1980. Consequently, no reference was made to the question of annual reporting during this period. However, the written comments of several States, made in 1978, regarding the implementation provisions of the original Swedish draft convention,¹⁵ shaped the subsequent discussions of the Working Group.¹⁶

13 The first time the Working Group discussed the implementation provisions specifically was in 1981. The general debate which took place during that session was largely based on the original Swedish draft.¹⁷ In 1982 the Working Group carried out a more thorough debate regarding the implementation provisions¹⁸ on the basis of a revised Swedish draft.¹⁹

14 During the 1983 session, the question of annual reporting was discussed for the first time on the basis of Article 34 of the Swedish draft,²⁰ which provided, in accordance with Article 45 CCPR, for the submission of an annual report by the Committee to the GA of the through the ECOSOC.

15 In view of completing this provision, it was generally observed that, given the responsibility of the supervisory body towards the States parties that had elected it,²¹ they should be the primary recipients of the annual reports. The Working Group therefore agreed that these reports should primarily be addressed to them in the first instance. Regarding the submission of reports to the GA, the discussion led the Working Group to conclude that it was unnecessary to have ECOSOC act as an intermediary.²² In connection with this last point, reference was made to CERD, which did not contain such a provision. Following these discussions, the Chairman-Rapporteur proposed a new version of the text, which read as follows: 'The Committee shall submit an annual report on its activities under this Convention to the States parties and to the General Assembly of the United Nations.'²³ This redrafted article met with no objections from the Working Group,²⁴ yet was not formally adopted at this stage.

16 In 1983, the issue of annual reporting was also highlighted in the discussions relating to the State reporting procedure of draft Article 19, of which paragraph 4 offered the Committee the following possibility: 'The Committee may, at its discretion, decide to include any comments or suggestions made by it in accordance with paragraph 3, together with the observations thereon received from the State party concerned, in its annual report made in accordance with Article ...'²⁵

17 Regarding the inquiry procedure detailed in draft Article 20, and particularly the confidentiality requirement contained in paragraph 5, consensus was reached within the Working Group to keep the proceedings confidential as long as they were still in progress.²⁶ The question of maintaining confidentiality once the inquiry procedure had been completed was brought up. On the initiative of the Australian delegation,²⁷ some delegations proposed that confidentiality could be set aside once such proceedings had been finalized in respect of a particular case and that a summary of the results should be included in the annual report. The Working Group finally decided that the Committee should have the possibility of including a summary of the results in its annual report. This decision resulted in the adoption of a new paragraph 5 based on the draft text submitted by the Chairman-Rapporteur.²⁸

18 During the 1984 Working Group session Article 24 did not give rise to any objections and was thus formally adopted.²⁹

3. Issues of Interpretation

3.1 Content of the Annual Report

19 Following the example of other treaty monitoring bodies,³⁰ the Committee reports annually on its activities on the basis of Article 24 and Rule 64. Published as Supplement No 44 to the Official Records of the GA³¹ the Committee has, to this date, submitted thirty annual reports, ranging from forty-six pages in 1988 to 282 pages in 2006, 492 pages in 2014, and around twenty pages since 2015.³² Article 24 and Rule 64 do not contain any specific requirements as to what the annual reports should cover and only quite generally mention the Committee's activities. Rule 64 does, however, state that the annual reports should include 'a reference to the activities of the Subcommittee on Prevention, as they appear in the public annual report submitted by the Subcommittee to the Committee under article 16, paragraph 3, of the Optional Protocol'.³³ Specific indications as to what the Committee may publish in its annual reports can be found in the Convention provisions referring to State reporting (Article 19(4))³⁴ and the inquiry procedures (Article 20(5))³⁵ but not, however, in respect of the individual complaints procedure. To this extent, more guidance on the individual complaints procedure is given by Rule 121(2), which establishes that the annual report shall include the full text of its final decisions on the merits as well as—at the discretion of the Committee—a summary of the complaints examined, and the explanations and statements of the States parties concerned. As of 2011, the RoP also state that general comments shall be included in the Committee's annual report (Rule 74(2)). In light of these provisions and rules, the Committee, in the past, pursued the practice of publishing in its annual reports the full text of all decisions on the admissibility and merits of individual complaints,³⁶ the summary accounts of all results of inquiry procedures³⁷ as well as all conclusions and recommendations on each State report.³⁸ However, taking into account the GA resolution 68/268 of 2014 establishing a 10,700 word-limit for each document produced by the human rights treaty bodies and the rule not to include documents published separately and referenced in the annual reports, regrettably, the Committee's annual reports no longer include these elements as of 2015.³⁹

³⁰ See eg Art 45 CCPR; Art 9(2) CERD; Art 21 CEDAW.

³⁵ See also Rule 90 (3) on the publication of summary accounts of the inquiry proceedings.

³⁷ The summary accounts of all results of inquiry procedures were included in annual reports from 1994 until 2014.

³⁹ GA Res 68/268 of 9 April 2014, paras 4 and 15, where it is stated that documents published separately should not be included in the annual report 'without prejudice to the formulation of the annual report of each human rights treaty body as laid out in the respective treaty' (para 4).

20 As regards their structure, in addition to organizational and similar matters, the annual reports contain an overview of the actions taken by the Committee at its latest session and a section relating to the submission of reports by States parties under Article 19 CAT, including a subsection on action taken by the Committee to ensure the submission of reports. The sections which then follow are dedicated to the consideration of State party reports under Article 19; follow-up to concluding observations on States parties' reports; activities of the Committee under Article 20; and, finally, communications under Article 22.

21 The annexes to the annual report have been significantly reduced since GA Resolution 68/268 was passed in 2014. Until 2014, the annexes generally contained three updated lists: one including all the States that have signed, ratified, or acceded to the Convention;⁴⁰ one comprising all the States parties that have declared that they do not recognize the competence of the Committee as provided for by Article 20 CAT;⁴¹ and another one comprising all those States parties that have made declarations under Articles 21 and 22 CAT.⁴² In the past, the annexes to the annual report also contained information relating to the membership of the Committee;⁴³ the status of submission of reports by States parties.⁴⁴ Furthermore, the Committee followed the practice of the Human Rights Committee of publishing the full text of its admissibility decisions and final views in an annex to its annual report.⁴⁵ In its 1998, 2008, and 2013 annual reports, the Committee reproduced the texts of its general comments.⁴⁶ Since 2015, however, the only annex included in the annual report contains information relating to the Committee's membership, officers, and mandates.⁴⁷

3.2 Publication of the Annual Report

reports, as all other official documents of the Committee, are public and available for free consultation in UN offices, national departments of foreign affairs, and the larger libraries,⁴⁹ as well as on the website of the OHCHR.⁵⁰

23 The GA has, in its resolutions based on the reports of the Third Committee, regularly welcomed the work of the Committee and underlined the quality of its reports. Moreover, in 1995, the GA expressed its satisfaction in relation to the modified presentation of the annual reports and for the improvements made in the Committee's working methods.⁵¹ In 2006, the GA welcomed the inclusion by the Committee of information on the follow-up by States to its recommendations.⁵² In 2012, the GA welcomed the efforts made by the Committee to improve the efficiency of its working methods, including with a view to further harmonizing the working methods of the treaty bodies, and urged the Committee to continue its activities in this regard.⁵³

24 Although the annual reports are in fact prepared by the Secretariat, the Rapporteur of the Committee has the formal responsibility for the accuracy of the reports. The Rapporteur, who is an officer of the Committee, is elected from among Committee members for a term of two years in accordance with Article 18(1) and Rules 16 and 17.⁵⁴ The following Committee members have served as Rapporteur: Dimitar Nikolov Mikhailov from Bulgaria (1988–1989), Peter Thomas Burns from Canada (1990–1993), Bent Sørensen from Denmark (1994–1995 and 1998–1999), Julia Iliopoulos-Strangas from Greece (1996–1997), Sayed Kassan El Masry from Egypt (2000–2005), Felice Gaer from the United States (2006–2007), Myrna Kleopas from Cyprus (2008–2010), Nora Sveaass from Norway (2010–2012 and 2012–2014), Satyabhooshun Gupt Domah from Mauritius (2014–2015), Essadia Belmir from Morocco (January–April 2016), and Sébastien Touzé from France (April 2016–present).⁵⁵

5 The Working Group discussed the final clauses including the provisions leading to Article 25 in its meetings in 1983⁵ and 1984.⁶

6 During the Working Group's discussion in 1983, which were based on the set of final clauses contained in the Swedish draft, participants pointed out a contradiction between Article A(2) and Article C(1) with respect to the possibility for accession prior to the Convention's entry into force, which prompted the Chairman-Rapporteur to submit a revised set of final clauses at its eleventh meeting.⁷ In this version, the provisions referring to signature and ratification were joined in a new Article, now numbered as Article 25. Its wording already corresponded to the final version eventually adopted.

7 However, due to time constraints, the Working Group did not formally adopt any of the proposed final clauses. It rather decided to put the revised set of final clauses as proposed by the Chairman-Rapporteur in brackets to the annex of its report to the Commission on Human Rights.⁸ On 24 February 1983, the Working Group adopted this report without a vote.⁹

8 On 30 January 1984, the Working Group adopted Article 25 as contained in the annex to the 1983 report.¹⁰ After the conclusion of its deliberations, the Article was included without brackets in the report to the Commission on Human Rights¹¹ and was eventually adopted by the General Assembly.¹²

3. Issues of Interpretation

9 Article 25(1) opens the Convention for signature by all States. In accordance with Article 18(a) VCLT (Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties), the signing of the Convention creates an obligation for the State 'to refrain from acts which would defeat the object and purpose of the treaty' and furthermore, entitles the State to proceed to ratification. The signature, however, neither establishes an obligation to ratify, nor the consent to be bound by the treaty. With respect to potential membership of the Convention, Article 25(1) takes a comprehensive approach by opening it for signature to all States. In contrast, non-member States of the United Nations, such as Switzerland at that time, could only sign and ratify CERD and the Covenants upon invitation by the General Assembly.¹³

10 Pursuant to Article 25(2) the Convention is subject to ratification. Ratification is an official and formal expression of a State's consent to be bound by a treaty.¹⁴ In most democratic countries, such an expression has to be preceded by an approval by Parliament. The instrument of ratification is subsequently to be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who is assigned the role of the depositary by the Convention. Article 77 VCLT provides for the functions of depositaries, which include, inter alia, the receiving of any signatures to the treaty and receiving and keeping custody of any instruments, or informing the States entitled to become parties to the treaty when the number of signatures or instruments of ratification or accession required for the entry into force of the treaty has been received.¹⁵

11 The Convention entered into force on 26 June 1987. Thirty days earlier, Denmark had been the twentieth State to express its consent to be bound by the Convention, and thus to submit the instrument of ratification with the Secretary-General. As of December

Accession and Succession

This Convention is open to accession by all States. Accession shall be effected by the deposit of an instrument of accession with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

1. Introduction

1 The Convention was adopted and opened for signature, ratification and accession by GA Resolution 39/46 on 10 December 1984, the United Nations' human rights day, without a vote. Article 26 supplements Article 25 on signature and ratification and stipulates how to become party to the Convention by means of accession. Though succession is not explicitly mentioned, in practice, several States have used this means to become Party to the Convention.¹

2 The Convention entered into force on 26 June 1987, on the thirtieth day after the twentieth State party had submitted its instrument expressing the consent to be bound by the treaty with the Secretary-General. Out of these first twenty States parties, five States had joined the Convention by means of accession. As of December 2017, in total, seventy-eight States have deposited their instrument of accession with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, while seventy-eight States joined by means of ratification. Seven States declared themselves to be bound by the Convention by means of succession.

Article XVIII

(Accession)

Accession shall be effected by the deposit of an instrument of accession with the Secretary-General of the United Nations

4 *Proposal for the Preamble and the Final Provisions of the Draft Convention, Submitted by Sweden (22 December 1980)*³

Article A

1. The present Convention is open for signature by all States at United Nations Headquarters in New York.

2. Any State which does not sign the Convention before its entry into force may accede to it.

Article B

1. The present Convention is subject to ratification. Instruments of ratification shall be deposited with the Secretary General of the United Nations.

2. Accession shall be effected by the deposit of an instrument of accession with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Article 26

This Convention is open to accession by all States. Accession shall be effected by the deposit of an instrument of accession with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

6 The Working Group discussed the final clauses including the provisions leading to Article 26 during its meetings in 1983⁵ and 1984.⁶

7 During the Working Group's discussion, a contradiction between Articles A(2) and Article C(1) was noted. While the earlier provision was understood as limiting the possibility to accede to the Convention to the period after it had entered into force, the latter allowed for the deposit of the instrument of accession prior to its entry into force. The solutions put forward to settle this issue included inter alia deletion of the words 'or accession' in Article C(1), keeping the Convention open for signature indefinitely as well as allowing for accession right from the beginning, or introducing changes in Article A(1) allowing signatures only for a limited time period.⁷

8 Taking this contradiction and the proposed solutions into consideration, the Chairman-Rapporteur submitted to the Working Group in its eleventh meeting a revised version of the final clauses.⁸ The new Article, now numbered as Article 26, stipulated that '[t]his Convention is open to accession by all States. Accession shall be effected by the deposit of an instrument of accession with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.' Accordingly, the Convention was to provide for accession as well as signature followed by ratification, both prior to and after it had entered into force.

9 Due to time constraints, the Working Group eventually did not formally adopt any of the discussed final clauses in 1983. It decided to put the revised set of final clauses as proposed by the Chairman-Rapporteur in brackets to the annex of its report to the Commission on Human Rights.⁹ On 24 February 1983, the Working Group adopted this report without a vote.¹⁰

10 On 30 January 1984, the Working Group adopted Article 26 as contained in the annex to the 1983 report.¹¹ After the conclusion of its deliberations, the Article was included without brackets in the report to the Commission on Human Rights¹² and was eventually adopted by the General Assembly.¹³

3.1 Accession

11 Accession is an alternative to signature and subsequent ratification of a treaty and it leads to the same end, ie becoming a party to the treaty.¹⁴ In principle, States are free whether they wish to sign a treaty first and later submit it to ratification or to accede without prior signature. If a treaty remains open for signature only for a certain period of time,¹⁵ States wishing to become party after this deadline can only join by means of accession. Certain treaties provide for accession only after their international entry into force.¹⁶ Article A(2) of the Swedish draft of final provisions was based on this assumption when it envisaged that any State which does not sign the Convention 'before its entry into force' may accede to it.¹⁷ The final text of Article 27 confirms, however, that accession to the Convention may take place before and after its entry into force.¹⁸ This expression of consent is performed by lodging a corresponding instrument with the Secretary-General. Article 26 assigns to the Secretary-General the function of depositary.¹⁹

⁸ E/CN.4/1983/WG.2/WP.15 (n 4); see above § 5.

12 Both Articles 25 and 26 contain an ‘all States clause’. This corresponds more to recent UN human rights treaties than it does to both Covenants and CERD, since the latter require an explicit invitation by the General Assembly to become party by means of ratification or accession.²⁰ In practice, there is no difference between the two as the General Assembly has invited all States to accede.²¹ Only independent States which exhibit all the elements of statehood required under international law are allowed to sign, ratify or accede to the Convention. In case of doubt, the UN Secretary-General as depositary usually consults the General Assembly for advice.

3.2 Succession

13 Succession is not explicitly mentioned as a means of becoming party to the Convention. Although Article 26, as with other UN human rights treaties, is silent about succession, a total of seven States became parties to the Convention by means of succession:²² Croatia (12 October 1992), the Czech Republic (22 February 1993), Slovakia (28 May 1993), Bosnia and Herzegovina (1 September 1993), the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (12 December 1994), Serbia and Montenegro (12 March 2001), and Montenegro (23 October 2006). The sixth former Yugoslav Republic, Slovenia, however, acceded on 16 July 1993. Since the Russian Federation was considered the principal State successor to the former Soviet Union, which had ratified the Convention already on 3 March 1987, it deposited neither an instrument of accession nor succession after the dismemberment of the Soviet Union. The other former Soviet Republics acceded to the Convention, albeit at considerably different dates as the following chronological list shows: Estonia (21 October 1991), Latvia (14 April 1992), Armenia (13 September 1993), Georgia (26 October 1994), Tajikistan (11 January 1995), Uzbekistan (28 September 1995), Republic of Moldova (28 November 1995), Lithuania (1 February 1996), Azerbaijan (16 August 1996), Kyrgyzstan (5 September 1997), Kazakhstan (26 August 1998), and Turkmenistan (25 June 1999). Belarus and Ukraine, although formerly part of the USSR (Byelorussian and Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republics), were considered as separate subjects of international law during the Soviet time and, therefore, as the Russian Federation, did not deposit any instrument of accession.

14 This State practice raises a number of difficult questions of interpretation, since ‘State succession is an area of great uncertainty and controversy’.²³ Are States free to choose between accession and succession? If any of the successor States refrains from depositing an instrument of accession or succession or does so with a considerable delay, does this mean that it has no obligations under the Convention after the dismemberment of the predecessor State? Is the deposit of an instrument of succession of a constitutive or only declaratory nature?

15 The Human Rights Committee has addressed some of these questions in relation to the CCPR by means of a ‘General Comment on issues relating to the continuity of obligations to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.²⁴ The question of succession is closely related to the question of denunciation or withdrawal which, in the absence of a specific provision in the relevant treaty, is only permitted under the VCLT if it is intended by the parties or implied from the nature of the treaty.²⁵ The HRC concluded that 'the Covenant is not the type of treaty which, by its nature, implies a right of denunciation'.²⁶ Furthermore, the rights enshrined in the Covenant belong to the people living in the territory of the State party. The HRC has consistently taken the view, as evidenced by its long-standing practice, that once the people are accorded the protection of the rights under the Covenant, such protection devolves with territory and continues to belong to them, notwithstanding change in Government of the State party, including dismemberment in more than one State or State succession or any subsequent action of the State party designed to divest them of the rights guaranteed by the Covenant.²⁷

On the basis of these legal considerations, the HRC refused to accept the notification of withdrawal by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and developed the doctrine of continuity of obligations even in the absence of any formal instrument of succession.²⁸ For example, despite the fact that Kazakhstan had not deposited any instrument of accession or succession after the dismemberment of the Soviet Union, the HRC treated the Central Asian Republic as a continuing State party and requested the submission of State reports. This doctrine was also applied to Hong Kong and Macau.²⁹

16 In contrast to both Covenants, Article 31 CAT contains an explicit denunciation clause.³⁰ Nevertheless, in the absence of a notification of denunciation by a successor State, the doctrine of continuity of obligations, in our opinion, equally applies to CAT. Since no State has ever denounced the Convention, the people in the former Czechoslovakia, the former Yugoslavia and in all Republics of the former Soviet Union (not just in the Russian Federation, Belarus and the Ukraine), therefore, continued to enjoy all rights stipulated in the Convention. This implies also that in the period between dismemberment and the deposit of an instrument of accession or succession, the newly independent States had automatically taken over the various substantive and procedural obligations from their predecessor States. The Government of Turkmenistan which, for example, only deposited its instrument of accession in 1999, was nevertheless bound to comply with all obligations deriving from the Convention between the dismemberment of the Soviet Union and 1999, including the obligation under Article 19 to submit periodic reports to the Committee.

17 The Committee against Torture seems, however, to have taken a different view. During the 1990s, Turkmenistan was never listed as a State party in the Committee's annual reports.³¹ After its instrument of accession was received on 25 June 1999, Turkmenistan was listed as a new member State with 25 July 1999 indicated as the date of the Convention's entry into force, with the consequence that the initial report was due on 25 July 2000.³² This means that the Committee is under the impression that the Convention only entered into force on 25 July 1999, ie thirty days after the deposit of the instrument of accession, as specified in Article 27(2). In other words, the Committee clearly did not apply the doctrine of continuing obligations to Turkmenistan.

18 Similarly, Slovenia, which deposited its instrument of accession on 16 July 1993, is considered as having become a State party on 15 August 1993, ie thirty days after the deposit but more than two years after its independence from the former Yugoslavia.³³ On the other hand, Bosnia and Herzegovina, which deposited its instrument of succession on 1 September 1993, is considered as having become a State party to the Convention on 6 March 1992, ie at the time of independence from the former Yugoslavia.³⁴ Similarly, Croatia and Montenegro which deposited instruments of succession respectively on 12 October 1992 and 23 October 2006, are considered as having become a State party on 8 October 1991 and 3 June 2006, ie at the time of independence from the former Yugoslavia.³⁵ This practice seems to indicate that the Committee makes a distinction between accession and succession. Since the dates of the receipt of the instruments of succession with respect to successor States are not consistent in the annual reports, it is, however, difficult to assess whether the Committee applies the doctrine of continuity of obligations to States which deposited an instrument of succession rather than of accession.

19 The status of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and as of 2006 Serbia under the Convention is worth further consideration. The Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia signed the Convention on 18 April 1989 and deposited its instrument of ratification on 10 September 1991, ie during a violent armed conflict between its two federal Republics of Serbia and Croatia. The Convention entered into force on 10 October 1991.³⁶ While the 1993 annual report lists the country as Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro),³⁷ the following reports simply refer to Yugoslavia. In the 2002 annual report, Yugoslavia suddenly appears on the list of successor States, with 10 September 1991 as the date of receipt of the instrument of succession.³⁸ In the following year, however, Yugoslavia disappears from the list of States parties and is replaced by Serbia and Montenegro as a successor State with 12 March 2001 as the date of receipt of the instrument of succession.³⁹ 12 March 2001 is also indicated as the date of entry into force of the declarations

See also the dates for the second periodic reports of Tajikistan, Kyrgyzstan and Kazakhstan. ³⁴ A/61/44 (n 22) Annex V. In the annual report of 1993, Bosnia and Herzegovina was, however, not yet listed as a State party: A/48/44, Annexes I and III. It figures for the first time in the 1994 annual report, however, with 6 March 1992 as both the date of receipt of the instrument of succession and the date of entry into force: CAT, 'Report of the Committee Against Torture Twenty-seventh Session (12–23 November 2001) Twenty-eighth Session (29 April–17 May 2002)' (2002) UN Doc A/57/44, Annexes I and V.

³⁵ cf A/61/44 (n 22) Annex I. Again, the dates in the earlier reports are different. In the annual report of 1993, 8 October was indicated as both the date of receipt of Croatia's instrument of succession and as the date of entry into force of the Convention: A/48/44, Annexes I and III.

under Articles 21 and 22.⁴⁰ After the independence of Montenegro, the same date is used to indicate the date of receipt of the instrument of succession of Serbia.⁴¹ In the table concerning the situation of overdue reports, the second and third periodic reports of Serbia and Montenegro were listed as having been due on 9 October 1996 and 9 October 2000, respectively.⁴² It seems, therefore, that the Committee had treated Serbia and Montenegro and then, Serbia, simply as the main successor State of the former Yugoslavia without any interruption in the protection of human rights, similar to the status of the Russian Federation as the principle successor State of the former Soviet Union. This was also underlined by the treatment of individual complaints against Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro).⁴³

20 Despite the difference between the Covenants and the Convention with regard to the possibility of denunciation, the practice of the Human Rights Committee seems to be more convincing than that of the Committee against Torture. If one applies the doctrine of continuity of obligations, it is no longer relevant whether successor States deposit an instrument of accession, succession, or no instrument at all. This is the only way of ensuring that there is no gap in the protection of human rights in the case of dismemberment of States. As from the day of independence, the Government of the newly independent State takes over from its predecessor all substantive and procedural obligations under the Convention, including the obligation to submit periodic reports. If it does not wish to be bound by the Convention, it has the possibility of denunciation under Article 31. But the fact that a Government, for whatever reason, is a few years late in depositing its instrument of accession or succession, as with most Central Asian States, cannot be the reason for an interruption of the international human rights protection of its inhabitants. Similarly, the fact that a Government, for whatever reason, deposits an instrument of accession instead of succession, as in the case of Slovenia, cannot be a valid reason for a gap in the human rights protection of its inhabitants either.

21 There remains the question as to whether successor States are also bound by the reservations under Articles 28 and 30 and by the declarations under Articles 21 and 22 of predecessor States. This issue is for example relevant for the successor States of the Socialist Federalist Republic of Yugoslavia, which at the time of ratification had made declarations recognizing the competence of the Committee with regard to Articles 21 and 22. Among them, Croatia, Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), and then Montenegro confirmed the declarations under Article 21 and 22 (respectively, on 12 October 1992, 12 March 2001, and 23 October 2006). On the contrary, Bosnia Herzegovina confirmed only the declaration of the Socialist Federalist Republic of Yugoslavia concerning the competence of the Committee in relation to individual complaints (4 June 2003) but not the competence in relation to inter-State complaints. The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia has confirmed neither of them. The Committee does not list the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia under the countries accepting the competence of the Committee under Articles 21 and 22 nor Bosnia Herzegovina under those accepting the Committee's competence under Article 21.⁴⁴ In other words, it seems that only those successor States that have explicitly confirmed their predecessor declarations under Article 21 and 22 are considered by the Committee among those accepting the Committee's competence for the inter-State and individual complaints procedures.

Entry into Force

1. This Convention shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after the date of the deposit with the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the twentieth instrument of ratification or accession.
2. For each State ratifying this Convention or acceding to it after the deposit of the twentieth instrument of ratification or accession, the Convention shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after the date of the deposit of its own instrument of ratification or accession.

1. Introduction

1 On 26 June 1987, the Convention against Torture entered into force. Thirty days earlier, Denmark had submitted its instrument of ratification with the Secretary-General, passing the threshold of twenty instruments for the treaty's entry into force as stipulated in Article 27(1). Reflecting the importance of this date, the UN General Assembly (GA) adopted in 1998 a resolution¹ following a recommendation of ECOSOC in which it declared 26 June as the International Day in Support of Victims of Torture.

2 As of December 2017, a total of 162 States were parties to the CAT. Compared with the number of States parties to other international human rights treaties, such as CRC (196 parties), CEDAW (189), CERD (179), the CCPR (169), or the CESCRC (166), the Convention ranks somewhat lower. This seems surprising as the prohibition of torture constitutes jus cogens under international law.

3 As provided by Article 27, the Secretary-General acts as depositary. According to Article 77(1)(f) VCLT, this function also includes the task of informing 'the States entitled to become parties to the treaty when the number of signatures or of instruments of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession required for the entry into force of the treaty has been received or deposited'.

Article 27

1. This Convention shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after the date of the deposit with the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the [twentieth] instrument of ratification or accession.
2. For each State ratifying this Convention or acceding to it after the deposit of the [twentieth] instrument of ratification or accession, the Convention shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after the date of the deposit of its own instrument of ratification or accession.

7 The Working Group discussed the final clauses in 1983⁵ and 1984.⁶

8 In 1983, the discussion on Article C of the Swedish draft set of final clauses focused mainly on the number of ratifications or accessions necessary for the entry into force of the Convention. Some delegations favoured a threshold of thirty-five ratifications or accessions, similar to Article 49 CCPR and Article 27 CESC. Other delegations deemed such a high number neither necessary nor desirable and referred to other instruments such as the OP to the CCPR or the CEDAW, requiring a substantially lower number of ratifications or accessions (ten and twenty ratifications or accessions, respectively).⁷

9 With regard to Article C(2), providing for the possibility to accede to the Convention before its actual entry into force, the Working Group observed a contradiction with Article A(2) of the same proposal, since the latter only allowed for an accession after its entry into force. The solutions put forward included, inter alia, the deletion of the words 'or accession' in Article C(1), keeping the Convention open for signature indefinitely as well as allowing for accession right from the beginning, or introducing changes in Article A(1) allowing signatures only for a limited time period.⁸

10 Reflecting the above summarized discussions, the Chairman-Rapporteur submitted to the Working Group a revised version of the final clauses.⁹ As a new threshold for the Convention's entry into force, the proposed Article, now numbered as Article 27, struck a balance between the earlier voiced opinions with the requirement of twenty instruments of ratification or accession.

11 Due to time constraints, the Working Group eventually did not formally adopt any of the proposed final clauses in 1983, but decided to put the revised set of final clauses as proposed by the Chairman-Rapporteur in brackets to the annex of its report to the Commission on Human Rights.¹⁰ On 24 February 1983, the Working Group adopted this report without a vote.¹¹ On 30 January 1984, the Working Group finally adopted Article 27 without any further changes.¹²

3. Issues of Interpretation

12 While the two principal human rights Covenants, the CCPR and CESC, required thirty-five ratifications or accessions for entering into force, which in fact happened only ten years after their adoption by the GA,¹³ the drafters of Article 27(1) CAT finally agreed on a compromise of twenty States, which is in line with other similar human rights treaties.¹⁴ The first twenty States that had signed and ratified or acceded to the Convention were Sweden, Mexico, France, Belize, the Philippines, Egypt, Norway, Senegal, Argentina, Uruguay, Uganda, Switzerland, Bulgaria, Cameroon, the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, the Soviet Union, the Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic, Afghanistan, Hungary, and Denmark. The latter had submitted its instrument of ratification on 27 May 1987, triggering the thirty-day period for the entry into force of the Convention. Consequently, the Convention entered into force on 26 June 1987, less than three years after its adoption on 10 December 1984. For all States that ratified or acceded to the Convention after this date, it entered into force on the thirtieth day after the deposit of its respective instrument. The instrument of Austria's ratification was, for example, received on 29 July 1987, which meant that the Convention entered into force on 28 August 1987. The same holds true for accessions. The date of receipt of instruments of succession is, however, of no legal significance as the successor State only declares that it has taken over the obligations from its predecessor State as from the date of independence, or another date indicated by the successor State. In its earlier annual reports, the Committee had wrongly indicated the date of independence as the date of receipt of the respective instrument of succession, whereas more recent reports indicate the actual date of receipt.¹⁵ If a successor State, for whatever reason, chooses to deposit an instrument of accession, the Committee treats it as a new State which became a party on the thirtieth day after the deposit of its instrument of accession.¹⁶

13 The reference to ratification and accession in both paragraphs of Article 27 clarifies that accession can take place both prior to and after the entry into force of the Convention. This question caused much confusion and discussion during the drafting of Articles 25 to 27.¹⁷ In fact, five States (Belize, the Philippines, Egypt, Uganda, and Cameroon) had acceded to the Convention before its entry into force.¹⁸ Since the Convention does not indicate any deadline for signature, States may still sign the Convention and ratify it thereafter. In fact, Andorra for example signed on 5 August 2002 and San Marino on 18 September 2002. States are completely free to choose between signature and ratification on the one hand, and accession on the other, both before and after the date of entry into force.

14 As of December 2017, a total of 162 States were parties to the Convention, out of which 75 became members by signature and ratification, 80 by accession, and 7 by succession. Ten States have signed the Conventions pending its ratification.¹⁹ The seven States having joined the Convention by means of succession are the Czech Republic and Slovakia as well as all former republics of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, with the exception of Slovenia, which acceded to the Convention.²⁰

Opting Out of the Inquiry Procedure

1. Each State may, at the time of signature or ratification of this Convention or accession thereto, declare that it does not recognize the competence of the Committee provided for in article 20.
2. Any State Party having made a reservation in accordance with paragraph 1 of this article may, at any time, withdraw this reservation by notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

1. Introduction

1 Compared to the monitoring procedures established in earlier UN human rights treaties, the inquiry procedure under Article 20 CAT was a major innovation. During the drafting of Article 20, delegations from Socialist States strongly objected to this procedure, which went so far as to envisage fact-finding missions by the Committee on the territory of the State concerned.¹ In addition to watering down the procedure to a considerable extent, the aforementioned States demanded that this new mechanism be optional rather than mandatory. The Commission on Human Rights could not find a consensus on this controversial issue. In the General Assembly, the USSR submitted an amendment to the effect that the inquiry procedure should be only applicable to States parties which had recognized the individual and inter-State communication procedures under Articles 21 and 22. As a compromise, the Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic proposed an opting-out possibility, which was finally accepted by Western and other States in order to ensure that the Convention was adopted by consensus.²

2 This opting-out clause was strongly criticized in the literature as a serious setback.³ But in practice, an opting-out clause has a much less limiting effect on the acceptance of a procedure than the requirement of an optional declaration. In fact, as of December 2017 only fourteen States parties out of 162 have opted out to the inquiry procedure. This shows that it makes a great difference if States parties, wishing to recognize an optional mechanism, are required to make a specific declaration as opposed to simply refraining from doing anything. The burden is shifted to the States that do not wish to be bound to make a special reservation at the time of signature, ratification, or accession. While the lists of States which made the respective declarations under Articles 21 and 22 are 'positive lists' of States parties willing to accept international scrutiny, the list of States which made the reservation under Article 28 is a 'black list' of States parties averse to international monitoring. Finally, if a State withdraws this reservation, it has no further possibility to make another reservation at a later date, unless it chooses to denounce the Convention and re-accede.

1. Each State may, at the time of signature or ratification of this Convention or accession thereto, declare that it does not recognize the competence of the Committee provided for in article 20.
2. Any State Party having made a reservation in accordance with the preceding paragraph may, at any time, withdraw this reservation by notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

2.2 Analysis of the Discussions in the General Assembly

4 The origin of Article 28 is most closely linked to the discussions on Article 20.⁵ The question of whether the inquiry procedure embodied in Article 20 should be made mandatory or not, had been a bone of contention throughout the meetings of the Working Group, which, in 1984, eventually reached a consensus on all provisions except for Articles 20, and 19(3) and (4). The task of finalizing the text was ultimately handed over to the Commission on Human Rights, where its members had to choose between the option of renewing the mandate of the Working Group with the request to seek a consensus on the remaining points; to settle them by voting in the Commission; or to transmit the draft as it stood including Article 20 and parts of Article 19 in brackets to the General Assembly. In light of the already advanced state of the draft Convention, after seven years of negotiations in the Working Group, and the fact that a considerable number of members of the Commission on Human Rights were not familiar with the details related to Articles 19 and 20,⁶ many delegations favoured the adoption of a resolution transmitting, through the Economic and Social Council, the draft Convention to the General Assembly. After a discussion of the Working Group's report, which also included the question on the mandatory character of Article 20, the Commission adopted such a resolution without a vote.⁷

5 In the first meeting of the Third Committee, to which the General Assembly had assigned the item, the Netherlands delegation announced the facilitation of multi and bi-lateral consultations in order to address the prevalent concerns regarding the present draft Convention. As became clear, all Western and most Latin American States advocated for an adoption of the Convention including a mandatory inquiry procedure. This position found support from a limited number of African and Asian States. The Soviet Union together with other East European States voiced their readiness in principle to adopt the draft Convention, however, provided that Articles 19 and 20 would be modified. Many African and Asian States preferred to remain undecided in that respect.⁸

6 These opposing and block-centred views, which were already looming in the course of the informal consultations and the earlier Working Group discussions, hardened when the Third Committee convened in order to discuss the issue.⁹ In reaction to information that certain delegations were about to table a draft resolution asking for a postponement of action to the next session of the General Assembly, the delegations of Argentina, the Netherlands, and Sweden decided to put forward a proposal to adopt the draft Convention as prepared by the Working Group, but without the brackets on the contested Articles 19 and 20.¹⁰

7 Soon afterwards, on 26 November 1984, the USSR, together with nine co-sponsors,¹¹ submitted two amendments¹² relating to Articles 19 and 20 as contained in the annex of the draft resolution. In order to avert the mandatory character of the inquiry procedure provided for in the resolution, the Socialist States proposed to insert the words 'which has made a declaration in accordance with article 21, paragraph 1, and article 22, paragraph 1' after the words 'in the territory of a State Party' in Article 20(1). Hence, Article 20 would be only applicable to those States parties which had also accepted both procedures for inter-State and individual complaints.¹³

8 Three days later, the delegation of the Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic came forward with another amendment to Article 20 as included in the annex of the draft resolution. The proposal suggested the insertion of a new Article, after Article 27, which provided for a declaration upon signature or ratification, or accession by the State party not to recognize the Committee's competence set out in Article 20. States wishing to withdraw their declaration may do so at any time by notifying the Secretary-General.¹⁴ Although the amended article would still allow States parties to opt out of the inquiry procedure, it would now require a corresponding reservation. This was a novelty in so far as earlier amendments put forward by East European countries had still provided for the possibility to ratify the Convention fully without being subjected to the inquiry procedure.

This preference had apparently been waived by the delegation of the Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic and could be read as a conciliatory step towards those interested in a mandatory Article 20.¹⁵

9 When the Third Committee started to consider the draft resolution, including its provision for a mandatory inquiry procedure, the head of the Netherlands delegation, representing the sponsors, announced that in a spirit of compromise a number of changes would be accepted. These changes included, in addition to modifications in relation to Articles 19(3) and (4)¹⁶ and 20(1)¹⁷ and (5),¹⁸ the insertion of a new Article 28 as earlier proposed by the Byelorussian delegation. These measures were however dependent on the withdrawal of all other pending amendments which had previously been put forward by the USSR and other East European States.

10 The Yugoslav delegation suggested postponing the decision on the draft resolution in order to be able to consult with their missions, but withdrew its proposal after urgent pleas by Morocco and Senegal. The delegation of Kuwait refrained from putting forward a motion to defer the decision-taking to the next session of the General Assembly.¹⁹ The Soviet delegation announced that the pending amendments²⁰ would be withdrawn. After the sponsors accepted a request by the Byelorussian delegation to include an additional amendment²¹ to Article 19, the draft resolution, including the new Article 28, was adopted by the Third Committee without a vote.²²

11 As the drafting history of the Convention shows, in 1987, the Western States had the choice between putting the Convention—with a mandatory inquiry procedure—to the vote, which would have resulted in a considerable number of Socialist (and possibly also some African and Asian) States voting against and, therefore, not joining as States parties, or accepting the Byelorussian compromise of an opting-out clause.²³

12 According to Article 28 reservations can only be made ‘at the time of signature or ratification of this Convention or accession thereto’.²⁴ It follows that reservations under Articles 28, as any other reservation, cannot be made at any later stage. But reservations may be withdrawn ‘at any time’. A withdrawal is, however, irreversible, unless the State concerned decides to denounce the Convention pursuant to Article 31 and later accedes with a respective new reservation. It is important to note that Article 28 does not refer to succession. Consequently, States depositing an instrument of succession are not permitted to use this opportunity to make a reservation under Article 28 if the predecessor State had not taken advantage of this opting-out possibility. Since Yugoslavia, which had acceded to the Convention only in October 1991, had abstained from making a reservation under Article 28, none of the successor States were in a position to opt-out. The same holds true for the successor States of the USSR, since the USSR had already withdrawn its reservation in October 1991. When former Czechoslovakia split into the Czech Republic and Slovakia, both successor States inherited the reservation and withdrew it thereafter.²⁵

13 For the first ten years, the Committee's annual reports did not contain any list of States that had made opting-out reservations in accordance with Article 28. It was only the 1998 report which included for the first time a list of eleven States parties.²⁶ The lists were published in the Committee's annual reports until 2014, but are regrettably no longer included as of 2015, presumably due to the word limit.²⁷ The lists did not contain any information about States that had already withdrawn an earlier reservation. Such an information can, however, be retrieved from the UN Treaty Collection's website.²⁸

14 From the entry into force of the Convention until December 2017, a total of twenty-six States parties have made a reservation in accordance with Article 28.²⁹ Twelve States parties have later withdrawn such reservations.³⁰ Hence, fourteen States—out of the 162 that are parties to the Convention—have opted out of the inquiry procedure. Among them, ten belong to the Asia Pacific Group, three to the African Group, and one to the Western Europe and Other Group.³¹

15 State practice shows that most reservations were done in the early years of entry into force of the Convention (twelve in the 1980s; six in the 1990s), when all Socialist States parties (the USSR, the Byelorussian and Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republics, all other Eastern European States, China, and Afghanistan) and Chile had availed themselves

of this possibility. But Chile withdrew immediately after a democratic Government had come to power in 1990. Since the USSR had already withdrawn its reservation on 1 October 1991, no issue of succession arose. Slovakia and the Czech Republic inherited the reservation from the former Czechoslovakia and withdrew it in 1995 and 1996, respectively. All other Central and Eastern European States withdrew their respective reservations between 1989 (Hungary) and 2003 (Ukraine). The only Socialist State which still adheres to this practice is China.³² An additional ten reservations were made after 2000, mainly by States parties coming from the Asia Pacific Group (six)³³ and African States (three).³⁴

16 When compared with the acceptance rates of the procedure under Articles 21 and 22, this result clearly shows that the opting-out procedure limits the level of State acceptance much less than the requirement of an optional declaration.³⁵

17 Some governments used Article 28 as a possibility for interpretive declarations. Cuba, for example, declared ‘in accordance with article 28 of the Convention, that the provisions of paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 of article 20 of the Convention will have to be invoked in strict compliance with the principle of the sovereignty of States and implemented with the prior consent of the States Parties’.³⁶ When the German Democratic Republic declared in 1987, in addition to opting out of the inquiry procedure, that it would ‘bear its share only of those expenses in accordance with article 17, paragraph 7, and article 18, paragraph 5, of the Convention arising from activities under the competence of the Committee as recognized by the German Democratic Republic’, many governments objected to this declaration which they considered as a reservation contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention.³⁷ In objecting to the declaration made by the German Democratic Republic, Greece, Spain, and Italy took the position that the Convention does not permit any reservations other than those explicitly authorized under Articles 28(1) and 30(2). On the other hand, the Convention does not exclude other reservations, and it is difficult to argue that all reservations, apart from Articles 28(1) and 30(2), are necessarily incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention, in the sense of Article 19(b) VCLT. In fact, various States have entered reservations in relation to a number of provisions of the Convention, without other States objecting to them.³⁸

Amendment

1. Any State Party to this Convention may propose an amendment and file it with the Secretary-General of the United Nations. The Secretary General shall thereupon communicate the proposed amendment to the States Parties with a request that they notify him whether they favour a conference of States Parties for the purpose of considering and voting upon the proposal. In the event that within four months from the date of such communication at least one third of the States Parties favours such a conference, the Secretary-General shall convene the conference under the auspices of the United Nations. Any amendment adopted by a majority of the States Parties present and voting at the conference shall be submitted by the Secretary-General to all the States Parties for acceptance.
2. An amendment adopted in accordance with paragraph 1 of this article shall enter into force when two thirds of the States Parties to this Convention have notified the Secretary-General of the United Nations that they have accepted it in accordance with their respective constitutional processes.
3. When amendments enter into force, they shall be binding on those States Parties which have accepted them, other States Parties still being bound by the provisions of this Convention and any earlier amendments which they have accepted.

1. Introduction

1 Article 29 CAT is based on the fairly complicated and impractical amendment procedure of Article 51 CCPR, which has unfortunately reappeared in later human rights treaties, such as Article 50 CRC, Article 90 CMW, and Article 44 CED. While Article 51(2) CCPR requires approval by the General Assembly and a two-thirds majority of the States parties, Article 29 CAT excludes any role of the General Assembly. Instead of four stages, Article 29 only requires three stages: (1) approval of a special conference by one-third of the States parties; (2) adoption of the text of the amendment by simple majority of the States parties present at such a conference; and (3) the subsequent acceptance by two-thirds of the States parties in accordance with their respective constitutional processes.

2 In practice, the two-thirds requirement has turned out to be an obstacle to the entry into force of the only amendment so far adopted by States parties. But even after acceptance of this amendment by two-thirds of the States parties, the provision of Article 29(3), at least if interpreted literally, would lead to absurd results.

The Secretary-General shall thereupon communicate the proposed amendment to the States Parties to this Convention with a request that they notify him whether they favour a conference of States Parties for the purpose of considering and voting upon the proposal. In the event that at least one third of the States Parties favours such a conference, the Secretary-General shall convene the conference under the auspices of the United Nations. Any amendment adopted by a majority of the States Parties present and voting at the conference shall be submitted by the Secretary-General to all the States Parties for acceptance.
2. An amendment adopted in accordance with paragraph 1 shall enter into force when two thirds of the States Parties to this Convention have notified the Secretary-General of the United Nations that they have accepted it in accordance with their respective constitutional processes.
3. When amendments enter into force, they shall be binding on those States Parties which have accepted them, other States Parties still being bound by the provisions of this Convention and any earlier amendments which they have accepted.

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

6 During its meetings in 1983⁴ and 1984,⁵ the Working Group discussed the final clauses, including the provision leading to Article 29, on the basis of the final clauses contained in the Swedish draft.⁶ Several delegations, however, voiced their preference for a procedure facilitating amendments, instead of revisions, since the latter was deemed to relate more to an overall review of the treaty. Furthermore, several speakers proposed changes relating to Article D(2) leaving it up to the General Assembly to decide on requests for reviews. In their view, this task should remain within the power of States parties, since they were also the most affected by any changes of the treaty. Opposition against any changes came from one delegation. Referring to the consistency between the similarly worded Article 23 CERD and Article D, this delegation argued, no additions or changes should be introduced.⁷

7 Taking the above outlined discussion into consideration, the Chairman-Rapporteur submitted to the Working Group in its eleventh meeting a revised set of final clauses. The draft provision, now numbered as Article 28, provided for the possibility of amendments instead of revisions and was similarly worded as Article 51 CCPR.⁸ Due to time constraints, the Working Group did not formally adopt any of the proposed final clauses; however, it did decide to put the revised set as presented by the Chairman-Rapporteur in brackets to the annex of its report to the Commission on Human Rights.⁹ On 24 February 1983, the Working Group adopted this report without a vote.¹⁰

8 During the deliberations in 1984, opposing views emerged regarding whether the text for draft Article 28 would need further changes or additions. Some delegations voiced their preference to keep the article as it was, mirroring to a large extent Article 51 CCPR. The proposal of the delegation of the United States to insert 'within four months from the date of such communication' into paragraph 1, limiting the period of time in which States parties can put forward their support for a conference on a proposed amendment, did not meet any objections. In the absence of the insistence on other changes, the Working Group adopted draft Article 28 at its seventh meeting.¹¹

9 The provision was later renumbered as Article 29 due to the insertion of a new Article 28 providing for an opting-out of the inquiry procedure as stipulated in Article 20.

3. Issues of Interpretation

10 According to Article 29(1), only States parties to the Convention, ie no other States, may propose an amendment of the Convention. After communication of the proposed amendment by the Secretary-General to the States parties, a conference of States parties under the auspices of the United Nations shall be convened to discuss the amendment if at least one-third of the States parties are in favour of such a conference. On the proposal of the United States, a four-month time limit was inserted for such approval, which is not included in Article 51 CCPR. For adoption at such a conference, the simple majority of the States parties present and voting is sufficient. Abstentions shall, therefore, be counted as negative votes. Pursuant to Article 29(2), an amendment enters into force only when two-thirds of the States parties have accepted it in accordance with their respective constitutional processes.

11 To date, there has been one amendment put forward since the Convention entered into force in 1987. On 9 January 1992, the Australian delegation proposed an amendment in relation to Articles 17(7) and 18(5) with the intention of including the financing of the activities of the Committee against Torture in the regular budget of the United Nations. At that time, out of the seven treaty bodies, only the CAT Committee and the CERD Committee were not fully funded under the regular budget of the United Nations. The resulting financial problems and the ‘growing recognition that the proper implementation of the main human rights instruments must be a concern to the international community as a whole’¹² fostered the demand for an amendment. Aware of these difficulties, the General Assembly had already earlier invited the States parties to consider the possibility of an amendment.¹³ The draft resolution including Australia’s proposal stated:¹⁴

1. Decide to delete paragraph 7 of article 17 and paragraph 5 of article 18;
2. Decide to add a new paragraph, as paragraph 4 of article 18 to read ‘The members of the Committee established under the present Convention shall receive emoluments from the United Nations resources on such terms and conditions as the General Assembly shall decide’, and as a result of inserting this provision, that the existing paragraph 4 of article 18 should be renumbered as paragraph 5;
3. Recommend that the General Assembly take action of the implementation of the proposed amendment at its forty-seventh session;
4. Recall that the amendment shall enter into force when it has been accepted by two thirds of the States parties to the Convention which shall have so notified the Secretary-General as depository, and on the understanding that the proposed amendments will become operative only when the General Assembly has taken appropriate action;
5. Urge all States parties to meet their financial obligations under the existing article 17, paragraph 7, and article 18, paragraph 5, in full until such time as the proposed amendment in paragraphs 1 and 2 above entered into force;

12 In compliance with Article 29(1), the Secretary-General, acting in the capacity of depository, forwarded the proposed amendment to the States parties. In his note verbale, dated 20 March 1992, he requested all parties to notify him within four months whether they would favour a conference for the purpose of considering and voting upon the proposal.¹⁵ As of 20 July 1992, twenty-nine States parties¹⁶ out of sixty-five had notified him that they would favour such a conference. Consequently, the States parties convened on 9 September 1992 in New York. Australia presented its draft resolution, joined by a number of other States¹⁷ as co-sponsor, and orally introduced a change in operative paragraph 5 where the words 'enter into force' should be replaced by the words 'become operative'.¹⁸ Several delegations expressed their support for the draft amendment,¹⁹ which was finally adopted as orally amended without any objections. Although the drafters of Article 29 CAT eliminated the requirement of approval by the General Assembly, as contained in Article 51(2) CCPR, in fact the General Assembly endorsed the Australian amendment by Resolution 47/111 of 16 December 1992.

13 The endorsement of the General Assembly, which at the same time requested the Secretary-General to provide financing of the Committee out of the regular budget of the United Nations as a provisional measure beginning with the budget for the biennium 1994–1995,²⁰ turned out to be a prudent one since the Australian amendment did not pass the third stage of the amendment procedure. Although the amendment was adopted unanimously at the conference of States parties, only thirty-one States parties²¹ have taken the necessary steps since 1992 to ensure acceptance in accordance with their respective constitutional processes. Since this number fails to pass the threshold put forward by Article 29(2), the amendment has not yet entered into force. Nevertheless, as a provisional measure authorized by the General Assembly, the Committee has been paid out of the regular UN budget.²² While this provisional measure has, in practice, replaced the amendment procedure, the Chairpersons of the meetings of the States parties have repeatedly called for appropriate action to bring the amendment into effect.²³

14 Should the Australian amendment finally be approved by two-thirds of the States parties and enter into force, it would, according to the clear wording of Article 29(3), only be binding on those States parties which have accepted it, 'other States Parties still being bound by the provisions of this Convention and any earlier amendments which they have accepted'. In other words, for the two-thirds of the States parties having accepted the Australian amendments, the financial obligations for the funding of the Committee's work would have been transferred to the general budget of the United Nations, whereas the remaining one-third of States parties would still be bound by the old provisions of Articles 17(7) and 18(5) and would thus have to pay their share for the expenses of the Committee, its staff and facilities, meetings of States parties, etc. Although this seems to represent a ‘manifestly absurd or unreasonable result’ within the meaning of Article 32(b) VCLT,²⁴ it might have the positive effect of prompting the other States parties to accept the Australian amendment quickly.

15 Article 29(3) CAT, as Article 51(3) CCPR and similar provisions in other human rights treaties, simply does not make sense for certain procedural amendments. It obviously was designed for substantive changes, including the drafting of additional rights, which in practice, are usually achieved by means of Additional or Optional Protocols rather than amendments.²⁵ Even the addition of new procedures is usually achieved by means of Optional Protocols.²⁶ But certain procedural amendments can only be achieved by changing the text of a treaty provision. When the States parties to the CRC decided in 1995 to increase the number of members of the Committee on the Rights of the Child from ten to eighteen, they simply applied the two-thirds rule of Article 50(2) CRC and ignored the provision of Article 50(3) CRC, which is identical to Article 51(3) CCPR and Article 29(3) CAT.²⁷ We propose that the States parties of CAT also follow this course of action if need be.

Settlement of Disputes

1. Any dispute between two or more States Parties concerning the interpretation or application of this Convention which cannot be settled through negotiation shall, at the request of one of them, be submitted to arbitration. If within six months from the date of the request for arbitration the Parties are unable to agree on the organization of the arbitration, any of those Parties may refer the dispute to the International Court of Justice by request in conformity with the Statute of the Court.
2. Each State may, at the time of signature or ratification of this Convention or accession thereto, declare that it does not consider itself bound by paragraph 1 of this article. The other States Parties shall not be bound by paragraph 1 of this article with respect to any State Party having made such a reservation.
3. Any State Party having made a reservation in accordance with paragraph 2 of this article may at any time withdraw this reservation by notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

1. Introduction

1 Most contemporary human rights treaties, such as the ECHR, ACHR, ACHPR, and all nine core human rights treaties of the UN provide for the establishment of regional human rights courts or quasi-judicial expert bodies entrusted with the specific task of monitoring the compliance of States parties with their respective treaty obligations by means of special reporting, complaints, and inquiry procedures. The system of specific international human rights monitoring bodies and procedures has developed in response to the experience of the more traditional methods of international law used to solve disputes between States; methods which have proven not to be sufficient for the protection of human rights.

2 Nevertheless, so far neither the optional inter-State communication procedure nor the dispute settlement procedure has proven more successful. Though the dispute settlement procedure is applicable to more States parties than the inter-State communication procedure—out of 162 States parties only twenty-four States parties are currently making use of their opting-out power under Article 30(2)—up until now Article 30 has been applied only once, in the case Belgium v Senegal before the ICJ. Reasons may be because States do not wish to accept any compulsory jurisdiction of the ICJ, wish to exclude a second additional dispute settlement mechanism, or simply because they are not interested enough to protect human beings in another country against violations by other governments. This shows that although States, by becoming parties to a human rights treaty, have a legal interest, and even a certain obligation, to ensure that all other States parties comply with their respective obligations and thereby respect, protect, and ensure the human rights of all individuals subject to their jurisdiction, in practice they usually only take action if their own nationals are threatened, or if specific political, economic, financial, or other tangible State interests are concerned.

3 Other monitoring procedures, such as individual complaints by the victims of human rights violations, ex officio inquiries by an independent monitoring body, or the examination of State reports seem, therefore, more appropriate for the protection of human rights than traditional inter-State procedures. The practice of the last few years indicates that States Parties prefer to use other fora to deal with divergent views on human rights, such as the Universal Periodic Review.¹

4 Specific inter-State human rights complaints mechanisms usually exclude general dispute settlement mechanisms under international law. On the contrary, the CAT constitutes the first human rights treaty which simultaneously provides for an inter-State communication procedure (under Article 21) and for the traditional inter-State dispute settlement procedure before both an arbitration body, which is unrelated to the respective treaty monitoring body, and, finally, the ICJ (Article 30). This is clearly an anomaly which leads to difficult questions of interpretation regarding the relationship between both procedures.

Article XIV

Any dispute by Contracting Parties arising out of the interpretation, application or implementation of this Convention which has not been settled by negotiation, arbitration or referral to an independent and impartial body shall, at the request of any party to the dispute, be brought before the International Court of Justice.

Article 20

1. The States Parties to the Convention shall seek a solution to any dispute that may arise between them concerning the interpretation or application of the Convention through the means indicated in article 33 of the Charter of the United Nations.
2. The existence of a dispute shall particularly be recognized when one State Party to the Convention has addressed to another State Party a written communication alleging that this other State Party to whom the communication has been addressed denies the allegation or fails to reply within 45 days.
3. If after the expiry of a period of 45 days after the existence of the dispute is recognized the States Parties concerned have not agreed on another method of settlement, any of them may set in motion the procedure of conciliation specified in the Annex to the present Convention, through a request made to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Annex

1. A list of conciliators consisting of persons of high moral character and recognized competence in the field of human rights shall be maintained by the Secretary-General of the United Nations. To this end, every State Party to the Convention shall be invited to nominate two conciliators, and the names of the persons so nominated shall constitute the list. The term of a conciliator, including that of any conciliator nominated to fill a vacancy, shall be five years and may be renewed. A conciliator whose term expires shall continue to fulfil any function for which he shall have been chosen under the following paragraphs.

2. When a request has been made to the Secretary-General in accordance with article 20, paragraph 3, of the Convention, the Secretary-General shall bring the dispute before a Conciliation Commission constituted as follows.

The State or States constituting one of the parties to the dispute shall appoint:

- (a) one conciliator of the nationality of that State or one of those States, who may or may not be chosen from the list referred to in paragraph 1, and
- (b) one conciliator not of the nationality of that State or of any of those States, who shall be chosen from the list.

The State or States constituting the other party to the dispute shall appoint two conciliators in the same way. The four conciliators chosen by the parties to the dispute shall be appointed within 45 days following the date on which the Secretary-General receives the request.

The four conciliators shall, within 45 days following the appointment of the last of them, appoint a fifth conciliator from the list, who shall be chairman of the Conciliation Commission.

If the appointment of the chairman or of any of the other conciliators has not been made within the period prescribed above for such appointments, it shall be made by the Secretary-General within 45 days following the expiry of that period. Any of the periods within which appointments must be made may be extended by agreement between the parties to the dispute.

Any vacancy shall be filled in the manner prescribed for the initial appointment.

3. The Conciliation Commission shall decide its own procedure. Decisions and recommendations of the Commission shall be made by a majority vote of the five members.

4. The Commission shall hear the parties to the dispute and examine the claims and objections. It may make recommendations at any time and shall present a Final Report within 180 days after its constitution. The Report, and any recommendations made by the Commission, shall not be binding upon the parties and shall have no other character than that of recommendations submitted for consideration to the parties.

5. The Secretary-General shall provide the Commission with such assistance and facilities as it may require for the performance of its function. The expenses of the Commission shall be borne by the United Nations.

7 *Proposal by the Netherlands Delegation at the 1983 Working Group*⁴

Any dispute between two or more States Parties with respect to the interpretation or application of this Convention, which is not settled by negotiation, shall, at the request of any of the parties to the dispute, be referred to the International Court of Justice for decision, unless the disputants agree to another mode of settlement.

1. Any dispute between two or more States Parties concerning the interpretation or application of this Convention which cannot be settled through negotiation, shall, at the request of one of them, be submitted to arbitration. If within six months from the date of the request for arbitration the Parties are unable to agree on the organization of the arbitration, any one of those Parties may refer the dispute to the International Court of Justice by request in conformity with the Statute of the Court.

2. Each State may at the time of signature or ratification of this Convention or accession thereto, declare that it does not consider itself bound by the preceding paragraph. The other States Parties shall not be bound by the preceding paragraph with respect to any State Party having made such a reservation.

3. Any State Party having made a reservation in accordance with the preceding paragraph may at any time withdraw this reservation by notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

9 From the very start of the negotiations, the IAPL draft of 1978⁶ contained a provision concerning a mandatory procedure for settlement of disputes between States parties on questions of interpretation, application, or implementation of the Convention. On the other hand, the Swedish draft of 1978,⁷ on which the Working Group based its discussions, left the final clauses to be elaborated at a later stage. In 1980, Sweden proposed a set of final provisions,⁸ which, however, did not foresee a regulation of potential disputes between the States parties.

10 In 1982, during the course of the discussions on the complaints procedures, and particularly on the question of inter-State complaints, the Brazilian delegation noted that such complaints were actually allegations by one State that another State failed to fulfil its obligations under the Convention. It could therefore be considered that, in essence, complaints of this sort refer to a dispute between States over the interpretation or application of the Convention, and should thus be resolved by the procedures for peaceful settlement set forth by the Charter of the United Nations. Consequently, the delegation proposed to establish an obligation of the States parties to the Convention to accept a system of mandatory conciliation in case of a dispute, unless they agreed to another procedure.⁹

11 The Chairman-Rapporteur of the Working Group, Herman Burgers, was authorized to elaborate an alternative set of implementing provisions which he introduced to the Working Group on the first day of the session of the Commission on Human Rights.¹⁰ Inspired by the proposals made by the Brazilian delegation, Article 20 of these implementing provisions foresaw a mandatory conciliation procedure which was based on the corresponding Article and Annex of the VCLT, instead of an inter-State complaints procedure. In this regard, the Chairman-Rapporteur also mentioned the Convention on the Law of the Sea.¹¹ The proposed provision was only supported by the Brazilian delegation. Other delegations held the opinion that the treaties referred to by the Chairman-Rapporteur could not be compared to the envisaged CAT as they dealt with different matters. Furthermore, it was noted that there was a difference between disputes with regard to the application of the Convention, such as questions of jurisdiction or extradition, and disputes over the occurrence of torture in a State party. The first category of disputes could be resolved by judicial or quasi-judicial procedures, whereas the second would be a natural subject of a complaints procedure. A number of delegations noted that their governments could only accept an optional conciliation procedure. Another proposal was made to insert a mandatory procedure for the judicial settlement of questions pertaining to interpretation or application by the ICJ, such as contained in Article 22 CERD and various other treaties.¹² The delegations decided that the *Swedish procedure on inter-State complaints*¹³ was preferable over the proposal by the Chairman-Rapporteur and the question of dispute settlement regarding interpretation and application of the Convention in general was to be discussed at a later stage.

12 The issue of dispute settlement was taken up again by the Working Group in 1983, when the Netherlands delegation introduced a draft Article, which followed the example of Article 22 CERD and envisaged the compulsory referral to the ICJ 'unless the disputants agree to another mode of settlement'.¹⁴ While some delegations supported the draft, the French delegation asked for the addition of a second paragraph to the draft Article which would provide for an opting-out clause for States parties concerning the referring of disputes to the ICJ. Again, the discussions on this issue were postponed.¹⁵

13 In the final Working Group of 1984, some delegations declared their support for the Netherlands' proposal of 1983, while others again expressed their objections to a compulsory jurisdiction of the ICJ.¹⁶ An alternative draft article was introduced by the French delegation, and was modelled on the corresponding articles of the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Seizure of Aircraft, the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Civil Aviation and other UN treaties.¹⁷ The Working Group adopted the French draft article in 1994 at its seventh meeting.¹⁸

3.1 Opting-out Procedure (Article 30(2) and (3))

14 Contrary to the inter-State communication procedure, which is subject to the State Party's optional declaration, Article 30 binds all States Parties unless they have opted-out through a reservation in conformity with Article 30(2). The possibility of opting out is modelled on the inquiry procedure as provided for in Article 28.¹⁹ A reservation under Article 30(2) can only be made at the time of signature and ratification or accession, but not succession.

15 In accordance with Article 30(3), reservations may also be withdrawn at any time by notification to the Secretary General. Such a withdrawal is irreversible, unless the State concerned wishes to denounce the Convention in accordance with Article 31 and thereafter accede again with a respective reservation. Since the adoption of the Convention, a total of thirty-three States parties have made a reservation deciding not to recognize the dispute settlement procedure foreseen in this Article. Nine States parties, above all former Socialist States, later withdrew their reservations,²⁰ leaving the number of States parties that are presently to be considered as having opted out to twenty-four.²¹

16 Whereas most of the States parties mentioned above simply put forward a reservation declaring that they did not consider themselves bound by paragraph 1 of Article 30, the Government of Cuba stated that it was of the view that any dispute between States parties should be settled by negotiation through diplomatic channels.²² Ghana, Afghanistan, and Indonesia declared that the submission of a dispute to arbitration or the ICJ shall only be possible with the consent of all the parties concerned.²³ The United States declared that it does not consider itself bound by Article 30(1), but that it reserves the right specifically to agree to follow this or any other procedure for arbitration in a particular case.²⁴

18 In practice, so far disagreement over the interpretation or application of the Convention has reached a level where negotiations, arbitration or judicial settlement were deemed necessary only once. In the case Belgium v Senegal, Belgium invoked the ICJ jurisdiction to complain about the non-compliance by Senegal with the Convention's obligations on the basis of the dispute settlement procedure under Article 30 to which both States were bound. As explained below, the ICJ adopted a landmark judgment in 2012.²⁵ Other controversial issues were raised by States Parties through objections to reservations and declarations,²⁶ such as the declaration made by the German Democratic Republic that the only Committee expenses it would cover would be its share of those arising from activities recognized by the German Democratic Republic to be under the Committee's competence, were met by a number of objections from other States parties. Another example of a reservation that met with a number of objections was the declaration made by Qatar which attempted to outlaw all interpretations of provisions in the Convention which conflicted with the precepts of Islamic law and religion. Although these reservation also triggered a number of objections, none of the States parties felt that it should be subject to a settlement procedure.

3.2 The Meaning of 'any dispute'

19 States parties may not agree on what constitutes a dispute within the meaning of Article 30. The first step in the resolution of the dispute is to establish if a dispute exists in the circumstances of the case.²⁷

20 As of today, the Committee has never had the opportunity to clarify the concept of 'dispute' under Article 30. It is thus necessary to look at ICJ jurisprudence for guidance on such concept. According to the ICJ there exists a dispute when it can be shown that 'the claim of one party is positively opposed by the other'.²⁸ In order to do so, the ICJ conducts an 'objective determination'²⁹ examining the facts of the case.³⁰ Moreover, in order for the ICJ to have jurisdiction, the dispute must exist at the time of the submission of the application before the ICJ.³¹

21 The term dispute was also assessed in the case of Belgium v Senegal, concerning Senegal's compliance with the CAT's obligations to establish jurisdiction over the crimes of Mr Habré, former President of the Republic of Chad, for the systematic acts of torture which were committed during his regime from 1982 to 1990, and to prosecute or extradite him for the purposes of criminal proceedings (Articles 5, 6, and 7).³² While the ICJ found no jurisdiction in regard to Article 5 CAT because the dispute had ceased to exist by the time Belgium lodged the application in 2009 as Senegal had by then already adopted a series of legislative measures to establish jurisdiction under Article 5 CAT,³³ it affirmed its jurisdiction for the claims relating to Articles 6(2) and 7(1). To this extent, the ICJ held that the controversy between Belgium and Senegal amounted to a dispute concerning the 'interpretation and application' of the Convention.³⁴ The ICJ rejected Senegal's argument that Belgium was not entitled to invoke its international responsibility because none of the alleged victims of the acts said to be attributable to Mr Habré was of Belgian nationality at the time when the acts were committed. It found Belgium's claim admissible arguing that being a Party to the CAT Convention was sufficient to have standing before the ICJ.³⁵ On this point, the legal reasoning of the Court relies in particular on the object and purpose of the Convention which is 'to make more effective the struggle against torture . . . throughout the world' and on the existence of a 'common interest' of all States Parties in ensuring the prevention of acts of torture and the fight against impunity. Departing from those considerations, the ICJ concluded that the 'common interest implies that the obligations in question are owed by any State party to all the other States parties to the Convention', thus amounting to 'obligations erga omnes partes'.³⁶

22 The ICJ has drawn a parallel to the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide and clarified that each State party has standing to enforce the Convention provisions regardless the existence of a specific link to the alleged victim nor a special interest.³⁷

³⁷ ibid. The ICJ decision was criticized by Judge Sur and Judge Skotnikov, who questioned the ICJ assumption on the existence of erga omnes partes Convention obligations and the fact that this would equate to a procedural right of each State party to invoke the responsibility of another for any alleged breaches of such obligations. In particular, they regretted that in its legal reasoning the ICJ did not take in due consideration that the procedure under Article 30 is optional and that States may opt-out to the CAT Committee's jurisdiction under Article 30 as well as withdraw unilaterally their consent/dissent at any time (see Separate Opinion of Judge Skotnikov paras 11–22; Dissenting Opinion of Judge Ad Hoc Sur paras 30–41). In addition, Judge Skotnikov noted 'that the ICJ judgment is neither in line with other international treaties such as for example the ECHR, under which the entitlement to invoke the responsibility by any State Party is explicitly regulated under Article 33 and not implicitly derived by the notion of common interest, nor with the Articles on Responsibility of States for Internationally Wrongful Acts adopted by the International Law Commission in 2001 (Article 48)' (paras 17, 21). Finally, Judge Sur pointed out that the Court's conclusions were not supported by the practice of the States Parties, who in thirty years of application of the Convention have never made use of the inter-State communication or the settlement dispute mechanism (para 41).

23 Once the existence of a dispute has been established, Article 30 sets two additional conditions that need to be met before a State Party may bring the dispute before the ICJ. These conditions are that the dispute cannot be settled through negotiation; and that the parties are ‘unable to agree’ on the organization of the arbitration within six months from the submitting of a request for arbitration by one of the parties.

24 According to the ICJ, in order to prove that a dispute ‘cannot be settled through negotiation’ there must be ‘at the very least[,] a genuine attempt by one of the disputing parties to engage in discussions with the other disputing party, with a view to resolving the dispute’.³⁸ This implies that a theoretical impossibility would not suffice³⁹ and that, in practice, the condition is met only when ‘there has been a failure of negotiations or when negotiations have become futile or deadlocked’.⁴⁰ With regard to the second condition, the ICJ held that the lack of agreement between the parties as to the organization of an arbitration cannot be presumed. The existence of such disagreement can follow only from a proposal for arbitration by the applicant, to which the respondent has made no answer or which it has expressed its intention not to accept.⁴¹

In the Belgium v Senegal case, the ICJ went on and concluded that the fact that Belgium did not make a detailed proposal for determining the issues to be submitted to arbitration and its organization—but submitted a general request to refer the matter to arbitration—did not mean that this condition was not fulfilled.⁴²

25 Although the draft of the Chairman-Rapporteur of 1982 contained a detailed proposal for an arbitration or conciliation mechanism,⁴³ Article 30(1) does not contain any provisions for its composition or procedure.⁴⁴ Moreover, in contrast to Article 21, Article 30 solely establishes that it is up to the States involved in a dispute to ‘agree on the organization of the arbitration’. According to this provision, the Committee against Torture has no role to play. This is surprising, as the Committee is considered to be the guardian of States parties’ compliance with the Convention.

26 As was seen above, one option could be that the ad hoc Conciliation Commission envisaged in Article 21(1)(e) may serve as an arbitration mechanism under Article 30(1). This interpretation could provide a way to involve the Committee in the dispute settlement procedure under Article 30. However, it still remains that the Committee can only be involved upon explicit agreement of the States parties concerned. Yet, the ICJ did not give any consideration to Article 21(1)(e) CAT when assessing admissibility of Belgium’s claim in the Habré case.⁴⁵

27 Finally, despite the criticism of some States parties,⁴⁶ pursuant to Article 30(1) a request to arbitration or to the ICJ can be submitted by one of the States parties only.

3.4 Relationship with the Inter-State Complaints Procedure

28 As mentioned in the introduction, the existence of specific inter-State human rights complaints mechanisms usually excludes general dispute settlement mechanisms under international law. The CAT constitutes the first human rights treaty, which simultaneously provides for an inter-State communication procedure (under Article 21) and for the traditional inter-State dispute settlement procedure before an arbitration body unrelated to the respective treaty monitoring body, and finally, the ICJ.

29 The drafting history of the Convention shows that the issue had been discussed during the Working Group sessions, where some delegations expressed the opinion that an inter-State communications procedure was preferable to the classical dispute settlement procedure under international law. Some delegations also pointed out that there was a difference between disputes regarding the application of the Convention, such as disputes related to jurisdiction and extradition, and disputes concerning the occurrence of torture. In the latter case especially, it seemed important that the matter would not exclusively be dealt with between the States parties but that the 'implementation organ' of the Convention would be involved in the matter.⁴⁷ In the end, however, both procedures were simultaneously adopted in Articles 21 and 30 without any reference to their interplay.

30 A different approach is taken by most other UN human rights treaties.⁴⁸ While some of them provide only for the inter-State communication procedure (CCPR, CESC-OP) or the dispute settlement mechanism (CEDAW), others include both of them (CERD, CMW, and CED). Yet, unlike the CAT, the CERD, CMW, and CED expressly contain a clause regulating the relationship between the two procedures. For example, under Article 22 CERD, disputes between two or more States parties regarding the interpretation or application of CERD shall be referred to the ICJ only if they are not settled by negotiation 'or by the procedures expressly provided for in this Convention'. This explicit reference relates, above all, to the mandatory inter-State communication procedure regulated in Articles 11 to 13. Similar clauses are expressly included in the CMW, and CED.

31 The CCPR, though regulating only the inter-State communication procedure, nevertheless stipulates that the provisions for the implementation of the Covenant 'shall not prevent the States Parties to the present Covenant from having recourse to other procedures for settling a dispute in accordance with general or special international agreements in force between them'. Thus, States parties to the CCPR, which have accepted the compulsory jurisdiction of the ICJ under Article 36(2) of its Statute, may also bring a dispute concerning the interpretation or application of the Covenant before the ICJ. But Article 44 ICCPR does not by itself establish any jurisdiction of the ICJ. In contrast, some UN human rights treaties (CEDAW, CMW, and CED) expressly grant the ICJ jurisdiction in accordance with Article 36(1) of its Statute.⁴⁹

32 Regional mechanisms may be more restrictive when it comes to dispute settlement before other international settings. For example, Article 55 ECHR clearly prevents States parties from 'avail[ing] themselves of treaties, conventions or declarations in force between them for the purpose of submitting, by way of petition, a dispute arising out of the interpretation or application of this Convention to a means of settlement other than those provided for in this Convention’.

⁴⁹ See Art 29 CEDAW, Art 92 CMW, and Art 42 CED. On the jurisdiction of the ICJ by consent ante hoc see Ian Brownlie, Principles of Public International Law (5th edn, Clarendon Press 1998) 683.

33 The main question of interpretation with regard to the CAT Convention, therefore, concerns the relationship between the inter-State communication procedure under Article 21 and the dispute settlement under Article 30. In the case of the CAT, the drafters seem to have overlooked the problems that could arise from the simultaneous existence of the two procedures, and unlike in other treaties, did not explicitly regulate their relationship. The only provision on this is contained in Rule 92 which simply requires the State party lodging a complaint under Article 21 to inform the Committee on ‘any other procedure of international investigation or settlement resorted to by the States parties concerned’.⁵⁰ Yet, it is not clear why such information has to be provided, as the Convention does not expressly regulate the relationship between the two instruments. This is clearly an anomaly which leads to difficult questions of interpretation regarding the relationship between the different procedures.

34 In this regard, three main questions arise: (a) Do the two procedures have the same subject-matter? (b) Can the latter only be invoked after the former has failed? (c) If not, can States parties choose which one they resort to first? Or can they even at the same time submit an inter-State communication to the Committee against Torture and refer the same dispute to the ICJ? Such questions will be relevant only for those States parties that are bound by both procedures. With reference to the first question, it shall be noted that Articles 21 and 30 do not have the same wording. While under Article 21(1) a State party may claim that ‘another State Party is not fulfilling its obligations under this Convention’, Article 30(1) refers to a ‘dispute between two or more States Parties concerning the interpretation or application of this Convention’. The question therefore arises whether it can be considered as a dispute between States when a State claims that another State is systematically practising torture? With regard to the second and third questions, one should first remember that Article 21 does not contain any provision similar to Article 22(5)(a), which would authorize the Committee to declare an inter-State communication inadmissible if the same matter has been, or is being, examined under another procedure of international investigation or settlement. Similarly, Article 30 does not contain any clause whatsoever on the relationship with Article 21. The absence of such clauses seems to support the view that a State could bring the same dispute first before the ICJ, and then to the Committee, even while it is still pending before the ICJ. Nevertheless, the relationship between Articles 21 and 30 CAT shall be interpreted in a reasonable manner, taking into account the possibility that the drafters of both provisions may have overlooked the problems arising from a simultaneous application of both provisions.

35 One solution could be to adopt the model taken by the CERD (and the CED). The model for such interpretation can be found in the explicit reference in Article 22 CERD to ‘procedures expressly provided for in this Convention’, which was unfortunately omitted during the drafting of Article 30 CAT.⁵¹ Thus, States parties claiming that another State party is not fulfilling its (substantive or procedural) obligations under the Convention, shall first submit an inter-State communication to the Committee against

⁵¹ The 1983 Dutch proposal, which was supposedly based on art 22 CERD, had already omitted this reference: see E/CN.4/1983/WG.2/WP.10 (n 4) and above § 7.

Torture in accordance with the procedure envisaged in Article 21. If the mediation efforts of the Committee and/or the ad hoc conciliation commission fail, this definitely constitutes a dispute which may then be settled by the ICJ in accordance with Article 30.

36 As mentioned before, the procedure under Article 21, in particular the mediation efforts of the ad hoc Conciliation Commission, may even be interpreted as constituting one of the arbitration mechanisms envisaged in Article 30(1). If the preliminary procedure provided for in Article 21(1)(a) fails and the parties cannot agree, within six months, on the establishment of an ad hoc conciliation commission in accordance with Article 21(1)(e), this might be interpreted as the States concerned being 'unable to agree on the organization of the arbitration' pursuant to Article 30(1), which means that the applicant States may refer the dispute directly to the ICJ. The respective jurisdiction of the ICJ derives from Article 36(1) of its Statute which refers to 'all matters specially provided for . . . in treaties and conventions in force'. Yet, again, in the Belgium v Senegal case, the ICJ did not give any consideration as to whether the parties had first resorted to the CAT Committee and the Conciliation Commission under Article 21 when assessing the admissibility of Belgium's claim.⁵²

Denunciation

1. A State Party may denounce this Convention by written notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations. Denunciation becomes effective one year after the date of receipt of the notification by the Secretary-General.
2. Such a denunciation shall not have the effect of releasing the State Party from its obligations under this Convention in regard to any act or omission which occurs prior to the date at which the denunciation becomes effective, nor shall denunciation prejudice in any way the continued consideration of any matter which is already under consideration by the Committee prior to the date at which the denunciation becomes effective.
3. Following the date at which the denunciation of a State Party becomes effective, the Committee shall not commence consideration of any new matter regarding that State.

1. Introduction

1 According to Article 56 VCLT, States parties may denounce a treaty if explicitly provided for in the respective treaty; if the parties permit denunciation despite the absence of a corresponding provision;¹ or if a right to denunciation can be derived from the nature of the treaty.

2 Some human rights treaties, such as the two International Covenants, the second OP to the CCPR, CEDAW, and the CED, do not contain a denunciation clause.² In a General Comment on issues relating to the continuity of obligations to the CCPR, the Human Rights Committee in 1997 expressed the legal opinion that at least the two Covenants, which are part of the ‘International Bill of Rights’, do ‘not have a temporary character typical of treaties where a right of denunciation is deemed to be admitted’.³ In principle, this argument could also be applied to other human rights treaties.

² cf Art 58 ECHR, Art 78 ACHR, Art 21 CERD, Art 52 CRC, Art 89 CMW, Art 48 CRPD, Art 12 of the first OP to the CCPR.

³ HRC, ‘General Comment on Issues relating to the Continuity of Obligations to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights’ (1997) UN Doc CCPR/C/21/Rev.1/Add.8/Rev.1; see Manfred Nowak, UN Covenant on Civil and Political Rights: CCPR Commentary (2nd edn, NP Engel 2005) (CCPR Commentary) XXXVII and 1133ff. See also above Art 26, 3.2.

3 However, many important regional and international human rights treaties do contain an explicit denunciation clause, similar to Article 31 CAT. In practice, no States party has thus far declared that it wishes to denounce the CAT.

2.1 Chronology of Draft Texts

4 *Revised Set of Final Clauses, Submitted by the Chairman-Rapporteur (January 1983)*⁴

Article 29

A State Party may denounce this Convention by written notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations. Denunciation shall take effect one year after the date of receipt of the notification by the Secretary-General.

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

5 The original set of final clauses submitted to the Working Group by Sweden in 1980 did not contain a clause on denunciation. During the discussions of these final provisions in 1983, the delegations noted that they wished to include an article providing for the possibility of denunciations.⁵ Thus, the Chairman-Rapporteur introduced a revised set of final clauses which also contained a provision on denunciations, named draft Article 29.⁶

6 Due to the insertion of a provision on dispute settlement, draft Article 29 was re-numbered draft Article 30 during the sessions of the Working Group in 1984. In addition, the United States proposed a second paragraph to the Article, which was meant to ensure the continued observance of its obligations by a State party denouncing the Convention prior to the date at which the denunciation becomes effective. Furthermore, the Committee should have the possibility to conclude any consideration which it has commenced before this date.⁷ Most delegations felt that this additional paragraph would strengthen the protection against torture and therefore favoured its inclusion. An even stricter regime, ie that the denunciation should become effective three years instead of one year after the notification by the Secretary-General, was proposed by one delegation but did not find support. Other delegations expressed their concerns that the additional paragraph proposed by the United States would complicate the procedure and wished to keep the original draft.⁸

7 Furthermore, some representatives asked for safeguards for States parties against the risk of investigations by the Committee of matters arising after the denunciation has become effective. After informal consultations, the United States proposed yet another paragraph to draft Article 30, which ruled out the possibility for the Committee to commence a new investigation of any matter after the denunciation of a State party had taken effect.⁹ With these clarifications the Working Group reached agreement on draft Article 30, which it adopted with the additional paragraphs at its eighth meeting in February 1984.¹⁰

3. Issues of Interpretation

8 Article 31(1) is taken almost literally from Article 21 CERD. Contrary to Article 58(1) ECHR and Article 78(1) ACHR, which stipulate that States parties may denounce the respective treaties only after the expiry of five years from the date on which they became parties, Article 21 CERD and Article 31 CAT do not contain any time limit. Consequently, States parties may denounce these treaties even immediately after having deposited the respective instruments of ratification or accession. Pursuant to Article 32(c), the Secretary-General, as depositary of UN treaties, shall inform all UN member States of any denunciations. Denunciations become effective one year after the date of receipt of the notification by the Secretary-General.

9 The first sentence of Article 31(2) has no equivalent in Article 21 CERD. It was, rather, added on the proposal of the United States with the aim of ensuring the continued observance of its obligations by a State party denouncing the Convention for the one-year period until the denunciation becomes effective under Article 31(1).¹¹ Corresponding provisions can be found in Article 58(2) ECHR and Article 78(2) ACHR. Although this seems self-evident, these provisions emphasize, beyond any doubt, that all substantive and procedural State obligations apply fully until the date when the denunciation becomes effective. Consequently, any State party denouncing the Convention remains under an obligation during this one-year period to prevent torture and ill-treatment; to provide victims of torture with adequate reparation; to bring perpetrators of torture to justice; and to submit overdue reports under Article 19.

10 The interpretation of the second sentence of Article 31(2), which was also added by the US amendment and which roughly corresponds to Article 12(2) of the first OP to the CCPR, proves more difficult. During the drafting in the Working Group, some delegations expressed concern that this provision would complicate the procedure and entail the risk of investigations by the Committee after a denunciation becomes effective. Consequently, the United States proposed an additional provision in Article 31(3), which prevents the Committee from commencing consideration of any new matter after the one-year period.

11 Nevertheless, this additional provision does not solve most of the questions of interpretation. The combined reading of both sentences leads to the result that the Committee is free to start monitoring proceedings during this one-year period and to continue them thereafter until they are completed. However, it is not usually easy to decide when such proceedings must be considered complete. If an inter-State communication or an individual complaint is submitted during this period in accordance with Articles 21 or 22, the Committee can, of course, continue the consideration of the case until a final decision on inadmissibility or on the merits is reached.¹² What, however, is the situation regarding the follow-up procedure as stipulated in Rule 120 of its RoP?¹³ The actions taken by the Rapporteur on follow-up must be considered as part of the 'continued consideration of any matter' arising from a decision on the merits. On the other hand, it cannot simply be at the discretion of the Rapporteur to decide when the procedure shall be terminated. Similarly, the Committee is prevented by Article 31(3) from adding new issues to a pending individual complaints procedure after the denunciation became effective.¹⁴

12 Similarly, the Committee may schedule during this one-year period a meeting with the State party concerned for the examination of a State report under Article 19. If the Committee, in its conclusions and recommendations, arrives at the conclusion that some of the obligations of that State party have not been discharged, it may appoint, pursuant to Rule 72 of its RoP, one or more Rapporteurs to follow up on the State party's compliance with the Committee's conclusions and recommendations.¹⁵ Again, this may be considered part of the State reporting procedure which may be continued after the one-year period. If the Government does not send a representative to a meeting scheduled for the consideration of its report, the Committee may also continue the consideration of this report by scheduling a meeting after the denunciation became effective.

13 Finally, the Committee may take the notification of a denunciation as an opportunity to initiate an ex officio inquiry procedure under Article 20, provided that it has received reliable information indicating a systematic practice of torture in the State party concerned. As the experience with past inquiries shows,¹⁶ such procedures can take several years and may lead to findings which are in need of a follow-up procedure as well.

14 These examples illustrate that the fears expressed by some delegations during the drafting of Article 31 were indeed justified. Any reasonable interpretation of paragraphs 2 and 3 must strike a fair balance between the legitimate concern of the Committee not to be prevented from finalizing pending procedures and the legitimate concern of the respective State party that this one-year period will not be misused by the Committee arbitrarily to initiate, continue, and perhaps delay certain proceedings as a reaction to its notification of denunciation.

1. Introduction

1 Article 32 is based on similar provisions in UN treaties, such as Article 24 CERD and Article 52 CCPR. It reflects the function of the Secretary-General as depositary of UN treaties. Since States parties have the obligation to deposit all instruments of ratification or accession or notifications of denunciations with the UN Secretary-General, he or she has equivalent duties of informing States accordingly.

Article XXI

(Notification)

The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall inform all States of the following particulars:

- (1) Signatures, ratifications, accessions and reservations under Articles XV–XVIII of this Convention;
- (2) The date of entry into force of the present Convention;
- (3) Notification under Article XX of the present Convention.

Article E

The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall inform all States of the following particulars:

- (a) Signatures, ratifications and accessions under articles A and B;
- (b) The date of entry into force of the present Convention under article C;
- (c) Notifications under article D [revision].

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

4 The Government of Sweden submitted a set of final clauses in 1980,³ which were then discussed by the Working Group in 1983. Since the Working Group had taken into consideration proposals for the inclusion of an Article regulating denunciations of the Convention as well as a procedure for revision or amendments to the Convention, the delegations noted that the provision should also refer to notification of such denunciation, revision, or amendment.⁴ Taking into account these comments, the Chairman-Rapporteur introduced a revised provision to the Working Group,⁵ which was included as draft Article 30 to the report of the Working Group.

5 In 1984, after the Working Group had agreed to insert an Article on dispute settlement into the final clauses,⁶ draft Article 30 was renamed draft Article 31 and adopted by the Working Group. At the same time, the reference to Article 29 in subparagraph (c) regarding notification of a denunciation was replaced by a reference to Article 30.

3. Issues of Interpretation

6 According to Article 32 CAT, the Secretary-General has a duty to inform all member States of the United Nations and all States which have signed or acceded to the Convention. Since the Convention, pursuant to Articles 25 and 26, is open to signature and accession by all States,⁷ non-member States of the United Nations may also sign, ratify, or accede to the Convention, and have the right to be informed accordingly. However, the Secretary-General has no obligation to inform all States; only all UN member States and those non-member States which have signed or acceded to the Convention. In the case of the dismemberment of a State party which is not a UN member State, the Secretary-General shall also inform the respective States that became party by a notification of succession.⁸ So far, only UN member States (with the exception of Switzerland at the time of signature and notification) have signed, ratified, succeeded, or acceded to the Convention, which means that the Secretary-General shall simply inform all UN member States.

7 Article 32 CAT requires the Secretary-General to inform the respective States of all signatures, ratifications, accessions, and denunciations, as well as of the dates of entry into force of the Convention and any amendments thereto. Considering that the only amendment adopted so far by States parties under Article 29 has not yet entered into force,⁹ no information requirement has arisen under this provision. Although neither Article 26 nor Article 32(a) explicitly refers to succession, UN member States shall also be informed of any notifications of succession.

8 In practice, the Office of Legal Affairs (OLA) treaty section in New York maintains a website¹⁰ with all signatures, ratifications, accessions, denunciations, and dates of entry into force of the Convention or any amendments to the Convention. A reference to the website is included in the Committee's annual report as well as in the depository notifications by the treaty section of the Office of the Legal Affairs sent to the member States via email.

9 Some comparable provisions in other UN human rights treaties also require the Secretary-General to inform States of optional declarations recognizing the competence of the respective treaty bodies to receive and consider inter-State or individual communications, reservations, and requests by States parties for an amendment of the respective treaties.¹¹ Since the Secretary-General functions as the depository of UN treaties,¹² it would have been useful to require him or her also to inform all States of all optional declarations under Articles 21(1) and 22(1) CAT; all reservations to the Convention; and, above all, the explicit opting-out reservations and notifications of withdrawals of such reservations in accordance with Articles 28 and 30 CAT, as well as of all proposals for an amendment of the Convention in accordance with Article 29(1) CAT. In practice, the Secretary-General, however, does inform all States of the notifications of States parties by making use of the website.¹³

1 Article 33 CAT represents the customary final clause of treaties concluded under the auspices of the United Nations.¹ In conformity with the procedure common for UN treaties, it states that the text is equally authentic in all UN languages officially recognized at the date the treaty was adopted. This means that the six designated languages, which are also today recognized as the official UN languages,² are equally controlling for the interpretation of the text, whereby it can be assumed that the terms in the Convention have the same meaning in each authentic text.³ Should a comparison of the authentic texts discover a difference in meaning, the true meaning is to be ascertained by applying the rules of interpretation set down in Articles 31, 32, and 33(4) VCLT.

2. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall transmit certified copies of the present Convention to all States.

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

3 In the discussion of the final clauses by the Working Group in 1983, Article F of the Swedish proposal of 1980 did not give rise to any comments⁵ and was thus adopted without changes by the Working Group in 1984.

3. Issues of Interpretation

4 In conformity with Article 102(1) UN Charter and Article 80 VCLT, Article 33 CAT in fact designates the UN Secretary-General as depositary of the Convention.⁶ Certified copies of the Convention in all UN languages shall be deposited in the archives of the United Nations. In addition to the information duties of the Secretary-General in relation to all UN member States, and all non-member States which have signed or acceded to the Convention, as stipulated in Article 32, Article 33(2) CAT also requires him or her to transmit certified copies of the Convention to all States. This particular information duty is not contained in certain other UN human rights treaties.⁷ Such certified copies shall be transmitted in all official UN languages. In practice, the Secretary-General does not send hard copies of treaties to member States. All treaties are available in all languages on the UN Treaty Collection website.⁸ However, the treaty section of the OLA sends depositary notifications to the UN member States via email.

OPTIONAL PROTOCOL TO THE CONVENTION AGAINST TORTURE AND OTHER CRUEL, INHUMAN OR DEGRADING TREATMENT OR PUNISHMENT

Preamble

The States Parties to the present Protocol,

Reaffirming that torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment are prohibited and constitute serious violations of human rights,

Convinced that further measures are necessary to achieve the purposes of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (hereinafter referred to as the Convention) and to strengthen the protection of persons deprived of their liberty against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Recalling that articles 2 and 16 of the Convention oblige each State Party to take effective measures to prevent acts of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment in any territory under its jurisdiction,

Recognizing that States have the primary responsibility for implementing those articles, that strengthening the protection of people deprived of their liberty and the full respect for their human rights is a common responsibility shared by all and that international implementing bodies complement and strengthen national measures,

Recalling that the effective prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment requires education and a combination of various legislative, administrative, judicial and other measures,

Recalling also that the World Conference on Human Rights firmly declared that efforts to eradicate torture should first and foremost be concentrated on prevention and called for the adoption of an optional protocol to the Convention, intended to establish a preventive system of regular visits to places of detention,

Convinced that the protection of persons deprived of their liberty against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment can be strengthened by non-judicial means of a preventive nature, based on regular visits to places of detention,

1. Introduction

1 According to Article 31(1) VCLT, an international treaty is not to be interpreted in isolation but rather in its context. A treaty's context comprises, in addition to the text and annexes, its preamble.¹ This legal significance attributed to the preamble has been generally recognized under international law.² The preamble to the OP is more comprehensive

The States Parties to the present Protocol,

Considering that in order further to achieve the purpose of the International Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (hereinafter referred to as the Convention) and the implementation of its provisions, it would be appropriate to establish an independent International Committee authorised to arrange visits to places of detention of all kinds under the jurisdiction of the States Parties to the present Protocol and to report thereon with recommendations to the governments concerned,

The States Parties to the present Protocol,

Considering that in order to further achieve the purpose of the United Nations Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (hereinafter referred to as the Convention) it is appropriate to strengthen the protection of persons deprived of their liberty from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, by resorting to non-judicial means of a preventive character based on visits,

Have agreed as follows:

4 *Text of the Articles which Constitute the Basis for Future Work (2 December 1999)*⁵

The States Parties to the present Protocol,

Considering that in order to further achieve the purpose of the United Nations Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (hereinafter referred to as the Convention) it is appropriate to strengthen the protection of [persons deprived of their liberty from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment] [the detained persons],

Considering that the protection of persons deprived of their liberty against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment could be strengthened by non-judicial means of a preventive character based on visit,

The States Parties to the present Optional Protocol,

Recognizing that torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment are prohibited,

Recalling that articles 2 and 16 of the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment require each State Party to take effective measure to prevent acts of torture and other acts of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment in any territory under its jurisdiction,

Further recalling that the effective prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment requires a combination of legislative, administrative, judicial and other measures,

Recognizing that States have the primary responsibility for implementing international law and the relevant international standards, that strengthening the protection of and full respect for human rights is a common responsibility shared by all and that international mechanisms are complementary to national measures,

Convinced that the protection of persons deprived of liberty against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment may be strengthened by non-judicial means of a preventive character based on visits to places of detention,

Desiring to undertake an international commitment to make the prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment more effective,

Have agreed as follows,

6 *EU Draft (22 February 2001)*⁷

The States parties to the present Protocol,

Recalling the purposes and principle of the Charter of the United Nations, and the obligation of States under the Charter, in particular articles 55 and 56,

Reaffirming that torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment are prohibited,

Recalling articles 2 and 16 of the United Nations Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, which oblige each State party to take effective measures to prevent acts of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment in any territory under its jurisdiction,

Convinced that further measures are necessary to achieve the purpose of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and of the need to strengthen the protection of persons deprived of their liberty from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

The States Parties to the present Optional Protocol,

Recalling the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the obligations of States under the Charter,

Reaffirming that torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment are prohibited,

Recalling that the effective prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment under the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (hereinafter referred to as the Convention) requires a combination of legislative, administrative, judicial and other measures,

Recognizing that strengthening the protection of and full respect for human rights is a common responsibility shared by all and that international mechanisms are complementary to national measures,

Recognizing the important contribution that regional mechanisms may make to the protection of persons deprived of their liberty against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, particularly by non-judicial means of a preventive character based on visits,

Desiring to undertake an international commitment to make the prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment under the Convention more effective,

Bearing in mind the principles of cooperation and confidentiality as basic principles of the present protocol,

Have agreed as follows,

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

8 The Working Group of the Commission adopted its agenda at its first meeting on 19 October 1992. During this first session, the Working Group established an informal open-ended group chaired by the Canadian representative, Mr Martin Low. He was tasked with first determining the schedule for consideration of the draft articles and then with preparing a preliminary draft report to the Commission. The main thrust pursued during the general discussions was to recognize the importance of a preventive mechanism based on regular visits to places where persons are deprived of their liberty, and to have this importance reflected in the preamble and substantive clauses of the OP. It was emphasized that such a system is necessary in order to strengthen the protection for the persons concerned against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. It was further proposed that such a system should be based on the principles of cooperation, confidentiality, independence, impartiality, universality, and effectiveness. Moreover, it should take the form of a preventive, rather than adjudicative, mechanism involving an evaluation of current conditions in places of detention and recommendations on how detention practices and facilities should be improved in order to strengthen the protection against torture. Cooperation and confidentiality were judged to be essential for success.⁹

9 At its second meeting in 1993, the Working Group decided that it would focus primarily on the most essential policy elements contained in the draft text and would organize the articles thematically in order to undertake a broad conceptual review of the OP. It was the opinion of the Working Group that this approach would facilitate the identification of possible means for resolving the various issues that would inevitably be raised during the group sessions. The articles of the draft Protocol, as submitted by Costa Rica, were thus divided according to the 'basket' of issues to which they pertained. It was decided that the aims, object and purpose of the OP were to be discussed in reference to the title, preamble and Article 1 of the draft treaty.¹⁰

10 The predominant view within the Working Group was that the preamble should state, in simple and unambiguous terms, the overriding object and purpose of the proposed Protocol. It would be a clear statement designed, first, to confirm an appropriate relationship between the OP and the CAT itself and, second, to emphasize the key aim of protection by a system of preventive character achieved through regular visits rather than post facto investigative or adjudicative measures.¹¹

11 There was general consensus within the Working Group that the aim of the Protocol should be to establish a mechanism which would assist States in taking 'effective . . . measures to prevent acts of torture' in the sense of Article 2(1) CAT, and that no substantive obligations should be articulated in the preamble other than those necessary to achieve the purpose of the system of visits. It was, however, noted that this was a very broad aim. As such, some delegations expressed an interest in including within the preamble an elaboration of the basic objectives of the Protocol detailed in precise terms. It was suggested that this method would generate further confidence among States by facilitating the acceptance and enforcement of the OP, while also acting as a guide to interpretation. This view was not shared by the majority of the Group, however, who felt that the preamble would benefit more from brevity and clarity like the traditional UN approach to text drafting. It was warned that listing and detailing purposes other than the basic or fundamental objective might limit the overall effectiveness of the treaty and create uncertainty among States about the primary thrust of the instrument. The delegations in support of this view reasoned that the other important details were better addressed in substantive Articles.

12 Many delegations emphasized the importance of using the preamble to maintain a clear link between the Convention and its OP, whereby the Protocol is recognized as an instrument to enhance and perform the purposes of the Convention. It was the view of the Working Group that such an arrangement would promote coordination and cost-effectiveness by incorporating the work carried out by the body established by the Convention, namely the Committee against Torture, into the discussion on the Protocol.

13 Two delegations raised the possibility of creating a separate instrument, with a body unrelated to the Convention and its Committee, in order to permit States not parties to the Convention to take part in the Protocol's system of visits. However, a number of delegations opposed this proposal, arguing that it could prejudicially affect the necessary coordination of the Protocol. The matter was discussed further in connection with Article 2.

14 Another debate ensued between those delegations that supported a proposal to add a reference to the provisions of the UDHR and of the CCPR, and those delegations that pointed out that such references had already been made in the preamble to the Convention and it was therefore unnecessary to repeat them in the preamble to the Protocol.

15 A third debate within the Group focused on whether or not a specific mention to the principle of confidentiality should be made in the preamble. Some delegations saw a need to emphasize the principle and thus include such a statement, while others felt that the principle of confidentiality was a key working method, rather than an aim. This latter group preferred for the principle to be mentioned in the operative articles rather than in the preamble. While it was generally agreed that the principle of confidentiality represented an essential means of achieving the objectives of the OP, one delegation felt that a reference to it in the preamble might be prejudicial given the prospect that, under the Protocol, confidentiality may be broken in certain restricted circumstances.

16 It was decided at the second session of the Working Group that further consideration of the title and preamble would be given once the whole text of the OP had been discussed and amended.¹²

17 At the first meeting of its eighth session which took place on 4 October 1999, the Working Group agreed with the proposal of the Chairperson-Rapporteur to hold a general discussion on, inter alia, the issue of the Protocol as a preventive, and not a punitive, agreement. It was generally felt that the goal of the OP was to create an effective system, not of sanctions, but of preventive visits in order to help States parties to improve the protection of persons deprived of their liberty. Prevention, cooperation, and confidentiality were referred to as fundamental principles of the Protocol. This discussion took place during the first and second plenary meetings and was held in reference to the preamble of the OP as well as Articles 3 and 18.¹³

18 Discussion then focused on the principle of confidentiality as mentioned during the first session of the Working Group. Several delegations considered the principle of confidentiality to be a modus operandi rather than a core issue. They felt that observing confidentiality was not an end itself but a tool facilitating confidence and ensuring cooperation among States. According to another view held by some delegations, confidentiality was one of the important principles on which the OP was based and emphasizing the principle could promote the overall acceptability of the treaty. In order to justify their view, the delegations sharing this opinion made reference to the explicit mention of the guiding principles as detailed in Article 3(3) OP. The Chairperson-Rapporteur, Ms Elizabeth Odio-Benito of Costa Rica, subsequently proposed to consider confidentiality as a principle having a complementary, facilitating function. She also proposed that a reference to confidentiality, as well as to the principle of cooperation, be included in the preamble of the OP.¹⁴

19 At the tenth plenary meeting on 14 October 1999 the observer for Australia pointed out that views were divided within the Working Group as to whether the term 'detained' or 'deprived of their liberty' should be used in the preamble. Many delegations pointed out that the latter term was more commonly used in the human rights arena and that 'detained' could be too narrow. Following the proposal submitted by the Chairperson-Rapporteur, the Working Group agreed to include the text of the preamble, as submitted by the drafting group to the plenary, to serve as a basis for future discussion.¹⁵

20 At the same meeting, several delegations expressed their views on the first basket of articles and related issues. The representative of Cuba, speaking on behalf of the delegations of Algeria, China, Egypt, Saudi Arabia, the Sudan, and the Syrian Arab Republic, made a joint statement on their position paper submitted to the Chair regarding the content of the preamble and Articles 1, 8, 12, 13, and X. They stated that starting from the preamble, the content of the draft Protocol should reflect clearly its cooperative, preventive, confidential, non-duplicative, and advisory nature. The aforementioned delegations expressed concern as to what the effects on national security and domestic affairs would be if the words 'may' and 'any place', as well as 'deprived of their liberty' were to be included in the Protocol. They held that these words were unacceptable because they were too wide, vague, controversial, and undefined.¹⁶

21 The Working Group held its tenth, and final, session from 14 to 25 January 2002. The Chairperson presented her proposal for an OP during the sixth meeting and invited delegations to submit their comments thereto. These comments were discussed at the seventh and eighth meetings on 22 January 2002. The preamble as proposed by the Chairperson placed particular emphasis on the reference to the obligation to prevent torture as contained in Articles 2 and 16 CAT. It also made specific mention of Resolution 2001/44 of the Commission on Human Rights which, first, recalled that the World Conference on Human Rights had firmly declared that efforts to eradicate torture should be concentrated on prevention, and, second, called for the early adoption of an OP to the Convention intended to establish a system to that effect based on regular visits to places of detention.¹⁷

22 The Mexican delegation supported the proposed Protocol, as submitted by the Chairperson, but stated that it would have wanted to see a reference in the preamble to Articles 55 and 56 of the Charter. Despite this comment, the Mexican delegation accepted the proposal in order to reach consensus.¹⁸

3. Issues of Interpretation

23 The preamble contains the basic principles underlying the OP.¹⁹ It starts by the States parties reaffirming the absolute prohibition of torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment as ‘serious violations of human rights’.

24 The States parties then voice their conviction that ‘further measures’ are necessary to achieve the purposes of the CAT and thereby highlight the links between the OP and the CAT, as only States parties to the CAT may become parties to the OP.²⁰

25 After this reference to further measures for the achievement of the CAT’s purposes, the preamble continues by recalling that Articles 2 and 16 CAT oblige each State party to take effective measures to prevent acts of torture and other ill-treatment. Hence, by establishing a system of regular visits to all places of detention as ‘one means of prevention’,²¹ the OP does not set out ‘additional substantive preventive obligations’, but contributes ‘to the prevention of torture’.²² In other words, the OP specifies only ‘further measures’ so as to assist the States Parties of the CAT to implement their pre-existing obligation to prevent torture under Articles 2 and 16 CAT in addition to the other measures explicitly provided for in the CAT (the criminalization of torture, prosecution of torture, the systematic review of interrogation techniques, and the investigation of complaints).²³

26 The requirement for States parties to the CAT to include visits to places of detention as part of a comprehensive preventive framework has been emphasized by the Committee against Torture in its interpretation of Articles 2 and 16.²⁴ The Committee, in its General Comment 2 on the implementation of Article 2 CAT by States Parties, cited the establishment of ‘impartial mechanisms for inspecting and visiting places of detention and confinement’ as forming part of the guarantees against torture that States shall put in place in order to comply with their obligations to take preventive measures.²⁵ In other words, when the OPCAT provides for the establishment of NPMs (National Prevention Mechanisms), it just provides more detailed mechanisms for the fulfilment of the existing obligation under the CAT to monitor the treatment of persons deprived of their liberty.²⁶ Due to these considerations, one could argue that ‘States parties to the Convention are under an obligation to ratify the Optional Protocol as soon as possible’.²⁷

27 The preventive approach underpinning the OPCAT is clearly formulated in the preamble, where the States parties are ‘recalling that the effective prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment requires education and a combination of various legislative, administrative, judicial and other measures’ and affirm their conviction ‘that the protection of persons against torture and [other ill-treatment] can be strengthened by non-judicial means of a preventive nature, based on regular visits to places of detention’. Independent monitoring mechanisms have been ascribed with an important preventive effect,²⁸ notably the immediate ‘strong deterrent effect’ of a system of preventive visits.²⁹

28 The long-term objective of preventive visits is to mitigate the risks of ill-treatment and, thus, build an environment where torture is unlikely to occur. In contrast to visits by other bodies, preventive visits under the OPCAT form part of a ‘proactive, forward-looking, continuous process of analysis of the system of deprivation of liberty and all its structural aspects’.³⁰ Preventive visits ‘look holistically at the risks factors in institutional, legal and policy frameworks’ with the objective ‘to enter into dialogue on ways to improve the treatment and conditions of persons deprived of their liberty’.³¹ A broad understanding of prevention by the NPMs is reflected when the States parties recall that effective prevention ‘requires education and a combination of various legislative, administrative, judicial and other means’.³²

29 The preamble also introduces effectiveness as a highly relevant characteristic of the preventive measures by States parties recalling that Articles 2 and 16 CAT oblige each State Party to take ‘effective measures’ to prevent torture or other ill-treatment. In 2009, the General Assembly called upon States parties to the OP to fulfil their obligation to designate or establish ‘truly independent and effective national preventive mechanisms for the prevention of torture’.³³ In fact, effective functioning of the NPM is a crucial aspect for the strength of its preventive impact.³⁴

30 The preamble also introduces the principle of subsidiarity, recognizing that ‘States have the primary responsibility for implementing those articles’, ie that States have the primary responsibility for an efficient protection of human rights. Immediately thereafter, the preamble prescribes the complementary relationship between preventive efforts at the international and national levels, recognizing that ‘strengthening the protection of people deprived of their liberty and the full respect for their human rights is a common responsibility shared by all and that international implementing bodies complement and

System of Preventive Visits to Places of Detention

The objective of the present Protocol is to establish a system of regular visits undertaken by independent international and national bodies to places where people are deprived of their liberty, in order to prevent torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

1. Introduction

1 Article 1 OP defines the objective of the Protocol by highlighting its main features: first, the OP creates a two-pillar system by visits being carried out by both international and national mechanisms. Second, the obligation of States parties to permit regular visits to places of detention is established. Third, the OP is based on the principle of cooperation between the State party, the SPT, and the NPMs. Fourth, prevention of torture and other ill-treatment is defined as the aim of the visits.

2 *Original Costa Rica Draft (6 March 1980)*¹

Article 1

A State Party to the Convention that becomes a party to the present Protocol agrees to permit visits in accordance with the terms of the present Protocol to any place (hereinafter referred to as a place of detention) subject to the jurisdiction of a State Party where persons are held who have been deprived of their liberty for any reasons, including persons under investigation by the law enforcement authorities, civil or military, persons in preventive, administrative or re-educative detention, persons who are being prosecuted or punished for any offence and persons in custody for medical reasons.

¹ Draft Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment submitted by Costa Rica [1980] UN Doc E/CN.4/1409.

A place of detention within the meaning of this Article shall not include any place which representatives or delegates of a Protecting Power or of the International Committee of the Red Cross are entitled to visit and do visit pursuant to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and their additional protocols of 1977.

3 *Revised Costa Rica Draft (15 January 1991)*²

1. A State Party to the present Protocol agrees to permit visits, in accordance with this Protocol, to any place within its jurisdiction where persons deprived of their liberty by a public authority or at its instigation or with its consent or acquiescence are held or may be held.

2. The object of the visits shall be to examine the treatment of persons deprived of their liberty with a view to strengthening, if necessary, the protection of such persons from torture and from other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment in accordance with international standards.

4 *Text of the Articles which Constitute the Outcome of the First Reading (25 January 1996)*³

1. A State Party to the present Protocol shall permit visits in accordance with this Protocol to any place in any territory under its jurisdiction where persons deprived of their liberty by a public authority or at its instigation or with its consent or acquiescence are held or may be held [provided that full respect is assured for the principles of non-intervention and the sovereignty of States].

2. The object of the visits shall be to examine the treatment of persons deprived of their liberty with a view to strengthening, if necessary, the protection of such persons from [, and [to take] measures for the prevention of] torture and from other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment in accordance with applicable international [standards], [instruments], [law].

1. The objective of this Protocol is to establish a preventive visiting mechanism to examine the treatment of persons [deprived of their liberty] [detained] with a view to recommending means for strengthening, if necessary, the protection of such persons from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment [as defined under international law applicable to the State Party] [and relevant international standards].

2. Each State Party agrees to permit visits, [in principle,] in accordance with this Protocol, to [any place] [places of detention] [on any territory] under its jurisdiction [and control] where persons (may, based on reliable information [as determined by a competent and independent judicial authority of the State Party concerned] be deprived or) are [deprived of their liberty] [detained] [including structures intended

Each State party to the present Protocol shall establish or maintain, at the national level, a visiting mechanism for the prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment (hereinafter referred to as the national mechanism), which shall carry out visits to places in any territory under its jurisdiction where persons may be or are deprived of their liberty pursuant to an order of a public authority or at its instigation or with its consent or acquiescence (hereinafter referred to as places of detention), with a view to strengthening, if necessary, the protection of such persons from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Article 3 (old 1 revised)

1. The objective of this Protocol is to establish an international preventive visiting mechanism to examine the treatment of persons deprived of their liberty, with a view to recommending means for strengthening, if necessary, the protection of such persons from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.
2. Each State Party agrees to permit missions by the Sub-Committee to its territory and visits to any place under its jurisdiction and control where persons are or may be deprived of their liberty.

Article 1

1. (a) There shall be established, under the Committee against Torture (hereinafter referred to as the Committee), a Subcommittee on the Prevention of Torture (hereinafter referred to as the Subcommittee on Prevention) which shall carry out the functions hereinafter provided.
- (b) The Subcommittee shall consist of [five] experts of recognized competence in the field of human rights, who shall serve in their personal capacity and shall, under its direction, carry out the functions herein provided.

Each State Party may, in furtherance of articles 2 and 16 of the Convention, establish, maintain or provide for national mechanisms to strengthen, if necessary, the protection of persons deprived of their liberty pursuant to an order of a public authority from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment (hereinafter referred to as national mechanisms).

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

9 During the first session of the Working Group, held from 19 to 30 October 1992, it was decided to undertake a review of the draft OP⁸ from a conceptual perspective. In order to do so, the document was divided into several 'baskets' of issues. The first basket, 'Aims, object, and purpose', contained the title and preamble of the Protocol as well as its Article 1.⁹

10 In general, the Working Group wanted to integrate a very simple and clear expression of the basic international obligation that States would have to accept according to the OP, namely to permit visits to any places over which the State exercises either direct power or control and where persons are deprived of their liberty.

11 The main issues raised regarding Article 1(1) during the Working Group discussions at the first session were the following: the scope of States' obligations; the criteria for carrying out visits; the definition of the term 'places of detention'; the question of jurisdiction; and the standards of assessment which should be applied.

12 With regard to the scope of States' obligations, several delegations felt that Article 1 should concentrate on the system of preventive visits as a new and unique mechanism; other important matters should be dealt with in the other provisions. In their opinion, further detail in Article 1 would only diminish the clarity of the central obligation of the Protocol, namely to permit preventive visits.

13 Regarding the criteria for carrying out visits, some delegations found that the phrase 'in accordance with this Protocol', as contained in the draft, established imprecise criteria for the system of visits. These delegations suggested further clarifying the terms on which visits would take place. Several other delegations, however, wanted to ensure that the competence of the Subcommittee should be kept as broad as possible.

14 A number of issues were raised regarding the wording of the phrase 'places of detention'. The draft text covered both places where persons are detained by a public authority, and other places where detention occurs at its instigation or with its consent or acquiescence. The question of the necessary degree of Government involvement in 'irregular' detention gave rise to much discussion. Due consideration was given to the meaning of the concept of 'acquiescence'. In this regard, a reference was made to Article 1 CAT, which specifically refers to 'the consent or acquiescence of a public official'. Many delegations felt that this definition was too restrictive and that the Protocol's system should cover more institutions, rather than just those operated by public authorities. A reference was made to a similar provision in the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance. Many delegations found that as a matter of State responsibility under the OP, there should be a right to visit any place where a person is deprived of liberty by another person, or body, who is either under the direct control of the State, or is subject to such direct or indirect influence by the State that control or authority should be inferred or imputed.

15 Concern was also raised with regard to the notion 'may be held', as some delegations had the impression that this indefinite criterion might give rise to difficulties of interpretation and administration.

16 A discussion also came up with regard to the term 'jurisdiction' and the more general question on the implementation of the Protocol in federal States. It was pointed out that the national authority in such States might have responsibility over the whole territory, however other levels of Government might also have legislative or administrative responsibilities for places to which the Subcommittee should have access.

17 With regard to Article 1(2) OP, some delegations found that the objective of the visits could be broadened to reflect more clearly the full range of activities and responsibilities of the new Subcommittee, including fact-finding, recommendations, and technical assistance.

18 Some delegations found that the standards of assessment contained in Article 1(2) ('in accordance with international standards') were too broad and unspecified and that it was not clear which international standards were de facto included in this notion. Some delegations were of the view that it was important to provide a broad frame of reference for the Subcommittee and the States parties that would include the major international standards. Many found that 'international standards' meant the standard or the definition of torture set out in the CAT and, therefore, suggested a deletion of the words 'in accordance with international standards' and, if necessary, inserting a specific reference to the Convention alone.

19 During the second session of the Working Group from 25 October to 5 November 1993, it was agreed to replace the words 'agrees to' by the word 'shall' and 'within its territory' by 'in any territory under its jurisdiction'.¹⁰

20 The delegation of Mexico proposed to add the words 'provided that full respect is assured for the principles of non-intervention and the sovereignty of States' at the end of paragraph 1. This idea was supported by several other delegations and initiated an interesting discussion on the question of prior notification of visits (at that time mentioned under Article 12 of the draft text). Others, however, found that the proposed additional reference would reduce the clarity of the central obligation of the Protocol, which was to permit preventive visits. Thus, the proposed phrase was put in square brackets.

21 Moreover, it was suggested that the prevention of torture as such should be mentioned in Article 1 as a clear objective of the Protocol. The phrase 'and to take measures for the prevention of' was put in square brackets before the word 'torture' in Article 1(2).

22 The issue of applicable 'international standards' of assessment was once again discussed. It was then agreed to keep the word 'standards' and to add the words 'instruments' and 'law' and to put all three words in square brackets.

23 The Working Group held its third session from 17 to 28 October 1994.¹¹ Although the outcome of the beginning of the first reading had already been put in an annex to the second Working Group report,¹² several delegations did not agree with certain aspects of the text of Article 1(1). Thus, it was decided in the third session to insert the following words into the footnote: a proposal was made by some delegations that further consideration be given at the second reading to adding the words 'arrest or detention', following the words 'deprived of their liberty'.¹³

24 During the fifth session from 14 to 25 October 1996 the Working Group decided to consider Articles 1 and 8 together. Although the Working Group decided in the second plenary meeting on 17 October 1996 to suspend the drafting process on Articles 1 and 8, certain negotiations had taken place on both provisions.¹⁴

25 Different opinions still existed on the question of prior consent (for some States, the ratification of the Protocol would in itself mean prior consent to any mission; for others, consent would have to be expressed on each occasion and the Protocol as such should only regulate the different forms of consent). In the course of the discussions, many delegations (among them Australia, Brazil, Canada, Chile, Denmark, Ethiopia, France, Germany, the Netherlands, South Africa, Switzerland, and Uruguay) stated that the ratification of the Protocol itself should be sufficient and no further consent would be needed. In the view of various NGOs (APT, AI, the International Commission of Jurists, IFACAT, ISHR, IFHRL, HRW, and the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom), the entire purpose and functions of the Protocol would be undermined if a requirement of prior consent to receive missions was integrated into the text of the Protocol, as this would permit States parties to avoid obligations under the instrument. Negotiations for each and every visit would be the consequence. The delegation of Mexico, however, strongly favoured the idea of prior consent and held that the text of the first reading remained valid. It was supported by the delegations of Cuba, China, and Japan, who shared most of Mexico's concerns.

26 Another point of discussion was the question of how fundamental principles contained in the Charter of the United Nations (in particular the principles of non-intervention and sovereignty of States) were to be reflected in the OP.

27 On 25 October 1996, the Chairperson noted that no agreement could be reached on the texts of Articles 1 and 8 during the fifth session, and it was decided to consider the draft texts of these Articles (which constituted the basis for future work) at a later stage.

28 At the sixth session from 13 to 24 October 1997 and at the seventh session from 28 September to 9 October 1998, Article 1 was not discussed. However, the observer for Australia, who chaired the informal consultation at the seventh plenary meeting on 6 October 1998, indicated that with regard to Article 1, the following elements were discussed:¹⁵

- (a) It was felt that the order of paragraphs could be changed so as to focus first on the preventive nature of the Protocol and then on how the Protocol would operate through visits.
- (b) A number of delegations noted that further work needed to be done regarding the scope of the article. Language on definitions in the Convention was referred to in particular.
- (c) The need for the SPT to accept a mission was discussed, namely whether ratification meant a standing invitation to the Subcommittee or whether each mission should be subject to the prior consent of a State party.
- (d) A possible reference to applicable laws and standards in the article was also discussed.

With regard to Article 8, the close and delicate link to Article 1 was generally recognized.

¹⁵ Report of the Working Group on the Draft Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment on its seventh session [1998] UN Doc E/CN.4/1999/59, paras 14–15.

29 The Working Group held its eighth session from 4 to 15 October 1999,¹⁶ where it decided to hold a general discussion on several issues, among them the issue of dialogue and cooperation between the Subcommittee and the States parties. Articles 1 (purpose and scope of the Protocol) and 8 (types of missions and their notification) were considered to be directly relevant to this discussion.¹⁷ During the discussion, the following main issues were raised with regard to Article 1.

30 It was brought up that the wording of Article 1(1), permitting visits to any place in any territory under a State party's jurisdiction, might infringe upon domestic legislation or have a potential impact on non-States parties to the Protocol (eg in cases when access would be sought to diplomatic missions or foreign military installations).

31 Furthermore, it was suggested by some delegations that the phrase 'at its instigation or with its consent or acquiescence' should be deleted, because it provided a wide scope for controversy.

32 Several delegations found that the notion 'may be held' was too broad and imprecise, while others supported this formulation.

33 With regard to the wording 'in accordance with applicable international law and relevant international standards', as contained in Article 1(2), it was discussed whether or not this formula was sufficiently clear, and whether only binding or also recommendatory standards were comprised by this notion.¹⁸

34 Another issue that was scrutinized again during the eighth session was the question of prior consent. Concerning this open issue, still no consensus could be found within the Working Group. It was emphasized by some delegations that in the absence of a standing invitation, the OP would not bring much, if any, added value to the Convention since Article 20 CAT already allowed the Committee to undertake confidential missions with the prior consent of the State party concerned. Several delegations found that the principle of a standing invitation was in full conformity with the principle of national sovereignty, since the ratification of the Protocol was optional, and the decision to ratify was itself an act of national sovereignty. Others, however, were of the opinion that such far-reaching competences would be an infringement of the sovereignty of States and thus unacceptable.¹⁹

35 During the ninth session from 12 to 23 February 2001, the Working Group held a general debate on the alternative draft, introduced at the second meeting of the Working Group on 13 February 2001, and submitted by the delegation of Mexico with the support of GRULAC. The draft proposed that States parties to the Protocol should create national mechanisms for the prevention of torture. The draft was strongly supported by most of the delegations who especially emphasized the complementary nature of the proposed national and international mechanisms.²⁰

36 During the tenth session of the Working Group from 14 to 25 January 2002, a general debate was held on the proposed two-pillar system, which would involve combining an international visiting mechanism with national mechanisms in each participating State.²¹

37 With regard to the question of prior consent, the delegations of Denmark and Finland once again emphasized that the visiting powers should be exercised on the basis of an open invitation in order to make the mechanisms as efficient as possible.

38 On 17 January 2002, the Chairperson-Rapporteur presented her proposal for an OP.²² In drafting her proposal, she had been inspired by all the ideas expressed within the various draft texts (the initial Costa Rican draft, the drafts submitted at the ninth session of the Working Group by GRULAC and the EU, as well as the new alternative draft put forward by the US delegation).²³ Part I (General Principles) of her draft set out the objective of the Protocol, ie to establish a system of regular visits by independent international and national mechanisms in Article 1.

39 On 22 January 2002, a debate was then held on the Chairperson's proposal.²⁴ The following States were in favour: Spain (on behalf of the European Union and the Central European and Eastern European States), Switzerland, Guatemala, Canada, Latvia, New Zealand, Norway, Hungary, Argentina, Slovenia, Mexico, Ecuador, Georgia, Uruguay, Poland, Peru, Costa Rica, Czech Republic, Chile. Others were against it or at least expressed concern: United States of America, Egypt, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Japan, Cuba, India, Syrian Arab Republic, Kuwait, Israel, Algeria, and the Arab Group. China and Turkey seemed to be indifferent.

40 At its fiftieth meeting on 22 April 2002, the Commission on Human Rights finally adopted the text of the OP submitted by the Chairperson-Rapporteur at the tenth session of the Working Group by twenty-nine votes to ten, with fourteen abstentions.²⁵

41 In July of the same year, the draft OP was brought before the ECOSOC. Again, the adoption process met with opposition as the United States proposed—like Cuba had done before—an amendment to the resolution aiming at reopening the drafting discussion on the text of the OP. However, the US proposal was rejected by twenty-nine votes and, therefore, the resolution aiming at the adoption of the Protocol was adopted by thirty-five votes in favour, eight votes against, and ten abstentions (totalling fifty-three members of ECOSOC).²⁶

42 The draft text was then forwarded for further consideration to the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, which addressed it during its meeting in November 2002. By that time, it was Japan who felt that the vote should be postponed for at least twenty-four hours in order to reconsider the financial aspect laid down in the draft text. But again, after only a short discussion, the proposal was voted down. After the United States had tried to hinder the ongoing adoption of the OP a second time by submitting an amendment which foresaw that the new visiting mechanism should only be financed

43 The travaux préparatoires show that after many years of extremely difficult discussions, a compromise could only be achieved through the establishment of the two-pillar system, ie visits to be carried out by both international and national mechanisms. Originally, the various drafts of the OP only contained the UN Subcommittee as visiting body until Mexico introduced the idea of a domestic counterpart in 2001.²⁸ Mexico belonged to the group of States which strongly opposed the Costa Rica Draft because of its alleged interference with State sovereignty and, therefore, favoured the idea of prior consent for every visit by the Subcommittee.²⁹ Its alternative draft was aimed at saving the principle of State sovereignty and non-interference with internal affairs by replacing the Subcommittee, as far as possible, with the introduction of a domestic body and reducing the function of the Subcommittee to being ‘responsible for supporting and supervising the work carried out by national mechanisms’.³⁰ Hence, the suggestion of a national visiting body was not made with the intention to establish a two-pillar system. It is, therefore, not surprising that many States and NGOs were originally very sceptical about the intentions behind the Mexican Draft. They called for a proper balance between the national and international components of the two-pillar system, which ultimately emerged by way of compromise.

44 The two-pillar system works according to the principle of subsidiarity and the complementary nature of the OP,³¹ ie the Subcommittee, in addition to conducting visits on its own, can assist NPMs in carrying out their tasks effectively.³² The SPT conceives this system established by the OP as an ‘interlocking network of mechanisms carrying out visits and other related functions under their preventive mandates in cooperation

²⁷ UNGA, ‘Draft Resolution: Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment’ (2002) UN Doc A/C.3/57/L.30. with each other'.³³ In fact, this seems indeed to be a more accurate picture of this system than two pillars: while the SPT and the NPMs are separate bodies working independently from each other, effective communication, information-sharing, and coordination between them are relevant for the effectiveness of their work for the prevention of torture and ill-treatment.³⁴

45 Article 1 OP introduces the general obligation of States parties to permit regular visits to places of detention. As to the regularity of the visits, although Article 1 OP defines the objective of the present Protocol as the establishment of a 'system of regular visits' undertaken by national and international bodies, the SPT itself has expressed doubts as to whether it will be able to visit every State party once every four to five years, which it considers necessary for effective prevention of ill-treatment.³⁵ The SPT is reaching its financial and capacity limits by an increasing number of States parties. The SPT Chair stated at the GA in October 2016 that 'as ratifications continue, we will continue to fall further away from achieving our benchmark aspiration of visiting each state party on a periodicity akin to the average reporting cycle to the human rights treaty bodies or of Universal Periodic Review'.³⁶ In fact, the SPT has actually carried out five visits in 2014, eight visits in 2015, eight visits in 2016, eight visits in 2017, and six visits in 2018.³⁷ Hence, as predicted,³⁸ NPMs have been and will be 'the central bodies of the system of prevention that the OPCAT puts in place'.³⁹ The degree of frequency that is actually necessary for a visiting system to stay truly preventive is elaborated under Article 19 OP.

46 The States parties' obligation to establish a system of regular visits includes all places 'where people are deprived of their liberty'. Together with the two-pillar system between the SPT and the NPMs, these interdependent obligations add up to a system reflecting the principle of cooperation. This principle is an overarching theme of the OP and visible in its various provisions⁴⁰ that foresee a triangular constructive relationship between the State Party, the SPT and NPMs.

47 Finally, Article 1 OP reiterates the principle of prevention enshrined in the preamble,⁴¹ as it formulates that the prevention of torture and other ill-treatment is the key aim of the monitoring bodies' visits. With reference to Article 1 OP, the SPT describes the NPM's visits as its main preventive task.⁴² This monitoring procedure is based on the experience that torture usually takes place behind closed doors and can, therefore, be best prevented by opening up closed institutions to independent scrutiny. The very fact that a domestic or international prison inspection team may conduct unannounced visits to places of detention has a deterrent effect. Further, only first-hand information enables the monitoring body to have a distortion-free picture of the conditions.⁴³

48 The adoption of the OP signifies enormous progress in favour of international human rights monitoring compared to the CAT.⁴⁴ In Article 20(3) CAT, the principle of State sovereignty was still strongly upheld as the Committee against Torture, in the context of an inquiry procedure, is allowed to carry out a fact-finding visit to the territory of the State party concerned only in agreement with the respective Government; further, States parties may opt out of the inquiry procedure in accordance with Article 28. A breakthrough on this issue was only achieved because the purpose of visits under the OP differs fundamentally from those under Article 20 CAT. An inquiry procedure is only undertaken after the Committee has received reliable information about systematic practices of torture in the territory of a State party and aims at investigating these allegations. The visits of the Subcommittee under the OP are, however, of a purely preventive nature, as defined by the objective of the OP in Article 1. Hence, the fact that the Subcommittee visits a particular country does not necessarily indicate that there might be any particular allegations; this principle is underlined by the term 'regular visits'. The SPT has the power to conduct visits without invitation by the State party. Further, a significant change was undergone through the establishment of national mechanisms who have local expertise and ownership as well as the possibility to conduct regular⁴⁵ visits and establish a sustainable dialogue with the authorities.

Establishment of a UN Subcommittee on Prevention

1. A Subcommittee on Prevention of Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment of the Committee against Torture (hereinafter referred to as the Subcommittee on Prevention) shall be established and shall carry out the functions laid down in the present Protocol.
2. The Subcommittee on Prevention shall carry out its work within the framework of the Charter of the United Nations and shall be guided by the purposes and principles thereof, as well as the norms of the United Nations concerning the treatment of people deprived of their liberty.
3. Equally, the Subcommittee on Prevention shall be guided by the principles of confidentiality, impartiality, non-selectivity, universality and objectivity.
4. The Subcommittee on Prevention and the States Parties shall cooperate in the implementation of the present Protocol.

1. Introduction

1 As its name indicates, the Subcommittee on Prevention (SPT) is a subsidiary organ of the Committee against Torture (CAT Committee or Committee), which was established as the main monitoring body of the Convention in accordance with Article 17 CAT.¹ The SPT is, however, largely independent from the CAT Committee. Its members are not elected by the CAT Committee, but by the States parties to the OP.² It carries out its mandate, ie conducting visits to places of detention on the territory of States parties as well as advising and assisting States parties and their national preventive mechanisms,³ in close cooperation with the governments concerned and without any control of the Committee. The main link with the Committee is provided by Article 16: the SPT shall present a public annual report on its activities to the Committee, and the Committee may decide to make public statements or to publish country-specific reports of the SPT.

2 Since the SPT is empowered to carry out preventive missions to the territory of States parties without prior consent, which was considered by many States during the drafting process as undermining the UN principles of State sovereignty and territorial integrity, a number of precautionary provisions were inserted into the text of the OP. First, the SPT is required to cooperate with the States parties in carrying out country missions and visits to places of detention as well as other functions. Furthermore, the SPT shall be guided by the purposes, principles and relevant norms of the United Nations (UN) as well as by the principles of confidentiality, impartiality, non-selectivity, universality, and objectivity.

³ See below Art 11 OP.

Article 1

1. (a) There shall be established, under the Committee against Torture (hereinafter referred to as the Committee), a Subcommittee on the Prevention of Torture (hereinafter referred to as the Subcommittee on Prevention) which shall carry out the functions hereinafter provided.
- (b) The Subcommittee shall consist of [five] experts of recognized competence in the field of human rights, who shall serve in their personal capacity and shall, under its direction, carry out the functions herein provided.
2. Each State Party may, in furtherance of articles 2 and 16 of the Convention, establish, maintain or provide for national mechanisms to strengthen, if necessary, the protection of persons deprived of their liberty pursuant to an order of a public authority from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment (hereinafter referred to as national mechanisms).

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

10 During the first session of the Working Group, held from 19 to 30 October 1992,¹¹ Article 2 was discussed within the third basket of issues on 20 October 1992. The general trend of the discussion around Article 2 showed that the retention of an independent body responsible for the implementation of the Protocol was favoured. However, it was found that it should have some institutional connection with the Committee. Some delegations stated that the body should be independent from the Committee and should be invested with specific and sufficient powers. A specific proposal was made by the delegation of Chile,¹² stating that the Committee should establish a list of experts to be entrusted with the task of carrying out the visits. This would, in Chile's opinion, simplify matters and reduce delays while at the same time keeping down the costs for the new system. It was felt by some delegations, that the positive aspects of this proposal (streamlining of procedures, reducing financial costs) should be considered further.¹³ Another proposal was to establish a special institute with experts of the Committee as members.

11 Some delegations stated that the body should have a status that would inspire respect and credibility and considered that a reliance on the Committee would not be administratively effectual, especially given the Committee's present size and workload. According to the view of some delegations, the principle of confidentiality could only be maintained by the installation of a SPT. Others stated that this would be undesirable for both financial and coordination reasons.

12 Concern was also raised with regard to an 'indirect' election of the SPT by the Committee.

13 In any case, and despite the fact that the trend of the discussion seemed to favour the idea of a separate body within an appropriate institutional link to the Committee, a need to clarify the relationship between the functions of the Committee and the SPT was clearly identified.

¹² See E/CN.4/1992/WG.11/WP.1, paras 20–22. ¹³ See E/CN.4/1993/28 (n 11) para 51.

14 In the second session of the Working Group from 25 October to 5 November 1993,¹⁴ the wording of Article 2 was further discussed. The group agreed to replace the opening words ‘The Committee against Torture shall establish’ by the words ‘There shall be established’, based on the thought that the text of the Protocol should follow that of the CAT where possible and appropriate.

15 Furthermore, there was a prevailing opinion among the delegations that the body to be established should be separate from the Committee and that the differences in the objectives of both treaty monitoring bodies justified such a separation. A reference was made to the quasi-judicial functions of the Committee, such as the consideration of communications. The main objective of the OP, however, was considered to be to promote the taking of preventive, as opposed to jurisdictional measures against torture.

16 Yet most delegations found that an institutional link between the two bodies should be foreseen and should both safeguard consistency with the already established system under the Convention and clarify the subordinate status of the new body to be established. Thus, a number of delegations wanted the words ‘of the Committee against Torture’ to be inserted after the word ‘Punishment’. One delegation suggested inserting the phrase ‘which shall carry out the functions laid down in the present Protocol’ thereafter. Some delegations, however, regarded the establishment of a separate body as excessive, for reasons of both coordination and cost.

17 During the fifth session from 14 to 25 October 1996,¹⁵ the Chairperson-Rapporteur called for comments on Article 2 as adopted as the outcome of the first reading. The delegations of Mexico, the Russian Federation and Cuba pointed out that the draft OP should clearly establish the link between the Committee and the SPT. They wanted to keep the phrases ‘of the Committee against Torture’ and ‘which shall carry out the functions laid down in the present Protocol’. The delegation of Japan, however, stated that the SPT should be independent of the Committee and proposed to delete the reference mentioned. Moreover, it proposed naming the new body the ‘Committee for the Prevention of Torture’.

18 The Drafting Group then decided to reflect the divergence of views in a footnote to be presented to the plenary meeting for adoption.

19 During the ninth session, a general discussion was held on the alternative draft submitted by the delegation of Mexico with the support of GRULAC, where among other things the composition and mandate of the international mechanism was considered.¹⁶

20 In the tenth and final Working Group session, from 14 to 25 January 2002,¹⁷ a debate was held on the proposal presented by the Chairperson-Rapporteur. At its fiftieth meeting on 22 April 2002, the Commission on Human Rights finally adopted the text of the OP submitted by the Chairperson-Rapporteur at the tenth session of the Working Group by twenty-nine votes to ten.¹⁸

3. Issues of Interpretation

21 The idea of an international body carrying out preventive visits to places of detention was already contained in the original Costa Rica Draft of 1980. The revised Costa Rica Draft of 1991 then proposed a Subcommittee on Prevention to be established by the Committee against Torture. However, already during the 1992 discussions in the Working Group, concern was raised about a too close relationship between both bodies and an ‘indirect’ election of the SPT by the CAT Committee.¹⁹ Consequently, in 1993, the words ‘The Committee against Torture shall establish’ were replaced by the phrase ‘There shall be established’. In fact, the delegations which had concerns about a close relationship between both bodies prevailed, and the SPT, according to Articles 6 and 7, is not established and elected by Committee, but by the States parties to the Protocol. With ten members, its initial size was equal to that of the Committee. After the fiftieth ratification,²⁰ the number of members increased to twenty-five, taking into account that the SPT’s workload would increase notably with a higher number of States parties.²¹ Consisting of twenty-five members, the SPT is currently the largest of all UN treaty bodies. The Protocol does not foresee a further increase of members.

22 In practice, the SPT works largely independently from the Committee, but in close cooperation with States parties. Although its missions to the territory of States parties do not require any prior consent, the SPT shall notify the States parties pursuant to Article 13(2) of its programme in order that they may make the necessary practical arrangements. The respective Government may oppose the inclusion of a specific expert in the mission²² and may even object to a visit to a particular place of detention on urgent and compelling grounds.²³ But, in principle, the States parties are under an obligation to receive the SPT and to cooperate fully with it in the exercise of its functions and, above all, to grant it unrestricted access to all places of detention and their installations and facilities and relevant documents. It must further provide the SPT with the opportunity to conduct private interviews with detainees.²⁴ After each visit, the SPT presents its report, including relevant recommendations and conclusions, directly to the respective Government, and may also publish this report upon request by the State party.²⁵ The Committee against Torture only receives a public annual report by the SPT and may decide, under certain circumstances, to make a public statement on a particular matter or to publish a mission report of the SPT.²⁶

23 According to Article 2(1) OP, the SPT shall carry out the ‘functions laid down in the present Protocol’. These are clearly defined in Part III on the mandate of the SPT.²⁷ In addition to conducting preventive visits to places of detention in the territory of States parties and making recommendations to governments concerning the protection of detainees against torture and ill-treatment, the SPT shall also advise and assist States parties and their respective national preventive mechanisms and cooperate with the relevant UN organs and other relevant international and regional organizations.²⁸

24 In carrying out these functions, the SPT shall ‘work within the framework of the Charter of the UN and shall be guided by the purposes and principles thereof’. These precautionary words were inserted in 1999 for the purpose of ensuring that the SPT will not abuse its mandate. The purposes and principles of the UN are laid down in Articles 1 and 2 of the UN Charter. Promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms is one of the three key purposes of the UN²⁹ and shall be achieved by means of international cooperation. The main principles, which the drafters of Article 2(2) OP probably had in mind, are the principles of sovereign equality, territorial integrity and non-intervention in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of States, as laid down in Article 2(1), (4) and (7) of the UN Charter. However, these principles were developed for States and have only a limited value for guiding the work of the SPT. The drafters wished to express the principle that the SPT, in conducting missions to the territory of States parties, shall avoid any behaviour which might be interpreted as violating the sovereignty, equality, and territorial integrity of any State. In other words, the SPT shall act in a spirit of cooperation rather than confrontation and respect the customs, traditions, religious, and similar rules of the respective countries.

25 The SPT shall also be guided by ‘the norms of the United Nations concerning the treatment of people deprived of their liberty’. In addition to the right to personal liberty and security in Article 9 CCPR, the prohibition of torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment in Article 7 CCPR, the right of all persons deprived of their liberty to be treated with humanity and with respect for the inherent dignity of the human person in Article 10 CCPR,³⁰ other rights of both Covenants are particularly relevant for detainees (such as the rights to privacy, freedom of religion and expression, equality and non-discrimination, the rights to food, water, shelter, clothing, healthcare, and education).

26 The term ‘norms’ also refers to the relevant non-binding declarations, principles and guidelines adopted by the UN for the protection of detainees:³¹

- Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.³³

27 According to Article 2(3) OP, the SPT shall also be guided by various other principles. Most important is the principle of confidentiality. This means that all proceedings of the SPT, ie its meetings, visits and deliberations, shall be kept confidential. This corresponds to the principle of confidentiality of the Committee in the communication and inquiry procedures. Where the Committee publishes all conclusions and recommendations in the State reporting procedure under Article 19, all final decisions in the individual complaints procedure under Article 22 and at least a summary account of the results of its inquiry procedure under Article 20 CAT,⁵¹ the SPT, pursuant to Article 16(1) OP, ‘shall communicate its recommendations and observations confidentially to the State Party’. It may only publish a mission report upon explicit request of a State party or if the Government violates its duty of confidentiality.⁵² In addition, the CAT Committee may, if a State party refuses to cooperate or to take steps to improve the situation, decide to make a public statement on this matter or to publish the respective report of the SPT. Although the ECPT contains similar provisions on confidentiality,⁵³ the general practice has emerged that most of the reports of the CPT are published in full upon request of the respective governments.⁵⁴ The same holds true for the SPT, which encourages States parties to authorize the publication, as it ‘believes that publication of its visit reports reflects the spirit of transparency on which preventive visiting is based’.⁵⁵ By the end of 2016, the SPT had transmitted a total of fifty-one visit reports to States parties and NPMs, whereof twenty-four had been made public.⁵⁶

28 The other principles mentioned in Article 2(3) OP are not elaborated on further. Impartiality means that the members of the SPT shall not be biased; guided by personal, economic, or political interests; and shall not become influenced by strong emotions or media interests. Objectivity is closely related to impartiality and means that the SPT shall report on its visits according to the facts as established in a professional, impartial, and non-biased manner. The SPT shall resist any pressure exerted by governments, NGOs, the media, and other interest groups. Finally, the principles of universality and non-selectivity signify that the monitoring of places of detention is based on a worldwide system and that the SPT, subject of course to the ratification of the OP by States, shall select the countries which it decides to visit by objective and non-selective criteria. This principle is further elaborated by Article 13(1) OP which requires the SPT to ‘establish, at first by lot, a programme of regular visits to the States Parties’. In addition to selecting countries by lot, the SPT shall also ensure that it visits countries in different world regions and with different legal and political systems on an equitable basis.⁵⁷

National Preventive Mechanism

Each State Party shall set up, designate or maintain at the domestic level one or several visiting bodies for the prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment (hereinafter referred to as the national preventive mechanism).

1. Introduction

1 Article 3 OP introduces the national visiting body of the OP's two-pillar system by obliging the States parties to set up, designate, or maintain one or more domestic visiting bodies for the prevention of torture and other ill-treatment, referred to as a national preventive mechanism (NPM). This obligation is the innovative feature distinguishing the OP from its regional counterpart, the ECPT.

2 The introduction of a national visiting body into the OP's prevention system was suggested by Mexico with the intention of weakening the SPT's mandate. This led to the establishment of the two-pillar system in conformity with the principle of subsidiarity, ie that States have the primary responsibility for an efficient protection of human rights and that international monitoring bodies play a supplementary role in ensuring States' compliance with their international obligations.

3 However, instead, the creation of an obligation of States parties to prevent torture and other ill-treatment by establishing NPMs has significantly strengthened the OP. Independent national entities, NPMs are in a better position than international human rights mechanisms such as the SPT to conduct regular visits to places of detention, identify the major problems and shortcomings, and follow-up on them with State authorities in a continuous dialogue.¹ NPMs have been called 'the front line of torture prevention'² due to their potential for regular involvement with State authorities over the implementation of an international human rights treaty.³ The SPT has stated its commitment to the development of an NPM in numerous reports by noting that '[o]ne of the crucial factors preventing ill-treatment is the existence of a fully functioning system of independent visits to monitor all places where person may be deprived of their liberty'.⁴ And it is for this reason that the SPT's work with NPMs in assisting them to become effective has been said to be of greatest added value to the OPCAT system.⁵

6 On 13 February 2001, at the second meeting of the Working Group during its ninth session from 12 to 23 February 2001, the delegation of Mexico introduced its alternative draft (prepared with the support of GRULAC).

7 This draft was based on the principle that States have the primary responsibility for the protection of human rights and that the action of the international mechanism has to be complementary to the action taken by each individual State. Thus, in the alternative draft it was proposed that States parties to the Protocol should create national mechanisms for the prevention of torture. A number of delegations from other regional groups supported the Mexican draft and appreciated Mexico's efforts.⁸ During the discussions, many delegations emphasized the complementary nature of the proposed national and international mechanisms. Others, however, found that there was no proper balance between the national and the international levels and expressed concern that the latter seemed to become subsidiary to the former.⁹ The delegations who supported the alternative draft underlined that it constituted an improvement of the original draft, supplemented by the added value of national mechanisms. National mechanisms would be in a better position to prevent torture and to visit facilities all over a country, including those located in remote areas where an international body would probably never be able to go. Some delegations recalled that it had been repeatedly recommended by the CPT to install mechanisms at the national level.¹⁰ Some other delegations raised concern about the financial implications of creating national and international mechanisms.

8 During the tenth session of the Working Group from 14 to 25 January 2002, and after the Chairperson-Rapporteur had presented her proposal, a debate was held on the concept of the two-pillar system.¹¹ The representative of Spain on behalf of the European Union, the Central and Eastern European States, including Bulgaria, the Czech Republic, Estonia, Hungary, Latvia, Lithuania, Poland, Romania, Slovakia, and Slovenia, in association with Cyprus, Malta, and Turkey, presented a common position. These delegations welcomed the initiative to establish a two-pillar system. Similar views were expressed by the delegations of Argentina, Canada, Ecuador, Georgia, Guatemala, Mexico, Norway, New Zealand, the Republic of Korea, the Russian Federation, South Africa, and Switzerland.

9 The delegation of Mexico stated that it did not insist on its proposal and that it supported the creation of a strong international visiting mechanism. The delegation of South Africa expressed concern that national mechanisms might shift the focus away from the efforts envisaged to achieve strong international standards of prevention against torture. The delegations of China, Cuba, Egypt, and the Syrian Arab Republic spoke in favour of the two-pillar system and emphasized the establishment of strong national mechanisms with visiting functions and an international mechanism which would mainly provide technical assistance. The delegation of the United States of America supported a three-pillar system, taking into account also the regional level, where States should be encouraged to consider adopting mechanisms that would provide for mandatory visits to places of detention such as those contained in the ECPT and its Protocol I.¹²

10 It was especially the mandatory nature of the proposed national preventive mechanisms that was first questioned by certain delegates, among them Switzerland,

Denmark, Germany, and Canada, but also the United States of America, Cuba, and Japan. Others, however, like Guatemala, Argentina, and Mexico, were of the opposite view and supported the mandatory concept.¹³ The Working Group finally adopted the text proposed by the Chairperson-Rapporteur. At its fiftieth meeting on 22 April 2002, the Commission on Human Rights finally adopted the text of the OP submitted by the Chairperson-Rapporteur at the tenth session of the Working Group by twenty-nine votes to ten.¹⁴

3. Issues of Interpretation

11 According to Article 3 OP, each State party shall 'set up, designate or maintain at the domestic level one or several visiting bodies'. This shows that the OP, in order to accommodate the different situations in States parties,¹⁵ is leaving it open to States parties which structure their NPM has, provided it meets the Protocol's key requirements of independence, impartiality, and efficiency, as stipulated in Articles 18 and 19 OP.

12 However, the SPT has limited the States parties' flexibility by further developing these requirements in its guidelines, tools, and reports. It has increasingly elaborated which prerogatives the organizational form of the NPMs should fulfil and through which procedure the NPMs should come into being.¹⁶

Obligation to Allow Preventive Visits to All Places of Detention

1. Each State Party shall allow visits, in accordance with the present Protocol, by the mechanisms referred to in articles 2 and 3 to any place under its jurisdiction and control where persons are or may be deprived of their liberty, either by virtue of an order given by a public authority or at its instigation or with its consent or acquiescence (hereinafter referred to as places of detention). These visits shall be undertaken with a view to strengthening, if necessary, the protection of these persons against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.
2. For the purposes of the present Protocol, deprivation of liberty means any form of detention or imprisonment or the placement of a person in a public or private custodial setting which that person is not permitted to leave at will by order of any judicial, administrative or other authority.

3.3 Meaning of ‘under jurisdiction and control’	749

1. Introduction

1 Article 4 is one of the key provisions of the OP, as it, first, establishes an unequivocal obligation of States parties to allow visits by both the SPT and the NPMs ‘to any place under its jurisdiction and control where persons are or may be deprived of their liberty, either by virtue of an order given by a public authority or at its instigation or with its consent or acquiescence’.

2 Second, it defines deprivation of liberty and places of detention—but not without controversy. The term ‘places of detention’ is noted by the provision as the generic term that all places falling within the scope of the Protocol will be referred to. This term is hence used in this Commentary for all places of deprivation of liberty that visiting bodies are allowed to visit according to Article 4 OP.¹

¹ The Russian language text employs the term ‘содержания под стражей’ which literally means ‘holding someone under (armed) guard’. This has been a potential stumbling block in the post-Soviet countries many of whom have inherited the Soviet system of criminal justice. In fact, in the Republic of Kazakhstan, a disagreement arose between ministries as to whether places such as care homes and children’s homes could fall under the umbrella of Article 4 OP, the argument being that in such places nobody is being held under armed guard. See Human Rights Implementation Centre, “Deprivation of Liberty” as per Article 4 of OPCAT: The Scope’ (October 2011) 1–2 <<https://www.bristol.ac.uk/media-library/sites/law/migrated/documents/deprivationofliberty.pdf>> accessed 12 December 2017.

1. A State Party to the Convention that becomes a party to the present Protocol agrees to permit visits in accordance with the terms of the present Protocol to any place (hereinafter referred to as a place of detention) subject to the jurisdiction of a State Party where persons are held who have been deprived of their liberty for any reason, including persons under investigation by the law enforcement authorities, civil or military, persons in preventive, administrative or re-educative detention, persons who are being prosecuted or punished for any offence and persons in custody for medical reasons.

2. A place of detention within the meaning of this Article shall not include any place which representatives or delegates of a Protecting Power or of the International Committee of the Red Cross are entitled to visit and do visit pursuant to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and their additional protocols of 1977.

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions⁹

10 During the ninth session of the Working Group from 12 to 23 February 2001, a general discussion was held on the scope of prevention under the OP.¹⁰ Some delegations were of the opinion that prevention should be considered in the context of the provisions of the CAT dealing specifically with prevention, for example Articles 10 and 11, and should not involve monitoring activities. At the international level, monitoring should remain in the competence of the Committee and the SRT. Many delegations, however, found that prevention activities should include visits to all places where persons were deprived of their liberty, such as prisons for men and women, police stations, psychiatric wards, detention centres for minors and immigrants, and places of detention under the control of the judicial authorities. Other delegations raised concerns about the implications of such a scope of authority for constitutional and other fundamental rights. Regarding visits to unofficial places of detention, some delegations considered that they should not be part of the preventive activities. The existence of such places constituted, per se, a violation of human rights that should be dealt with by the Committee and the SRT in the framework of their monitoring functions.

11 During the tenth session of the Working Group from 14 to 25 January 2002, the delegation of Japan questioned the appropriateness of an international body with unlimited powers to inspect places of detention in the territory of States parties.¹¹ The delegation of Egypt strongly opposed the idea of an international mechanism with unlimited authority to visit any detention facility within a State at any time, and indicated that such unlimited authority would encounter constitutional obstacles. The delegations of Cuba and Egypt also suggested that States should have the possibility of refusing access to places of detention for reasons linked to national security. The Chairperson, however, pointed out that the mandate of the Working Group was to establish a preventive system of regular visits to places of detention on a universal scale and that Article 20 CAT had a clear monitoring and sanctioning function, not a preventive one. It was generally felt that the work of the Committee should not be duplicated and that the new bodies established under the OP should have different and additional functions in the field of torture prevention.

12 The Chairperson-Rapporteur's proposal in its Article 4 emphasized the general principles regarding visits.¹² In the discussion, the delegation of the United States of America found that the proposal would create an international Subcommittee on Torture that would have virtually unrestricted authority to visit and inspect any place where persons were or might be detained in any State party to the OP. In its view, this was incompatible with the principle of accountability and the need for reasonable checks and balances on any grant of power.¹³ The US delegation referred to its alternative draft, submitted during the fifth meeting¹⁴ of the Working Group on 16 January 2002, which further elaborated ideas presented by it during previous sessions. This draft aimed to recognize the valuable role visiting mechanisms, such as the CPT, could play at the regional level. The delegation of Cuba found that this proposal was too vague regarding which places of detention could be subject to visitations.

13 At its fiftieth meeting on 22 April 2002, the Commission on Human Rights finally adopted the text of the OP submitted by the Chairperson-Rapporteur at the tenth session of the Working Group by 29 votes to 10.¹⁵

3. Issues of Interpretation

3.1 Deprivation of Liberty

14 Article 4(2) explicitly defines deprivation of liberty as 'any form of detention or imprisonment or the placement of a person in a public or private custodial setting which that person is not permitted to leave at will by order of any judicial, administrative or other authority'. This broad definition can also be found in other international standards.¹⁶

15 The meaning of deprivation of liberty has been subject of extensive discussions and interpretation by international human rights bodies in relation to the right to liberty in Articles 9 ICCPR and 5 ECHR. Liberty of person is understood to relate to 'freedom of bodily movement in the narrowest sense¹⁷ or ‘confinement to a certain limited space’.¹⁸ The notion of deprivation of liberty contains an objective element of a person’s physical confinement and a subjective element of lack of free consent.

16 Deprivation of liberty must be delimited from restriction of freedom of movement. According to the ECtHR the difference is ‘one of degree or intensity, not of nature or substance’.¹⁹ For the interpretation of deprivation of liberty, the concrete situation is the starting point and account to be taken ‘of a whole range of criteria such as the type, duration, effects and manner of implementation of the measure in question’.²⁰ Factors to be assessed are ‘the existence of a possibility of leaving the restricted area, the degree of supervision and control over the person, his or her isolation, [sic] and the availability of social contacts’.²¹

17 As to the subjective criterion, the Human Rights Committee stated in its General Comment No 35 that deprivation of personal liberty pursuant to Article 9 ICCPR is ‘without free consent’;²² so did the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention.²³ The ECtHR has elaborated that the ability of the person concerned to leave the alleged place of detention must not be only a theoretical one.²⁴ However, the ECtHR has cautioned putting too much focus on the subjective element, holding that the right to liberty is too important in a democratic society for a person to lose the benefit of Convention protection for the single reason that he [the applicant] may have given himself up to be taken into detention, especially when it is not disputed that that person is legally incapable of consenting to, or disagreeing with, the proposed action.²⁵

²⁴ In respect of asylum claimants restricted, on arrival in airports, to particular zones or holding areas, the Commission considered that, since they were able to leave the airport by taking a plane elsewhere, they were not in fact deprived of their liberty. The Court in Amuur v France (n 20), however, found that the mere fact that an asylum seeker may leave the country does not exclude a deprivation of liberty, since this may be only a theoretical possibility if no other country is offering the protection which they seek or is prepared to take them in. Thus an asylum seeker held in restricted conditions for an extended period of time may claim to be deprived of liberty. Short periods while practical matters were arranged, eg, repatriation or granting of asylum, would only constitute a restriction of movement. Where applicants’ asylum claims were rejected within a few days, they retained their passports and were not under any supervision or surveillance, the Court found that they were not to be regarded as detained in the transit zone, citing Karen Reid, A Practitioner’s Guide to the European Convention on Human Rights (5th edn, Sweet & Maxwell 2015) 430.

As to custodial settings or placement in hospital, it is for the ECtHR also not decisive if the applicant showed lack of consent, eg by attempts to abscond.²⁶ However, while a lack of legal capacity does not necessarily lead to the conclusion the person concerned cannot understand and hence consent to the situation,²⁷ a person may, in certain situations, validly replace the wish of a person with impaired mental faculties, ‘acting in the context of a protective measure’.²⁸

3.2 Places of Detention

18 As to the interpretation of Article 4 OP, it is worth noting that the second sentence of Article 4(1) reads: ‘These visits shall be undertaken with a view to strengthening, if necessary, the protection of these persons against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.’ This sentence reflects the principle of prevention underlying the OP. Regarding the scope of Article 4 OP, the SPT noted that ‘the term “places of detention”, as found in article 4 of the Optional Protocol, should be given a broad interpretation’.²⁹ In its Compilation of Advice, the SPT concretized that ‘[t]he preventive approach which underpins the OPCAT means that as expansive an interpretation as possible should be taken in order to maximise the preventive impact of the work of the NPM’.³⁰

19 As Article 4(1) OP obliges States parties to also allow visits to any place where persons ‘may be deprived of their liberty’, a place falls within the scope of the SPT’s and NPM’s visiting mandate when the SPT or the NPM considers that a person might be deprived of his/her liberty. Therefore, it is only necessary that a place have the potential to de facto limit the right of personal liberty.

20 Article 4 OP explicitly refers to a ‘public or private custodial setting’. The relevant provisions in the two paragraphs of Article 4 seem, however, to contain certain ²⁶ In the case of a mentally incapacitated person kept in hospital as a ‘voluntary patient’, the ECtHR found a deprivation of liberty as the applicant was under continuous supervision and control and not free to leave; the Court did not consider it decisive that the applicant was compliant and never sought to leave— see Reid (n 244) referring to HL v the United Kingdom (n 25) paras 82–89. See also Storck v Germany (n 25) where even if initially compliant, the applicant showed her lack of consent by attempts to abscond.

contradictions and are in need of interpretation. Article 4(1) contains an explicit obligation of States parties to allow visits to any place under its jurisdiction and control where persons are or may be deprived of their liberty, 'either by virtue of an order given by a public authority or at its instigation or with its consent or acquiescence' while Article 4(2) omits reference to consent or acquiescence by the public authority. However, a systematic interpretation of both provisions, in accordance with the object and purpose of the treaty to provide a comprehensive monitoring of all places of detention, requires that they, as the SPT stated, 'need to read consistently together and . . . place within the scope of the Optional Protocol any public or private custodial setting'.³¹ The SPT noted that an interpretation that is limited to 'such traditional places of deprivation of liberty as prisons would be overly restrictive and, in the view of the Subcommittee, clearly contrary to the Optional Protocol'.

21 The SPT interpreted the application of the terms 'consent' and 'acquiescence' in Article 4(1) OP to mean that the scope of the OP includes any place in which a person is deprived of liberty (in the sense of not being free to leave), or where it considers that a person might be being deprived of their liberty, if it relates to a situation in which the State either exercises, or might be expected to exercise a regulatory function.³²

In other words, the conduct of regulating—or the fact that the State should be regulating—creates again the link between the public authority and the place of deprivation of liberty.³³ This limits the scope of Article 4 OP regarding purely private places of detention to situations in which individuals are detained by private groups when State authorities are aware of it and fail to exercise due diligence to prevent such detention.³⁴ For example, if the police are aware of the fact that private paramilitary groups are holding people in detention and do nothing in their power to prevent this, they become complicit by acquiescence and the SPT or relevant NPM must be granted access to these facilities. The same holds true for private hospitals or nursing homes, which hold persons against their will with the mere knowledge and consent of a public authority. In any case, the visiting bodies must be granted access to detention facilities which governments have outsourced to private companies.

22 Such a broad interpretation of the scope of Article 4 OP is in line with the CPT's understanding of the scope of its mandate pursuant to Article 2 ECPT:³⁵

Visits may be organised in all kinds of places where persons are deprived of their liberty, whatever the reasons may be. The Convention is therefore applicable, for example, to places where persons are held in custody, are imprisoned as a result of conviction for an offence, are held in administrative detention, or are interned for medical reasons or where minors are detained by a public authority. Detention by military authorities is also covered by the Convention.³⁶

³¹ CAT/C/57/4 (n 30), para 1. It may be noted that also the comparable provision for the CPT in Article 2 ECPT, that stays behind Article 5 OP by not explicitly referring to a 'public or private custodial setting', was interpreted in the Explanatory Report in the sense that '[v]isits may be carried out in private as well as public institutions'; in CPT, 'European Convention for the Prevention of Torture and Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment: Text of the Convention and Explanatory Report', CPT/Inf/C (2002) 1, para 32.

23 It may be noted that also the comparable provision for the CPT in Article 2 ECPT was interpreted in the Explanatory Report in the sense that

[v]isits may be carried out in private as well as public institutions. The criterion is whether the deprivation of liberty is the result of action by a public authority. Accordingly, the Committee may carry out visits only in relation to persons who are deprived of their liberty by a public authority, and not voluntary patients. However, in the latter case, it should be possible for the Committee to satisfy itself that this was indeed the wish of the patient concerned.³⁷

- police stations
- pre-trial detention centres
- all detention centres under military jurisdiction³⁹
- psychiatric institutions⁴⁰ and mental health centres including clandestine clinics that ‘treat’ homosexuality⁴¹

25 In the State party to visit, country-specific types of detention as ‘witch camps’ or slum communities⁵⁰ may be also places of detention to visit. It may, however, be noted that the SPT stated that ‘[i]n any situations, the NPM ought also to be mindful of the principle of proportionality when determining its priorities and the focus of its work.’⁵¹ This statement does not suggest a prioritization of traditional places over such that fall under Article 4 OP only because of due diligence obligations; it seems only to intend to clarify that just because a facility fits within the visiting mandate of OP, this does not mean that it should be a priority in its preventive monitoring framework.⁵²

26 Also mobile places such as means of transport are also understood as places of detention. The SPT also noted that ‘the place-based nature of inspecting can miss system-wide problems which require an intersectional approach. It can also fail to monitor instances along the chain of custody, such as transfers and periods of detention immediately after apprehension, where torture and ill-treatment can take place.’⁵³ The SPT recommended that the State party ensure that all places of detention are included in NPM visits, in accordance with the SPT’s evaluation that all persons deprived of their liberty in a State party are covered by the OPCAT. This includes ... periods of deprivation of liberty during apprehension, transfer and removal.⁵⁴

It is worth noting that the Inter-American Commission’s Principles observe that the category of persons covered by the definition of deprivation of liberty ‘includes not only those deprived of their liberty because of crimes or infringements or non-compliance with the law, whether they are accused or convicted, but also those persons who are under the custody and supervision of certain institutions, such as: psychiatric hospitals and other establishments for persons with physical, mental, or sensory disabilities; institutions for children and the elderly; centres for migrants, refugees, asylum or refugee status seekers, stateless and undocumented persons; and any other similar institution the purpose of which is to deprive persons of their liberty’; Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, ‘Principles and Best Practices on the Protection of Persons Deprived of their Liberty in the Americas’ (approved by the Commission during its 131st regular period of sessions, March 3–14, 2008) General Provision.

⁴⁸ SPT, ‘Report on the Visit to Italy’ (2016) UN Doc CAT/OP/ITA/1 paras 49 and 51(a) recommended that the State party ‘urgently ensure internal and external independent monitoring, including through the NPM, of the immigration facilities ... to guarantee its actions are in compliance with international human rights law and standards, including the prevention of torture and ill-treatment’. The ‘hotspots’ intended to ensure that all migrants are duly ‘registered’ when entering the country, ie deprivation of liberty of individuals has the sole purpose of collecting biometric data, such as fingerprinting; ibid, para. 30.

Hence, in accordance with CAT General Comment No 2, the OP also covers police cars and other means by which individuals are transferred.⁵⁵ Such deprivation of liberty may be particularly problematic in the context of immigration processes, eg during transfers, disembarkation, and expulsion, as the persons concerned are under high stress and in a very vulnerable situation.⁵⁶

3.3 Meaning of ‘under jurisdiction and control’

27 Article 4 OP indisputably obliges States parties to allow visits to places of detention within their territory,⁵⁷ including dependencies and overseas territories if the States parties do not limit the reach of the OPCAT at the time of ratification or accession.⁵⁸ Any effort to exclude the application of the OP from airports, seaports, islands or border posts—possibly by declaring them ‘international zones’—would thus be an act of bad faith not permitted by the rules of international law.

28 Regarding extraterritorial obligations, a strict literal interpretation of the English version of Article 4 OP would come to the result that the place of detention must be under both the ‘jurisdiction and control’⁵⁹ of the State party in order for the OPCAT to be applicable. The Spanish version reads ‘jurisdicción y control’, the Russian ‘под его юрисдикцией и контролем’, the Arabic ‘يخضع لولايتها وسيطرتها’ and the Chinese ‘管辖和控制下’. However, the French version of the text, which is equally authentic,⁶⁰ is formulated ‘sous sa jurisdiction ou son contrôle’ (ie, ‘under jurisdiction or control’).⁶¹

29 This discrepancy is solved by a systematic interpretation in accordance with the ordinary meaning of the terms in the context and in the light of the object and purpose of the OP.⁶² As elaborated for the preamble of the OP,⁶³ the implementation of the OPCAT is to be seen as an effective preventive measure that Articles 2(1) and 16(1) CAT oblige States parties to the CAT to undertake. In regards to the geographical scope of application of the obligation to prevent torture, the CAT Committee stated that the Convention applies at all times and in any territory under a Contracting State's jurisdiction which is to be understood to 'include all areas under the effective de facto control of the State party, by whichever military or civil authorities such control is exercised' and 'all persons under the effective control of its authorities, of whichever type, wherever located in the world'.⁶⁴

30 In this sense, the SPT stated in its Guidelines for the definition of the OPCAT's geographical scope of application:

The State should allow the NPM to visit all, and any suspected, places of deprivation of liberty, as set out in Articles 4 and 29 of the Optional Protocol, which are within its jurisdiction. For these purposes, the jurisdiction of the State extends to all those places over which it exercises effective control.⁶⁵

31 As 'effective control' is a vague term, its boundaries are not clear-cut.⁶⁶ It must be noted that the threshold for deciding whether or not effective control is executed is relatively high by the UN Human Rights Committee as well as the European Court of Human Rights. They have observed that a State has to exercise a degree of 'effective control over an area' or 'overall effective control'⁶⁷ over such a territory. Also the ICJ requires either territorial control or the exercise of sovereign rights in occupied territories.⁶⁸

32 Therefore, only situations of effective territorial control are clear-cut. Such are cases in which an individual is detained on a military base or in premises over which the foreign State has control, eg 'diplomatic and consular premises and prisons'.⁶⁹ Hence, States parties exercising jurisdiction and control outside their own territories over places of detention, such as the Russian authorities in the Transnistrian region of Moldova or Georgian authorities in Abkhazia and Tskhinvali regions in Georgia, are under an obligation to allow visits of the UN Subcommittee and the respective NPMs.⁷⁰ In this sense, a State party can also not evade its responsibility by detaining persons extraterritorially,

eg asylum-seekers in extraterritorial processing centres or rejected asylum-seekers in ‘regional protection areas’ pending return to their countries of origin.⁷¹

33 The presented definition of scope means that a contrario the authorities have no obligation to provide access to places of detention which are under their jurisdiction, but not under their effective control. If parts of a State’s territory are occupied by another State, such as Nagorno Karabakh, which de jure is part of Azerbaijan, but is currently occupied by Armenia, or under the de facto control of insurgent groups, such as certain areas controlled by the Daesh in Syria or Iraq, or governed by de facto authorities, such as the territories of Abkhazia and Tskhinvali region in Georgia, the respective governments are not required to provide access to the places of detention in such territories. This does not, however, absolve the governments from their responsibility under international law.

34 It may be noted, however, that the SPT visited areas in the Ukraine in 2011 which the Ukraine calls ‘uncontrolled territories’; it met with the de facto authorities in Donetsk and attempted to visit places of detention under their effective control. As these authorities are not States Parties to the OPCAT, the legal basis for the SPT was that these areas were under the legal jurisdiction of the Ukraine, even though not under its control. Hence, the SPT has, in its practice, reflected the ‘jurisdiction or control’ approach.⁷²

35 The SPT elaborated on the issue of ‘cross-border monitoring of persons in detention’ in such a situation where ‘a State party to the Optional Protocol (a sending State) enter into an arrangement under which those detained by that State are to be held in facilities located in a third State (a receiving State)’.⁷³ The SPT was confronted with the issue in the case of places of detention that are under the jurisdiction and control of a State party, but are being leased by other States and accommodating persons detained by those States.⁷⁴ It considered that the sending State should ensure that such an agreement also provides for its NPM to have the legal and practical capacity to visit those detainees in accordance with the provisions of the OP and the Subcommittee Guidelines.⁷⁵ In addition, the NPM of the receiving State should also have the capacity to visit those in detention on the basis of such agreements, ‘as a natural consequence of its general right to visit all those deprived of their liberty on the basis of public authority and under the jurisdiction and control of the State party’.⁷⁶ After the visits, both NPMs should be able to present their recommendations and ‘enter into a preventive dialogue with the authorities of both the sending and receiving State. The agreement entered into between the sending and receiving States should provide for that and should permit the variation of its terms in the light of the recommendations made’.⁷⁷

36 However, if a State Party sends a person to a detention facility in a non-State party, the possibility of its NPM to visit such detention facilities may depend on the bilateral or multilateral agreement underpinning the arrangement, as a non-State party has no obligations to cooperate with the OPCAT mechanisms. Whenever the result of such arrangement is that the SPT or the sending State's NPM is inhibited from accessing a detention facility, such lack of access would bring the sending State into breach of its obligation to act in good faith, as such schemes undermine the object and purpose of the OPCAT.

37 As removal falls under the application of Article 4 OP, non-voluntary deportation processes are seen as being covered by the mandate of the SPT and NPMs even beyond the territory of the State party as long as the latter retains at least partially effective control of detainees, 'for instance, when a deportation process is subject to the orders of an airline captain, who is also able to assert some authority over the transfer'.⁷⁸ It is important that aircraft used for repatriation flights is registered in the removing country so that it remains under the jurisdiction of the removing state until touchdown (and handover). As it is on handover that much abuse actually occurs, the receiving state ought to be an OPCAT state with an NPM able to monitor the reception.

38 If the NPM is refused access to places of detention, as a result of a lack of information by the concerned authorities on the notion of 'person deprived of liberty' under the OP, the SPT finds it important that 'an investigation for obstruction of public duties, of whatever figure exists in the country to address such a problematic, be carried out efficiently and effectively'.⁷⁹

SUBCOMMITTEE ON PREVENTION

Article 5

Size and Composition of the Subcommittee on Prevention

1. The Subcommittee on Prevention shall consist of ten members. After the fiftieth ratification of or accession to the present Protocol, the number of the members of the Subcommittee on Prevention shall increase to twenty-five.
2. The members of the Subcommittee on Prevention shall be chosen from among persons of high moral character, having proven professional experience in the field of the administration of justice, in particular criminal law, prison or police administration, or in the various fields relevant to the treatment of persons deprived of their liberty.
3. In the composition of the Subcommittee on Prevention due consideration shall be given to equitable geographic distribution and to the representation of different forms of civilization and legal systems of the States Parties.
4. In this composition consideration shall also be given to balanced gender representation on the basis of the principles of equality and non-discrimination.
5. No two members of the Subcommittee on Prevention may be nationals of the same State.
6. The members of the Subcommittee on Prevention shall serve in their individual capacity, shall be independent and impartial and shall be available to serve the Subcommittee on Prevention efficiently.

1. Introduction

1 The SPT is a UN treaty monitoring body, initially consisting of ten independent experts, a number equal to its parent body, the CAT Committee. Taking into account the considerable workload with an increasing number of States parties to be visited by the SPT, the drafters stipulated that the number of its members shall be increased to twenty-five after the fiftieth ratification or accession.¹

¹ After Switzerland's ratification on 24 September 2009, the number of members of the SPT increased to twenty-five.

2 Similar to other UN treaty bodies, the composition of the SPT shall reflect a gender balance, equitable geographic distribution, and the representation of different forms of civilization and legal systems. In addition, the members shall be independent and impartial experts with professional experience in fields relevant to the administration of justice and the treatment of detainees.

2. Travaux Préparatoires

2.1 Chronology of Draft Texts

3 *Original Costa Rica Draft (6 March 1980)*²

Article 4

1. The Committee shall be composed of 10 members until such time as there are not less than 25 States Parties to the present Protocol. Thereafter, the Committee shall be composed of 18 members.
2. The members of the Committee shall be persons of high moral character and recognized competence in the field of human rights and in the matters dealt with in the Convention and the present Protocol.
3. The members of the Committee shall be elected and shall serve in their personal capacity.

1. The members of the Committee shall be elected for a term of four years. However, at the first election half of the members shall be elected for two years. Thereafter, elections shall be held every two years for half of the members of the Committee.
2. Initially the Committee shall not include more than two members from the same State. When there are more than 10 States Parties to the present Protocol, the Committee shall not include more than one member from the same State, save that members elected while there were 10 States Parties or less shall continue to serve for the unexpired portion of their term.
3. In the election of the Committee, consideration shall be given to equitable geographical distribution of membership and to the representation of the different forms of civilization and of the different legal systems.

4 *Revised Costa Rica Draft (15 January 1991)*³

Article 4

1. The Subcommittee shall consist of a maximum of 25 members. While there are less than 25 States Parties to the present Protocol, the number of members of the Subcommittee shall be equal to that of the States Parties.
2. The members of the Subcommittee shall be chosen from among persons of high moral character, having proven professional experience in the field of prison or police administration or in the various fields relevant to the treatment of persons deprived of their liberty or in the field of the international protection of human rights.

3. No two members of the Subcommittee may be nationals of the same State.
4. The members of the Subcommittee shall serve in their individual capacity, shall be independent and impartial and shall be available to serve the Subcommittee effectively.

Article 6

1. The members of the Subcommittee shall be elected for a period of four years. However, among the members elected at the first election, the terms of five members, to be chosen by lot, shall expire at the end of two years.
2. In the election of the members of the Subcommittee, consideration shall be given to equitable geographical distribution of membership, to a proper balance among the various fields of competence referred to in article 4, paragraph 2, and to the representation of different traditions and legal systems.

Article 1

1. (a) There shall be established, under the Committee against Torture (hereinafter referred to as the Committee), a Subcommittee on the Prevention of Torture (hereinafter referred to as the Subcommittee on Prevention) which shall carry out the functions hereinafter provided.
- (b) The Subcommittee shall consist of [five] experts of recognized competence in the field of human rights, who shall serve in their personal capacity and shall, under its direction, carry out the functions herein provided.
2. Each State Party may, in furtherance of Articles 2 and 16 of the Convention, establish, maintain or provide for national mechanisms to strengthen, if necessary, the protection of persons deprived of their liberty pursuant to an order of a public authority from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment (hereinafter referred to as national mechanisms).

Article 5

The members of the Subcommittee on Prevention shall be elected in the same manner as members of the Committee referred to in paragraphs 2 to 6 of article 17, consideration being given to equitable geographical distribution and to the usefulness of the participation of persons having professional experience in the field of administration of justice, criminal law, prison or police administration, or in the various medical fields relevant to the treatment of persons deprived of their liberty.

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

10 During the first session of the Working Group, held from 19 to 30 October 1992,⁹ the issues of composition and structure of the SPT were discussed under Articles 2 and

⁹ See Report of the Working Group on a Draft Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (1992) UN Doc E/CN.4/1993/28.

4 to 7. Most delegations supported the principle of cooperation as being essential to the system envisaged by the Protocol.

11 The general trend of interventions considered that the eventual determination of the appropriate number of members should take into account all the relevant factors, including the workload of the body, the number of States parties, requisite qualifications of members, and financial matters. Many delegations considered that a maximum number of twenty-five members for the composition of the SPT was too high. Alternative proposals on the appropriate number of members were put forward based on other human rights treaty bodies and having regard for the potential financial implications of a large body. It was stated that the SPT would be able to rely on assistance from experts for missions and that a large number of members would, thus, not be necessary. Other delegations pointed out that, with regard to the comparison with other UN instruments, existing bodies were essentially committees which operated in meetings and conferences, whereas the body established under the Protocol would work in the field. They referred to the example of the CPT, which has one member per State party as well as experts, for the fulfilment of comparable responsibilities in a narrower framework.

12 With regard to paragraph 2, the trend of interventions emphasized the need to promote the election of persons with the greatest competence and the widest range of professional qualifications in relevant fields. It was stated that the present formulation could preclude the election of persons with professional qualities closely related to the needs of the body to be established. This included judges, lawyers, or academics, who might have solid experience in matters of concern but had not been 'administrators' in the field of police or prisons. A number of specific qualities were raised for consideration:

- to add the words 'with recognized competence in the field of human rights';
 - relevant professional or legal experience in the treatment of persons deprived of their liberty;
 - recognized competence in investigative work;
- recognized ability to engage in constructive dialogue at a high level.

Most delegates saw the need for a wide range of different qualifications to be encompassed among the membership of the SPT.¹⁰

13 During the second session of the Working Group from 25 October to 5 November 1993,¹¹ it continued to consider Article 4. Concerning paragraph 1, the Working Group agreed to change the wording of the paragraph in such a way as to allow for an increase in membership at a later stage but at the same time not require the number of members to equal that of the States parties. To that effect, the wording of the second sentence of paragraph 1 was changed to read as follows: 'After the [number to be inserted] accession to the present Protocol, the number of members of the Subcommittee shall increase to [number to be inserted].'¹² With regard to paragraph 2, the Working Group agreed that the qualifications for membership established were too limiting. A number of delegates considered it useful to include the possibility to nominate and elect members having experience in the administration of justice and in a wider field of human rights. Therefore, it was decided to insert before the word 'prison', the words 'the administration of justice, in particular criminal law'. The Working Group also agreed to delete the words 'the international protection of'. Concerning paragraphs 3 and 4, it decided to retain them in their present form.

14 With regard to Article 5, some delegations emphasized the need for a proper representation of women and suggested inserting provisions to that effect. Others underlined that any reference to such representation should not prejudice the principle of equitable geographical distribution and the qualifications and requirements for membership of the SPT. Some delegations argued, on the basis of the principle of non-discrimination, against any reference to sex. The Working Group agreed on a compromise text, inserting after the word 'men', the words 'on the basis of the principles of equality and non-discrimination'.

15 During the fifth session from 14 to 25 October 1996,¹³ the Chairperson-Rapporteur called for comments on Articles 2, 3, 4, and 5, as adopted as the outcome of the first reading. The delegation of Denmark made a general statement in which it stressed the necessity for the independence, impartiality, and competence of those carrying out missions. The observer for Amnesty International said that the quality and independence of the proposed body would determine its effectiveness. She felt that there was a possible contradiction between the desire to appoint the best possible members for the position and the appointment of members by States parties who might be influenced by political considerations. Thus, she suggested that the Committee should play a role in the appointment of members of the proposed body or that other methods of providing independent experts be explored.¹⁴

16 With respect to Article 4, the delegation of Mexico expressed the view that the SPT should be comprised of the same number as, or fewer members than, the Committee. Similarly, the delegations of the Philippines and Japan stated that the SPT should comprise no more than ten members since it should not have more members than its parent body. The delegations of Korea, Canada, Australia, and Cuba found that the number of members of the SPT should be linked to the number of States parties to the OPCAT. The delegation of Japan considered the wording of Article 4(2) to be too detailed and proposed the following text: 'The members of the Sub-Committee shall be chosen from among persons of high moral character, known for their competence in the field of prison or police administration or in the various medical fields relevant to the treatment of persons deprived of their liberty.' The representative of Canada stated that, in her view, the wording of Article 4(2) was already sufficiently flexible to allow suitable candidates to be found.¹⁵

17 With regard to Article 6, several paragraphs had been moved from the text of Article 5.¹⁶ With regard to its paragraph 4, a reference was made to discussions on whether the words 'different forms of civilization' should be deleted. Due to the willingness of several delegations to show flexibility, the drafting group had finally agreed to retain these words. Finally, paragraph 6 addressed the implications of the decision to enable States parties to nominate non-nationals.¹⁷

18 During the ninth session from 12 to 23 February 2001, the composition of the international mechanism was discussed with regard to the alternative draft submitted by the delegation of Mexico with the support of GRULAC.¹⁸ Regarding the composition of the SPT, the alternative draft mainly contained the provisions adopted by the Working Group in the second reading of the original draft.

19 At its fiftieth meeting on 22 April 2002, the Commission on Human Rights finally adopted the text of the OP submitted by the Chairperson-Rapporteur at the tenth session of the Working Group by twenty-nine votes to ten.¹⁹

3. Issues of Interpretation

3.1 Size of the SPT

20 The original Costa Rica Draft of 1980 had already proposed a Committee of ten experts to be increased to eighteen as soon as twenty-five States had become parties to the OP. This seems to have been modelled on Article 17 CEDAW, which had been adopted the year before and which provides for a Committee of eighteen experts which was increased to twenty-three after ratification or accession by thirty-five States. Taking into account that the SPT will have a higher workload than other treaty monitoring bodies, which are usually not required to carry out field missions, and that the CPT consists of a number of experts equal to the number of States parties to the ECPT (presently: 47), the revised Costa Rica draft of 1991 proposed that the number of SPT experts should be equal to that of the States parties, until a maximum of twenty-five members was reached. During the discussions in the Working Group, many delegations proposed a smaller number of experts, and finally a compromise was reached with the model of ten to twenty-five members. As the number of States parties rose to fifty after Switzerland's ratification of the Protocol on 24 September 2009, the number of members of the SPT increased to twenty-five. The terms of office of all the newly elected²⁰ members started on 1 January 2011.²¹ Taking into account that the missions shall be conducted by at least two members,²² and that each member may be in a position to carry out two missions per year, the SPT could, in principle, conduct a considerable number of missions per year. This would require, however, personnel and financial resources that go far beyond what is presently available from the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights.²³

3.2 Composition of the SPT

3.2.1 Professional Experience

21 The travaux préparatoires show that the professional composition of the SPT was one of the more controversial issues during the drafting of Article 5. While the original Costa Rica Draft of 1980 envisaged primarily human rights experts to serve on the Committee, the professional experience shifted with the revised Costa Rica Draft of 1991 towards experts in the field of police or prison administration. This was later somewhat broadened, but Article 5(2) still puts a major emphasis on experts in the field of the administration of criminal justice, and prison and police administration. Human rights experts are no longer explicitly required, but can be subsumed under the ‘various fields relevant to the treatment of persons deprived of liberty’. Other relevant professions falling under this category are, inter alia, medical doctors, psychiatrists, psychologists, forensic experts, anthropologists, and social workers. With respect to their professional backgrounds, eight members of the initial team²⁴ had a legal and two of them had a medical background. Moreover, three European experts were at the same time members of the CPT, which means that the SPT was able to draw on their respective experience in a similar body. The then newly elected first Chairperson of the SPT, Ms Silvia Casale, also served as President of the CPT from 2000 to 2007. With regard to the balance of professional expertise, no progress was made so far; currently, still seventeen out of twenty-two SPT members have a legal background. Two members of the present SPT are at the same time members of the CPT.²⁵ In order to ensure that the SPT can adequately fulfil its mandate in future, it is recommended that States parties nominate and elect members with different professional expertise in order to reach the professional pluralism which is needed. Some members of the SPT should therefore possess medical or health expertise in areas of relevance to the OP, experience in policing and/or administration of justice, expertise in human rights, social work, anthropology, and education, experience in monitoring places where persons are deprived of their liberty, and knowledge of as well as expertise in areas related to persons who might be exposed to situations of vulnerability (eg children, persons with disabilities, LGBTI persons, or migrants/asylum seekers). Besides, experts should demonstrate profound understanding of and commitment to the prevention of torture and other ill-treatment, have experience in working with a wide range of stakeholders, show cultural sensitivity and empathy, possess drafting and analytical skills for research, report writing, and editing as well as fluency in at least one UN language.²⁶

23 In addition to the professional qualifications, Article 5 OP requires an equitable geographic distribution, the representation of different forms of civilization and legal systems, as well as a balanced gender representation.²⁷ As with other treaty bodies, no two members may be nationals of the same State, and the members shall be independent and impartial experts serving in their individual capacity. They should also have enough time to ‘serve the Subcommittee on Prevention efficiently’.

3.2.2 Equitable Geographical Distribution

24 As far as geographical distribution is concerned, three of the first ten members²⁸ of the SPT came from Western and Eastern Europe, and four from Latin America. This was not equitable, but it reflected at least to some extent the geographic distribution of the States parties at the time of elections.²⁹ As of November 2017, there are five SPT members belonging to the African region; three experts from the Asia Pacific; seven members from the Eastern European region; four from the Latin American and Caribbean; and six from Western Europe and Others.

25 Twenty-five States parties belong to the African region, whereas five thereof provide members to the SPT. From nine States parties belonging to the Asia-Pacific region, three experts who are citizens of States from this region are elected SPT members. Seven members currently come from the Eastern European region, where nineteen States already ratified the OP. Out of fifteen States from the Latin American and Caribbean regions which ratified the OP, citizens of four States became members of the SPT. Finally, out of nineteen States parties belonging to the group of Western Europe and Others, six countries currently send out members to the SPT. Compared to the number of States parties from the respective regions, the current composition may be considered equitable.

3.2.3 Balanced Gender Representation

26 As only two of the first ten members were women, this cannot have been regarded as gender balanced. With the latest elections that took place on 27 October 2016, however, the SPT consists of thirteen female (52%) and twelve male (48%) experts, which can be seen as a major achievement with regard to gender balance.

3.2.4 Independence and Impartiality

27 With regard to the independence and impartiality of members of the human rights treaty bodies in general, new guidelines were adopted at the twenty-fourth annual meeting of the Chairs of the human rights treaty bodies, held in Addis Ababa from 25 to 29 June 2012 (Addis Ababa Guidelines).³⁰ The general principles of those Guidelines stipulate that treaty body members shall not be considered to have real or perceived conflicts of interest as a consequence of their race, ethnicity, religion, gender, disability, colour, descent, or any other basis for discrimination as defined in the core international human rights treaties.³¹ Moreover, members shall not be removable during their term of office, except to the extent that the respective treaty provides for. They may not be subject to direction or influence of any kind and shall neither seek nor accept instructions from anyone concerning the performance of their duties.³² In addition members shall avoid any action which might give the impression that their own or any given State was receiving treatment which was more favourable or less favourable than that accorded to another State.³³ Applying the general principles mentioned, the Guidelines then specify that independence and impartiality 'is compromised by the political nature of their affiliation with the executive branch of the State' and that treaty bodies' members should therefore 'avoid functions or activities which are, or are seen by a reasonable observer to be, incompatible with the obligations and responsibilities of independent experts' (Guideline D). Furthermore, the Guidelines stipulate that individual holding or assuming decision-making positions in any organization or entity which may give rise to a real or perceived conflict of interest shall 'whenever so required, not undertake any functions or activities that may appear not to be readily reconcilable with the perception of independence and impartiality' (Guideline E). The importance of the independence of members of human rights treaty bodies was further reaffirmed in the GA Resolution 68/268 of 2014 and expanded into Rule 28 of the SPT's RoP.³⁴ The fact that some of the SPT members to date hold Government positions at least does not promote the impression of independence. In addition, it might also be problematic that some of the SPT experts are at the same time members of the NPM in their States.³⁵

Nomination of Subcommittee Members

1. Each State Party may nominate, in accordance with paragraph 2 of the present article, up to two candidates possessing the qualifications and meeting the requirements set out in article 5, and in doing so shall provide detailed information on the qualifications of the nominees.
2. (a) The nominees shall have the nationality of a State Party to the present Protocol;
(b) At least one of the two candidates shall have the nationality of the nominating State Party;
(c) No more than two nationals of a State Party shall be nominated;
(d) Before a State Party nominates a national of another State Party, it shall seek and obtain the consent of that State Party.
3. At least five months before the date of the meeting of the States Parties during which the elections will be held, the Secretary-General of the United Nations shall address a letter to the States Parties inviting them to submit their nominations within three months. The Secretary-General shall submit a list, in alphabetical order, of all persons thus nominated, indicating the States Parties that have nominated them.

1. Introduction

1 The members of the subsidiary body of the CAT Committee (henceforth the SPT) are nominated and elected exclusively by States parties to the OP, rather than by the Committee itself. In establishing such a system, the drafters wished to underline the extent to which the SPT is, in practice, independent from the CAT Committee. The right of States parties to nominate candidates and the procedure of elections at a meeting of States parties are similar to other UN human rights treaties.

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

6 During the first session of the Working Group, held from 19 to 30 October 1992, Article 5 was discussed under the basket of issues called 'Composition and Structure of the Subcommittee'.⁵

7 Regarding Article 5(2), some delegations questioned both the requirement in the text for States parties to nominate three persons and the possibility to nominate non-nationals. It was argued that it may be difficult to find qualified candidates with enough flexibility in their private positions that they may have the time to devote to significant and time-consuming responsibilities. The duty to nominate three persons was considered to be onerous but was not necessarily conducive to the nomination of the most highly qualified persons. Others, however, stated that this technique was highly useful in order to enable the Committee to have the widest possible choice of candidates and qualifications. Some delegates were of the opinion that the facility to nominate non-nationals would help smaller States nominate appropriate candidates. Others found that this would require careful consideration in light of the other articles of the Protocol. They were of the opinion that the members of the body should show a clear connection with the preventive system through their States and that the full implications of the idea to allow for a nomination of non-nationals were not entirely clear.

8 The general assessment that emerged from the debate surrounding paragraph 4 was that the possibility of indefinite re-election should be subject to some appropriate limitation. A number of delegations considered that this was not conducive to renewal and dynamism in the body and felt that a limit on re-election of one additional term was more suitable. One delegate stated that re-election to the CPT was only possible once and that this system should be taken as a model.

9 During the second session of the Working Group from 25 October to 5 November 1993, the issue of nomination was further discussed.⁶ With respect to Article 5(1), the Working Group agreed on the text as contained in the Annex to the second Working Group report. Regarding subparagraph (a), there was a consensus that the number of candidates to be nominated should not be mandatory. With respect to subparagraphs (b) and (c), it was decided to reflect the different views of the delegations by inserting square brackets where appropriate.

10 During the fifth session from 14 to 25 October 1996,⁷ the delegations of Brazil and Cuba and the observer for Nigeria stated that the States parties should only nominate their own nationals as members of the SPT. The representative of Brazil proposed to delete Article 5(1)(b) as it did not favour the idea of investing in the CAT Committee the power of veto over the election of members. With respect to Article 5(1)(c), the delegations of Brazil, Japan, the Philippines, and Nigeria expressed the view that members of the SPT should be elected by States parties. In her subsequent report, the Chairperson of the drafting group stated that the outcome of discussions was the requirement that at least one of two nominees of a State party should be a national of the nominating State.

11 The text of Article 5 of the draft, as agreed upon during the fifth session in October 1996,⁸ featured in subsequent drafts and was adopted without any changes by the Commission on Human Rights in April 2002 as Article 6 OP.⁹

12 The SPT is a subsidiary body of the CAT Committee. Usually, the parent body elects the members of its subsidiary bodies from within its own membership. Since the functions of the SPT are primarily of a preventive nature, while the CAT Committee acts more as a quasi-judicial body, it was never envisaged that some CAT Committee members should, in addition to their functions under CAT, also perform the tasks of the SPT. This would also have been difficult given that the Committee only consists of ten members.

13 But the Revised Costa Rica Draft of 1991, which had proposed for the first time to entrust the task of preventive visits to a Subcommittee of the Committee against Torture, envisaged that the members of the SPT should be elected by the CAT Committee upon nomination by States parties.¹⁰ From the beginning of the discussions in the Working Group, States, for the aforementioned reasons, questioned the election of the SPT members by the CAT Committee. During the fifth session of the Working Group in October 1996, the delegates discussed a text which, in a fairly complicated procedure, had attempted to strike a fair balance which consisted of:¹¹ the nomination of up to three candidates per State party; short listing by the Committee; and election by States parties or, alternatively, by the Committee. During the discussions, the delegations of various States insisted that the SPT shall be elected by States parties and, at the same time, called for the deletion of the short-listing function of the CAT Committee. The agreed text of 1996, which follows the normal nomination and election procedure of human rights treaty bodies,¹² was not changed in any of the later drafts.

14 The right of States parties to nominate up to two candidates follows the model of Article 29(2) CCPR¹³ regardless of the fact that, for tactical reasons, the nomination of two candidates has become a rare practice.¹⁴ So far, none of the States parties to the OP has nominated two candidates at once. For the elections in October 2016, Niger had initially nominated two experts but withdrew one of these nominations again before the elections took place.¹⁵ The same holds true for States parties, with the consent of another State party, to nominate nationals of that other State.¹⁶ According to Article 6(3), the Secretary-General shall invite States parties, at least five months before the elections, to submit their nominations within three months. In practice, States parties usually also accept nominations which were submitted after this deadline.¹⁷ As practice shows, the same holds true for nominations of SPT members.

15 In a note verbale dated 18 July 2006, the Secretary-General invited the States parties to the OP to submit their nominations for the election of the first ten members of the SPT within three months, ie by 18 October 2006. In fact, four candidates who had been nominated after this deadline were also allowed to participate in the elections on 18 December 2006.¹⁸ Altogether, fifteen States parties nominated a total of fifteen candidates, all of whom were nationals of the nominating State.¹⁹

16 In accordance with Article 9 OP, the term of half of the members elected in December 2006 was about to expire at the end of 2008. Thus, in a note verbale of 15 May 2008, the Secretary-General invited the States parties to submit their nominations for the elections of five members of the SPT (replacing those whose terms were due to expire on 31 December 2008) by 14 August 2008.²⁰ Out of seven candidates that had been nominated within this deadline, five had been renominated by the respective States parties.

17 In 2010, five members had to be elected to fill the vacancies of those whose terms of office was about to expire on 31 December 2010. Moreover, in conformity with Article 5(1) OP, fifteen new members were to be elected following the fiftieth ratification, which took place in September 2009. Once more, out of seventeen nominees by 11 August 2010, all five candidates, whose terms were about to expire at the end of 2010 had been

Election of the Subcommittee

1. The members of the Subcommittee on Prevention shall be elected in the following manner:

- (a) Primary consideration shall be given to the fulfilment of the requirements and criteria of article 5 of the present Protocol;
- (b) The initial election shall be held no later than six months after the entry into force of the present Protocol;
- (c) The States Parties shall elect the members of the Subcommittee on Prevention by secret ballot;
- (d) Elections of the members of the Subcommittee on Prevention shall be held at biennial meetings of the States Parties convened by the Secretary-General of the United Nations. At those meetings, for which two thirds of the States Parties shall constitute a quorum, the persons elected to the Subcommittee on Prevention shall be those who obtain the largest number of votes and an absolute majority of the votes of the representatives of the States Parties present and voting.

2. If during the election process two nationals of a State Party have become eligible to serve as members of the Subcommittee on Prevention, the candidate receiving the higher number of votes shall serve as the member of the Subcommittee on Prevention. Where nationals have received the same number of votes, the following procedure applies:

- (a) Where only one has been nominated by the State Party of which he or she is a national, that national shall serve as the member of the Subcommittee on Prevention;
- (b) Where both candidates have been nominated by the State Party of which they are nationals, a separate vote by secret ballot shall be held to determine which national shall become the member;
- (c) Where neither candidate has been nominated by the State Party of which he or she is a national, a separate vote by secret ballot shall be held to determine which candidate shall be the member.

1. Introduction

1 As noted above,¹ the members of the SPT, despite its nature as a subsidiary body of the CAT Committee, are nominated and directly elected by the States parties to the OP without any involvement of its parental body. This was not uncontroversial during the drafting of the OP. However, ultimately the delegates of States prevailed who argued that the usual procedure of nominating and electing UN human rights treaty monitoring bodies should also be followed with regard to the case of the SPT.

Article 11 (former Article 6)

1. The members of the Sub-Committee shall be elected in the following manner:
 - (a) Elections of members of the Sub-Committee shall be held at biennial meetings of States Parties convened by the Secretary-General of the United Nations. At those meetings, for which two thirds of the States Parties shall constitute a quorum, the persons elected to the Sub-Committee shall be those who obtain the largest number of votes and an absolute majority of the votes of the representatives of the States Parties present and voting;
 - (b) The initial election shall be held no later than six months after the date of the entry into force of the present Protocol;
 - (c) The States Parties shall elect the members of the Sub-Committee by secret ballot;
 - (d) In the election of the members of the Sub-Committee, primary consideration shall be given to the fulfillment of the requirements and criteria of article 9. Furthermore, due consideration shall be given to the equitable geographical distribution of membership and to the representation of the different forms of civilization and legal systems of the States Parties.
2. Consideration shall also be given to the balanced representation of women and men on the basis of the principles of equality and non-discrimination.
3. If, during the election process, two nationals of a State Party have become eligible to serve as members of the Sub-Committee, the candidate receiving the higher number of votes shall serve as the member of the Sub-Committee.

those meetings, for which two thirds of the States Parties shall constitute a quorum, the persons elected to the Sub-Committee shall be those who obtain the largest number of votes and an absolute majority of the votes of the representatives of the States Parties present and voting.

2. The initial election shall be held no later than six months after the date of entry into force of the present Protocol.

3. The States Parties shall elect the members of the Sub-Committee by secret ballot.

4. In the election of the members of the Sub-Committee, primary consideration shall be given to the fulfilment of the requirements and criteria of article 5. Furthermore, due consideration shall be given to a proper balance among the various fields of competence referred to in article 5, to equitable geographical distribution of membership and to representation of the different forms of civilization and legal systems of the States Parties.

5. Consideration shall also be given to balanced representation of women and men on the basis of the principles of equality and non-discrimination.

6. If, during the election process, two nationals of a State Party have become eligible to serve as members of the Sub-Committee, the membership of the Sub-Committee shall be resolved in the following manner, in conformity with article 5, paragraph 3:

- (a) The candidate receiving the higher number of votes shall serve as the member of the Sub-Committee;
- (b) Where the nationals have received the same number of votes, the following procedure applies:
 - (i) Where only one has been nominated by the State Party of which he or she is a national, that national shall serve as the member of the Sub-Committee;
 - (ii) Where both nationals have been nominated by the State Party of which they are nationals, a separate vote by secret ballot shall be held to determine which national shall be the member;
 - (iii) Where neither national has been nominated by the State Party of which he or she is a national, a separate vote by secret ballot shall be held to determine which national shall be the member.

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

9 During the first session of the Working Group, held from 19 to 30 October 1992, the election procedures were discussed under the basket of issues called 'Composition and Structure of the Subcommittee'.⁹ During the discussions, some delegations considered that the proposed model of election was a desirable approach, as it gave States parties the right to nominate candidates while leaving the CAT Committee the power to make the final selection from the list of qualified candidates. It was argued that an indirect election would be most conducive to the essential attributes of impartiality, independence, and objectivity.¹⁰ Other delegations took the view that a direct election by States parties was more in line with other precedents, including that of the ECPT. In addition, the point was made that the CAT Committee is composed of persons acting in their personal capacity and that electoral responsibilities would subject them to undue political influence. It was also argued that a direct election could best ensure the recognition of important factors, including equitable geographical distribution, which might not be given adequate weight by the CAT Committee. It would also serve to bolster the prestige and credibility of the members in their dealings with representatives of national administrations. One delegate stressed that the key point was a system of election that would best promote such matters as competence, regional and other balance in representation, and thus enhance the State confidence in the integrity of the system.¹¹

10 During the second session of the Working Group from 25 October to 5 November 1993, the electoral issues under Article 5 were further discussed.¹² With respect to subparagraphs (b) and (c), it was decided to reflect the different views of the delegations by inserting square brackets where appropriate. Several delegations were in favour of States parties to the Protocol directly electing members of the envisaged body. Other delegations proposed that the members of the SPT shall be elected by the CAT Committee, as this would depoliticize the election and guarantee the essential attributes of impartiality, independence, and objectivity. Moreover, some delegations asked for clarification of the possible voting procedures (ie, secret ballot, roll-call, etc). In regard to subparagraph (c), one delegation suggested inserting, after the word 'ballot', the words 'taking due account of the principle of equitable geographical distribution'. Referring to Article 17(3), (4) and (6) CAT, the Working Group agreed on the texts for Article 5(1), (2), (3), (4) and (5).

11 During the fifth session from 14 to 25 October 1996, several delegations made general comments on Article 5. The representative of China stated that the method of election of the proposed body should adhere to the general procedures followed by other human rights bodies. The representative felt that it was not appropriate for the CAT Committee to be involved in the composition of the SPT.¹³

12 In the following drafts, including the proposal presented by the Chairperson-Rapporteur of 22 January 2002, the election of its members followed the procedures contained in other UN human rights instruments very closely.

3. Issues of Interpretation

13 The election procedure, by and large, follows the procedures contained in Article 17 CAT¹⁴ and in other human rights treaties.¹⁵ According to Article 7(1)(a) OP, primary consideration shall be given to the fulfilment of the requirements and criteria for an ideal composition of the SPT set out in Article 5 OP,¹⁶ namely gender balance, equitable geographic distribution, the representation of different forms of civilization and legal systems, a good mix of different professional backgrounds, and the individual qualification of the candidates as independent and impartial experts of high moral character with enough free time to serve the SPT efficiently. Since elections are held by *secret ballot*¹⁷ it is, however, difficult to ensure that all these criteria are in fact complied with. As the composition of the SPT during its initial phase showed, at least gender balance as well as equitable geographic and cultural distribution had not been achieved then. However, strong efforts were taken in this direction during recent years, and after the elections of 27 October 2016, thirteen out of twenty-five present SPT members are female and the geographical distribution of members seems to be quite balanced.

14 According to Article 7(1)(b) OP, the initial election had to be conducted no later than six months after the entry into force of the Protocol, ie no later than 22 December 2006. In fact, the first elections took place at the UN Office in Geneva on 18 December 2006.¹⁸

15 According to Article 7(1)(d) OP, elections shall be held at biennial meetings of States parties in Geneva. The presence of delegates from two-thirds of all States parties constitutes the required quorum, otherwise elections cannot take place.

16 From all the candidates nominated, those who obtain the largest number of votes and an absolute majority of the votes of the representatives of the States parties present and voting are elected. Each State party may vote for as many candidates as there are seats to be filled. If more than twenty-five candidates receive an absolute majority, only those who receive the largest number of votes are elected. If fewer than twenty-five candidates receive an absolute majority, additional balloting is required.¹⁹ If it should ever happen that two nationals of a State party receive an absolute majority, Article 7(2) provides, in a detailed manner, how this situation should be solved. It seems a little odd that this question has received so much attention in the text of Article 7 OP, whereas other more important questions such as how draws shall be resolved and whether abstentions shall be considered as voting or non-voting, were left open. Unfortunately, the RoP of States parties to the OP do not further elaborate on these issues.²⁰

²⁰ The final version of the RoP of States parties to the OP was made public on 22 February 2013 (CAT/OP/3). For various issues of interpretation in connection with elections see above Art 17 CAT, and Manfred Nowak, UN Covenant on Civil and Political Rights: CCPR Commentary (2nd rev edn, NP Engel 2005) 678.

17 On 18 December 2006, the election of the first ten members of the SPT took place at the UN Office in Geneva. Exactly ten of the fourteen candidates received the required absolute majority at the first ballot, whereas the remaining four candidates missed this requirement. Consequently, these ten candidates were elected and no further ballot was required. The States parties decided that the SPT would assume office on 1 January 2007. It was further decided by lot that Ms Casale, Mr Coriolano, Mr Hájek, Mr Lasocik, and Mr Rodriguez Rescia would serve for a term of two years (until 31 December 2008). The four-year terms of the other members were about to expire on 31 December 2010.²¹

18 At the third meeting of States parties on 28 October 2010, five members were to be elected to fill the vacancies of those members whose terms of office were about to expire on 31 December 2010. In addition, fifteen new members were to be elected in conformity with Article 5(1) OP, following the fiftieth ratification, which took place in September 2009. The OP itself does not stipulate any special election procedure for the election of the additional fifteen members. Accordingly, the regular provisions (Articles 5 to 9 OP) were applied and the election of the fifteen additional members coincided with the regular biennial elections to fill the vacancies of those experts whose mandates were about to expire at the end of 2010. Hence, the third meeting of States parties began first with the regular biannual election of the five members who were about to fill the upcoming vacancies; then it followed a second round of elections in order to elect the fifteen additional members. Pursuant to Article 9 OP,²² the five members elected at the first round were elected for a term of four years. The election of the additional fifteen members followed the manner in which the first ten members of the SPT were elected in 2006, also with regard to their terms of office. This was found to ensure the requirements set out in Article 7(1)(d) OP.

19 Thirty-one candidates had been nominated and accepted by the States parties. At the first ballot, none of the candidates had obtained an absolute majority. Thus, a second ballot became necessary. The voting was restricted to the candidates who had obtained the largest number of votes in the previous ballot, with the number of candidatures being limited to not more than twice the number of places remaining to be filled.²³ The ten candidates who had obtained the largest number of votes in the first ballot were: Ms Definis-Gojanovic (16 votes), Mr Ginés Santidrián (21 votes), Mr Lam Shang Leen (11 votes), Ms Muhammad (14 votes), Mr Obrecht (13 votes), Mr Petersen (17 votes), Mr Pross (18 votes), Mr Sarre Iguiniz (17 votes), Mr Taylor Souto (19 votes), and Mr Villavicencio Terreros (12 votes).²⁴ Having obtained the required majority at the second ballot, Mr Ginés Santidrián, Mr Obrecht, Mr Peterson, and Mr Taylor Souto were elected members of the SPT for a term of four years (until 31 December 2014). Since the number of candidates who had obtained the required majority was less than the number of members to be elected, a third ballot was to be held to fill the last remaining vacancy. The voting had been restricted to the two candidates²⁵ who had obtained the largest number of votes in the previous ballot.²⁶ With regard to the vote for the fifth replacement member of the SPT, fifty-six representatives of States parties to the OP had voted and fifty-three valid ballot papers had been counted. The representative of Mexico, supported by the representative of Germany, found that the phrase ‘representatives present and voting’ in Rules 11 and 12 of the provisional RoP²⁷ meant representatives who had cast valid votes. Thus, he thought that Mr Sarre Iguíniz, having obtained twenty-eight votes, should have been elected member of the SPT. Although the present Senior Legal Adviser to the UN Office at Geneva stated that the secretariat did not share this interpretation, the (majority of) the representatives of States parties had wished to proceed in this manner. Thus, Mr Sarre Iguíniz had been elected the fifth replacement member of the SPT.²⁸ Despite this, the representatives of States parties agreed that the standard procedure should be applied again in forthcoming rounds.²⁹ In our opinion, the chosen approach did not correspond to the meaning of Article 7(1)(d) OP, as the term ‘present and voting’ clearly does not postulate valid, but cast votes.

20 Given that Article 6(1) and (2) OP encourages States parties to nominate up to two candidates, including one national of another State party, the election procedure outlined in Article 7(2) OP seems a little complicated, yet this provision will hardly ever be applied in practice.

Filling of Vacancies

If a member of the Subcommittee on Prevention dies or resigns, or for any cause can no longer perform his or her duties, the State Party that nominated the member shall nominate another eligible person possessing the qualifications and meeting the requirements set out in article 5, taking into account the need for a proper balance among the various fields of competence, to serve until the next meeting of the States Parties, subject to the approval of the majority of the States Parties. The approval shall be considered given unless half or more of the States Parties respond negatively within six weeks after having been informed by the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the proposed appointment.

1. Introduction

1 The procedure of filling vacancies following the death, resignation or incapacity of SPT members is based to a large extent on Article 17(6) CAT. This procedure, which differs from Article 34 CCPR, has the disadvantage of giving a certain State party an almost exclusive right to have a national of its choice on the SPT.

The approval shall be considered given unless half or more of the States Parties respond negatively within six weeks after having been informed by the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the proposed appointment.

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

4 During the first four sessions of the Working Group, the issue of how to deal with vacant seats within the SPT was not discussed separately.

5 In the course of the fifth session from 14 to 25 October 1996, the Chairperson of the drafting group presented the considerations on the relevant articles and referred to the outcome of the second reading.³ With respect to the new Article 7, the Chairperson stated that the agreed text had been adopted by the drafting group to be presented to the plenary meeting, despite the different views among some delegations. She explained that they would have preferred to establish a more transparent method of replacing a member of the Sub-Committee who could no longer perform his or her duties before expiry of the term, but that all delegations had finally agreed on the text of Article 7 as contained in Annex I.⁴

6 The proposal presented by the Chairperson-Rapporteur, in January 2002, is almost identical with the 1999 draft and follows very closely the procedures contained in other UN human rights instruments.

7 At its fiftieth meeting on 22 April 2002, the Commission on Human Rights finally adopted the text of the OP submitted by the Chairperson-Rapporteur at the tenth session of the Working Group by twenty-nine votes to ten.⁵

3. Issues of Interpretation

8 Since Article 8 OP largely follows the procedure for the filling of vacancies of the CAT Committee, reference shall be made to the issues discussed in relation to Article 17(6) CAT.⁶ Vacancies may arise if a member of the SPT dies or resigns or can no longer perform his or her duties for any other cause. The term ‘any other cause’ relates to the personal circumstances of a SPT member to be replaced,⁷ eg if a member is seriously ill or refrains from participating in the SPT’s sessions without any proper excuse. There are, however, a few differences in the wording of the articles designed to avoid the situation whereby States have the right simply to appoint one of their own nationals. First, the word ‘appoint’ in Article 17(6) CAT was replaced by ‘nominate’. Second, the nominated candidate must possess the respective qualifications and meet the requirements set out in Article 5 OP, ie independence, impartiality, availability, morality, and a relevant professional experience. Third, States parties shall take into account the ‘need for a proper balance among the various fields of competence’. If, for example, the variety of professions represented was not satisfactory before the resignation of a member, the State party shall take this factor into consideration. For instance, a State party should obviously not nominate another prison manager, if there is a lack of medical experts on the SPT. Finally, the person nominated to fill a vacancy shall not serve for the remainder of the term of his or her predecessor, but only until the next meeting of the States parties. If a member resigns during the first year after his or her election, the successor shall only fill this vacancy until the next biennial meeting of States parties, rather than for the remaining three years, as provided for by Article 17(6) CAT. These changes to the OP definitely improve the method of filling vacancies.

9 Thus far the procedure stipulated in Article 8 OP and specified in Rule 8 has only been applied four times. Due to the fact that Ms Casale (UK) and Mr Torres Boursault (Spain), two of the original ten experts who had been elected members of the SPT, had resigned in 2009, Mr Evans (UK) and Mr Ginés Santidrián (Spain) were appointed in order to fill the vacancies in mid-2009.⁸ After Mr Pross (Germany) and Mr Obrecht (France), who had been elected members of the SPT since 2010, had laid down their duties under the OP, Ms Osterfeld (Germany) and Ms Paulet (France) succeeded to the places vacated in January 2014.

10 All four experts that followed those who had resigned from their duties under the OP earlier had later become elected members of the SPT following the elections that took place past their respective appointments (in autumn 2010, 2012, 2014, and 2016).⁹

11 By referring to Article 5, Article 8 again stipulates the need for a proper balance among the various fields of competence. So far, all outgoing experts had been replaced by

⁹ See Secretary-General, ‘Fourth Meeting of the States Parties—Summary Record of the 4th Meeting’ (2010) UN Doc CAT/OP/SP/SR.4, para 17; Secretary-General, ‘Fourth Meeting of the States Parties—Summary Record of the 1st Meeting’ (2012) UN Doc CAT/OP/SP/4/SR.1, para 16; Secretary-General, ‘Fifth Meeting of the States Parties—Summary Record of the 1st Meeting’ (2014) UN Doc CAT/OP/SP/5/SR.1, para 18; Secretary-General, ‘Sixth Meeting of the States Parties—Summary Record of the 1st Meeting’ (2016) UN Doc CAT/OP/SP/6/SR.1, para 19.

experts who more or less show the same professional backgrounds as their predecessors.¹⁰ Thus, the opportunity to increase the non-legal expertise among SPT members was missed also with regard to the filling of vacancies following the procedure set out in Article 8 of the OP.¹¹

KERSTIN BUCHINGER

¹⁰ Mr Torres Boursault and Ms Casale have a legal background and had been members of the CPT. Mr Ginés Santidrián and Mr Evans, their successors, are both legal experts with a particular focus on the prevention of torture. Mr Pross is a medical doctor and psychotherapist specialized in psychotraumatology; Ms Osterfeld is a psychiatrist and psychotherapist as well as a member of the German National Agency for the Prevention of Torture (NPM). Mr Obrecht and Ms Paulet also have an established medical background, Ms Paulet also having been member of the CPT since 1999.

1. Introduction

1 Article 9 OP is a standard provision in UN human rights treaties providing for a four-year term of office and the principle of partial renewal with 'staggering' elections every two years. However, for the first time in a human rights treaty, Article 9 OP restricts the re-election of members to once only. This restriction of the possibility for a continuing membership of some members of the SPT for more than two terms served as a model for later treaties, such as the CED and CRDP.

first election the names of these members shall be chosen by lot by the Chairman of the meeting referred to in Article 7, paragraph 1.

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

8 During the first session of the Working Group, held from 19 to 30 October 1992, the election procedures and related issues were discussed under Article 5 and within the basket of issues called 'Composition and structure of the Subcommittee'.⁷

9 With regard to Article 5(4) of the Costa Rica Draft of 1991, the general sense of the debate concerned the notion that the possibility of indefinite re-election should be subject to some appropriate limitation. A number of delegations considered that the given concept of re-election was not conducive to renewal and dynamism in the body and that a limit on re-election for one additional term was more suitable. In addition, differences existed regarding the eligibility for re-election for more than one term. Moreover, it was further indicated that re-election to the CPT was only possible once.⁸

10 Concerning Article 6(1), one delegation indicated that the proposed procedures for 'staggering' elections (to have half the members' terms expiring at different times) might have some unintended consequences due to the operation of Articles 4(1), 5(3) and (6). Furthermore, several speakers felt that the transitional arrangements for entry into force would give rise to technical concerns about the periodicity of elections.

11 During its second session from 25 October to 5 November 1993, the Working Group agreed on the text for Article 5(4).⁹ With regard to Article 6 and the issue of re-election, however, no consensus could be reached in the course of the second session. Some delegations, again, considered that a limit on re-election to one additional term was more suitable, while other representatives supported two re-elections in order to ensure continuity, which would also take into account the experience of the CPT.¹⁰

12 In the sixth session, held from 13 to 24 October 1997, the delegates continued to discuss Article 6.¹¹ The representative of Cuba expressed the view that Article 6 should not specify the number of times that a member of the SPT would be eligible for re-election, arguing that such limitations were not laid out in other conventions. Therefore, the words 'once' and 'twice' in brackets should be deleted. This proposal was supported by the representative of the Netherlands. The delegation of the Dominican Republic also supported the delegation of Cuba, but suggested that a re-elected member might be allowed to stand for re-election again after a certain period of time. In contrast, the delegations of Brazil and Canada and the observers for Australia, Sweden, Switzerland, and the APT preferred to limit the possibility for re-election of experts to once. The observer for the APT stated that States parties to other conventions regretted the absence of limitations with regard to the number of times that a committee member could serve. At the reconvening of the second plenary meeting on 13 October 1997, the Chairperson-Rapporteur of the drafting group reported that the drafting group had decided that members of the SPT 'shall be eligible for re-election once if renominated', as it was felt that this would ensure a balance between continuity and the need for diversity. Consequently, Article 6 was adopted and renumbered as Article 9.¹² Moreover, later drafts repeated the agreement reached in 1997.

3. Issues of Interpretation

13 Article 9 OP covers three different issues: the term of office, the question of re-election and the principle of partial renewal. The term of office of members of the SPT is four years, which is in line with the term of office of the Committee against Torture and other UN human rights treaty monitoring bodies.¹³ Similarly, all relevant treaties provide for the system of partial renewal.¹⁴ This means a system of 'staggering' elections: after the first election, the Chairperson of the meeting of States parties shall choose by lot those five members whose term of office shall expire after two years. At the next elections, these five members may be re-elected, if again nominated by their respective State party. On 18 December 2006, the following five newly elected members of the SPT were chosen by lot: Ms Casale, Mr Coriolano, Mr Hájek, Mr Lasocik, and Mr Rodriguez Rescia.¹⁵ Their first term of office ended at 31 December 2008. All of these experts, however, had been re-elected for a period of four years (until 31 December 2012) at the elections held during the second meeting of States parties on 30 October 2008.

14 As for the additional fifteen members of the SPT that had to be elected in 2010 to bring the total number of members to twenty-five, it was decided to follow the manner in which the original ten members were first elected, also with regard to their terms of office. Thus (and as fifteen is not divisible by two), seven of the additional fifteen members were about to be selected by the drawing of lots to serve a two-year term of office.¹⁶

15 Both Costa Rica Drafts had provided for the possibility of unrestricted renomination and re-election. During the discussions in the Working Group, many delegations felt that there should be some appropriate limitation, as the concept of unlimited re-election was not conducive to renewal and dynamism. The text reflecting the outcome of the first reading in 1996 provided that re-election should only be possible once or twice.¹⁷ In October 1997, an interesting debate took place in the Working Group:¹⁸ while Cuba, the Netherlands, and the Dominican Republic pleaded for unlimited re-election, the delegations of Brazil, Canada, Australia, Sweden, and Switzerland, as well as NGOs, such as APT, argued in favour of only one possibility of re-election. Unfortunately, the latter view prevailed, and even the compromise of two re-elections, as also laid down in the Second Protocol to the ECPT, has not been further pursued.

16 In some of the older human rights treaties, the question of re-election is not addressed at all, which means that, in the absence of any restriction, members can be re-elected without limitation.¹⁹ Most of the other human rights treaties, including the CAT, provide explicitly for the possibility of (unlimited) re-election.²⁰ However, some of the recently adopted treaties, such as the Convention on Enforced Disappearance and the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, limit the possibility of re-election to once.²¹ Article 9 OP was the first provision in an UN human rights treaty to this effect.

17 In this respect, it is interesting to look at the experience of the CPT. Article 5(3) ECPT, which was adopted in 1987 and entered into force in 1989, provides that the members of the CPT 'may only be re-elected once'. This provision caused a variety of problems to the professionalism and continuity of the work of the CPT in its early stages of developing its methods of work, including the methodology of country missions, such that, in 1993, a Second Protocol was adopted which amended Article 5(3) and allows for two re-elections. This Protocol entered into force on 1 March 2002.

18 It is doubtful whether the decision to limit the possibility of re-election was a wise one. The experience of the Human Rights Committee and the respective renewal and re-election of its members shows a good balance between the principles of continuity and dynamism. While many members were never re-elected or only re-elected once, some members served for almost twenty years.²² It is up to the States parties to decide whether they wish to renominate a particular expert and whether this person is in fact elected. If an expert provides an excellent contribution to the respective treaty body and all stakeholders involved are in favour of another re-election, it is regrettable if this cannot be achieved because of a restrictive provision in the respective treaty. The 'institutional memory' of some experts is indeed highly valuable in order to avoid certain un-reflected changes in the practice of treaty bodies. This certainly also applies to the methodology of country missions to be developed by the SPT. As the experience of the CPT clearly shows, a certain continuity of members would be highly welcome. In fact, a combination of rotation and continuity of specially qualified experts has to be found in order to achieve the best results as regards the object and purpose of the treaty.

19 The question remains, then, whether the principle of only one re-election also applies to those experts whose first term of office had been reduced by lot to two years. Strictly speaking, they may be re-elected only once, which means that their maximum term of office would be six (instead of eight) years. In light of the object and purpose of the treaty and a certain need for continuity, one might also argue that this limitation does not apply to these particular members, as their right to two terms of office, if renominated and re-elected, would have been diminished arbitrarily. In our opinion, these experts may be re-elected twice, i.e. for a maximum of ten years. In practice, this has never happened.

20 An interesting case is shown by the example of one the SPT members: Ms Definis-Gojanović (Croatia) had been one of the ten original experts of the SPT having been elected for a period of four years (ie, until 31 December 2010). On 28 October 2010, she had been re-elected, and it was decided by lot that she would now only serve for a term of two years (until 31 December 2012).²³ In our opinion, the limitation of her term of office after re-election to two years violated the clear wording of Article 9 OP, as only those members who have been elected at the first election may be chosen by lot to serve for a period of two years.

1. Introduction

1 Article 10 OP is modelled on Article 18 CAT, which itself is based on Articles 35 to 39 CCPR.¹ It requires the SPT, as the CAT Committee, to elect its officers, ie one chairperson, three (originally two) vice-chairpersons, and one rapporteur, for a term of two years, and to establish its own rules of procedure which shall provide that, at the beginning, six (now fourteen) members shall constitute a quorum² and that decisions shall be made by a majority vote of the members present. Although the SPT, as with the CAT Committee, is free to decide the number of its annual sessions, both bodies must hold one at the same time, and all meetings shall be confidential.

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

7 During the first session of the Working Group, held from 19 to 30 October 1992, the then Article 7 of the revised Costa Rica Draft was discussed within the third basket of issues, 'Composition and structure of the Subcommittee'.⁸ Concerning Article 7(1), the capacity to convoke special sessions of the body at the request of only one third of the members was questioned by certain delegations. They considered that this had both financial and other implications and that it would be preferable to have a majority of the members make such a determination. With regard to paragraph 2, some delegations considered that a majority of the SPT should constitute a quorum rather than one half the members. Regarding paragraph 4, one representative inquired whether this provision regarding the staff and the facilities required to service the needs of the body would be more logically placed with the other articles dealing with financial matters. The Representative of the Secretary-General indicated that the substance of this paragraph was a standard provision which should be retained, but that the location of the provision was not a significant issue.

8 In the course of its second session from 25 October to 5 November 1993, the Working Group continued to consider Article 7.⁹ After an extensive debate, the Working Group decided to redraft this Article on the basis of Article 18 CAT and a text that had been additionally proposed by certain delegations. The Working Group then agreed on the text. As to paragraph 1, there was consensus that the new wording should follow paragraph 1 of Article 18 CAT. One delegation proposed to add the word 'once' at the end of the second sentence of this paragraph. Concerning paragraph 3, there was consensus that the wording of the paragraph should follow Article 18(4) CAT. Some delegations, however, felt that a minimum number of regular sessions per year should be stated in order to guarantee sufficient funding. In order to meet this purpose, it was agreed to add the following wording at the end of the second sentence: 'but it shall meet for a regular session at least twice a year.' With regard to paragraph 4, there was consensus that the wording should follow Article 18(3) CAT, although one delegation felt that the reference to the CAT Committee should be deleted. Thus, the Working Group decided to put the reference in square brackets.

9 At the sixth session, held from 13 to 24 October 1997, a general discussion of Article 7 was reopened.¹⁰ The observer for Sweden expressed the view that the rules of procedure referred to in paragraph 2 should apply also to the missions of the SPT. It was suggested to add a subparagraph, stating that the rules of procedure shall also be applied, mutatis mutandis, to delegations of the SPT on missions. Although the Working Group decided not to include the Swedish proposal in the text of the Article, it was recommended that the SPT should be advised to take the proposal into account in drafting its rules of procedure. The representative of China found that the words 'the Committee against Torture and' in brackets should be deleted from Article 7(4). The Chairperson of the drafting group reported that it had been decided that the contents of the brackets in paragraphs 1, 3, and 4 should be deleted. Paragraph 2 would remain as it stood. Regarding paragraph 4, the relationship between the CAT Committee and the SPT had not yet been completely agreed upon and a review of the paragraph might become necessary at a later stage in order to ensure consistency.¹¹ Consequently, Article 7 (then Article 10) was adopted on 13 October 1997.¹² On 14 October 1997, the Working Group decided to delete paragraph 4 as it was felt to be redundant, especially since Article 16(2) referred to the same issue.¹³ This version was retained in all later drafts. In the final proposal, the Chairperson-Rapporteur added a sentence to the effect that the CAT Committee and the SPT shall hold at least one annual session simultaneously.¹⁴

3. Issues of Interpretation

10 While the revised Costa Rica Draft of 1991 had provided for two regular annual sessions and special sessions at the request of one-third of the SPT's members, as well as for a quorum of half of the members,¹⁵ the Working Group agreed that Article 10 OP shall be based, as far as possible, on Article 18 CAT.¹⁶ Literally, Article 10(1) corresponds to Article 18(1) CAT.

3.1 The Bureau of the SPT

11 The SPT shall elect its officers, who may be re-elected, for a term of two years. Ms Casale was elected as first Chairperson in February 2007, Mr Petersen and Mr Rodriguez-Rescia served as the two first Vice-Chairpersons. From February 2009 to February 2011, Mr Rodriguez-Rescia was elected Chairperson, and Mr Coriolano and Mr Petersen acted as Vice-Chairpersons. In view of the (then) forthcoming expansion, the SPT decided at its twelfth session to expand the bureau to five members at its thirteenth session.¹⁷ Thus, the bureau, which was elected in February 2011, comprised Mr Evans as Chairperson and Mr *Coriolano*¹⁸, Mr Hajek, Ms Jabbour, and Ms Muhammad as Vice-Chairpersons.¹⁹ It was agreed that each of the bureau members should also have distinct responsibilities in order to reach a high level of effectiveness and efficiency within the enlarged SPT.²⁰ At its nineteenth session, the SPT elected its bureau for the period until February 2015. Mr Evans was re-elected as Chairperson. The four elected Vice-Chairpersons and their areas of primary responsibilities were Ms Jabbour (NPMs), Ms Muhammad (jurisprudence), Mr Taylor Souto (SPT visits), and Mr Zongo (external relations). Again, Ms Muhammad served as the SPT's Rapporteur.²¹ A partly new composition of the bureau arose from the elections held at the twenty-fifth session of the SPT. While Mr Evans continues to be Chairperson and Ms Mohammad is still SPT Rapporteur responsible for matters relating to jurisprudence, the three other Vice-Chairpersons and their primary responsibilities to date are Mr Font (SPT visits), Ms Jabbour (external relations), and Mr Lam Shang Leen (NPMs).²²

3.2 The Conduct of Business

12 Article 10(2) OP corresponds almost literally to Article 18(2) CAT. The SPT, as the CAT Committee, is free to establish its own RoP, with only a few general rules that have to be contained therein. As in Article 18(2)(a) CAT, the quorum shall be half the members plus one. When the SPT was first set up and comprised ten members, six members constituted a quorum. As the number of SPT members was soon to be increased from ten to twenty-five according to Article 5(1) OP, the SPT decided that fourteen (instead of only thirteen) members shall constitute a quorum.²³ Decisions of the SPT shall be made by a majority vote of the members present. If only fourteen members are present, at least eight members must vote in favour.

3.3 Meetings in camera

13 While Rule 31 of the RoP of the CAT Committee provides that all meetings of the CAT Committee shall be held in public, unless decided or required otherwise, Article 10(2)(c) OP stipulates that the SPT shall meet in camera. This strict requirement of confidentiality was already contained in Article 7(2) of the revised Costa Rica Draft of 1991 and is based on Article 6(1) ECPT. It results from the highly confidential and sensitive nature of country missions,²⁴ which constitute the main task of the SPT. Nevertheless, it might have been useful to allow the SPT also to hold public meetings when it discusses general issues, such as its methodology of conducting preventive visits to places of detention or general conclusions based on its experience in the field. Moreover, the SPT shall, in accordance with Article 16(3) OP, present a public report on its activities to the CAT Committee. It might be useful to discuss this report at a joint public session of the CAT Committee, ie with the members of the SPT present at a public session of the CAT Committee in accordance with Article 10(3) OP (last sentence) and Rule 31 of the CAT Committee's RoP. Finally, the CAT Committee, pursuant to Article 16(4) OP, is authorized to make a public statement or to publish a country-specific mission report of the SPT if the State party concerned refuses to cooperate or to take steps to improve the situation in the light of the Subcommittee's recommendations.²⁵

3.4 The Rules of Procedure

14 For quite some time the SPT decided to keep its RoP as one of its 'key internal working documents'.²⁶ It was only in 2010 that the SPT decided to make them public, stating that—while fully respecting the principle of confidentiality embodied in Article 2(3) OP—it did not consider either its activities or the approaches that it takes to its work to be confidential as such.²⁷ Consequently, the RoP were published on 5 January 2011.²⁸ They have been revised and newly adopted at the SPT's eighteenth session (from 12 to 16 November 2012).²⁹

15 The RoP, consisting of thirty-four Rules, are composed of four parts. Part one (General Rules) (Rules 1 to 29) elaborates on the sessions of the SPT, its members, bureau, secretariat, communications, languages, confidentiality, the documents of the SPT, its conduct of business, and the co-operation with UN organs and mechanisms as well as other international, regional, and national institutions or organizations. Part two (Rule 30) relates to the NPMs, Part three (Rule 31) to interpretation. Part four (Rules 32 to 34) addresses the issues of suspension, amendment, and additions.

3.5 Sessions of the SPT

16 Article 10(3) OP is based on Article 18(4) CAT. After the initial meeting is convened by the UN Secretary-General, the SPT is itself responsible for deciding the number and dates of its meetings, subject of course to its financial resources and the availability of UN conference services, and to convene its meetings accordingly. The first session of the SPT was held at the OHCHR (Palais Wilson) in Geneva from 19 to 23 February 2007.³⁰ It decided to hold three annual sessions in Geneva. These regular sessions, each lasting one week, are held in February, June, and November each year. According to Rule 1(4), special sessions shall be held in addition to regular sessions at dates agreed by the SPT in consultation with its Secretariat.

17 The last sentence of Article 10(3) OP was not contained in any of the various drafts submitted to the Working Group, but was added only in the final proposal of the Chairperson-Rapporteur of 17 January 2002.³¹ It provides that, at least once a year, the CAT Committee and the SPT shall hold their sessions simultaneously. This does not mean that the entire session must be held jointly by both bodies. It only requires both bodies to find suitable common dates for at least one session per year in order to enable them to meet jointly and/or to hold informal meetings together. When deciding on the dates of its sessions, the SPT takes into account that these dates coincide with those of the CAT Committee. In practice, the joint meetings are held in the course of each year's November session. For these joint meetings, the RoP of the CAT Committee as the parent body shall apply. Since Rule 31 of the CAT Committee's RoP contains the principle of public meetings, such joint meetings shall be held in public unless the CAT Committee decides otherwise. It has proven to be useful to hold joint public sessions on general issues, such as the methodology of country missions or general conclusions based on the experience of country missions. Thus, the simultaneous meetings are used to discuss a range of issues of mutual concern (both substantive and procedural), such as the concept of torture and other forms of ill-treatment; the SPT's strategic focus, the methodology of information sharing between the two bodies, etc.³²

18 The revised Costa Rica Draft also contained provisions requiring the UN Secretary-General to provide the necessary staff and facilities for the effective performance of both the CAT Committee's and the SPT's functions under this Protocol. In fact, the funding of the SPT, including its staff and facilities, out of the regular UN budget is included in Article 25. In addition, Article 26 provides for a Special Fund financed through voluntary contributions.³³

MANDATE OF THE SUBCOMMITTEE ON PREVENTION

Article 11

Mandate of the Subcommittee

The Subcommittee on Prevention shall:

- (a) Visit the places referred to in article 4 and make recommendations to States Parties concerning the protection of persons deprived of their liberty against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;
- (b) In regard to the national preventive mechanisms:
 - (i) Advise and assist States Parties, when necessary, in their establishment;
 - (ii) Maintain direct, and if necessary confidential, contact with the national preventive mechanisms and offer them training and technical assistance with a view to strengthening their capacities;
 - (iii) Advise and assist them in the evaluation of the needs and the means necessary to strengthen the protection of persons deprived of their liberty against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;
 - (iv) Make recommendations and observations to the States Parties with a view to strengthening the capacity and the mandate of the national preventive mechanisms for the prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;
- (c) Cooperate, for the prevention of torture in general, with the relevant United Nations organs and mechanisms as well as with the international, regional and national institutions or organizations working towards the strengthening of the protection of all persons against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

1. Introduction

1 Article 11 OP defines the core preventive mandate of the SPT as follows:

- Conducting country missions and preventive visits to places of detention.
- Advising and assisting States parties and NPMs.

- Cooperating with relevant international, regional, and national organizations and institutions in the field of torture prevention.

2 While the first ‘operational’ function of the SPT, ie monitoring places of detention in order to issue recommendations with regard to an improvement of systems of deprivation of liberty, was introduced to the drafting process by the Costa Rica Draft and is based on the respective competence of the CPT, the second ‘advisory’ function was introduced by the Mexican Draft in 2001.¹ The SPT’s advisory role in respect of NPMs is another key element of its mandate. In practice, the SPT first tended to make references to the establishment and/or effective functioning of NPMs in its visit reports published after regular country missions. In 2011, however, it decided to conduct special ‘NPM advisory visits’ in order to be able to fulfil its mandate under Article 11(b) OP in a more adequate manner.² Although funds for implementation may be made available through the Special Fund set up in accordance with Article 26 OP, the question of funding with regard to the SPT’s advisory function has remained an issue of major concern. The task of cooperating with other relevant international, regional, and national bodies, particularly with the CPT and similar regional mechanisms, can be found in most drafts. It aims at encouraging cooperative efforts between a wide range of actors in the field of torture prevention in order to achieve the most effective outcomes as well as integrated and consistent preventive strategies.³ The competences of the SPT and the corresponding obligations of States parties in relation to country missions are further defined in Articles 12 to 16 OP, while the respective provisions for NPMs are set out in Articles 17 to 23 OP.

2.1 Chronology of Draft Texts

3 *Original Costa Rica Draft (6 March 1980)*⁴

Article 8

1. The Committee shall be responsible for arranging visits to places of detention subject to the jurisdiction of the States Parties to the present Convention.
2. The Committee shall establish a programme of regular visits to each of the said States Parties and shall arrange such further visits as may appear necessary from time to time.

4 *Revised Costa Rica Draft (15 January 1991)*⁵

Article 8

1. The Subcommittee shall establish a programme of regular missions to each of the State Parties. Apart from regular missions, it shall also undertake such other missions as appear to it to be required in the circumstances.

⁵ Letter dated 15 January 1991 from the Permanent Representative of Costa Rica to the United Nations at Geneva addressed to the Under-Secretary-General for Human Rights (1991) UN Doc E/CN.4/1991/66.

2. The Subcommittee shall postpone any such mission of the State Party concerned has agreed to a visit to its territory by the Committee against Torture pursuant to Article 20 paragraph 3 of the Convention.

Article 9

1. If, on the basis of a regional convention, a system of visits to places of detention similar to the one of the present Protocol is in force for a State Party, the Subcommittee shall only in exceptional cases, when required by important circumstances, send its own mission to such a State Party. It may, however, consult with the organs established under such regional conventions with a view to coordinating activities including the possibility of having one of its members participate in missions carried out under the regional conventions as an observer. Such an observer shall report to the Subcommittee. This report shall be strictly confidential and shall not be made public.

2. The present Protocol does not affect the provisions of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of victims of war and their Additional Protocols of 8 June 1977 by which the Protecting Powers and the International Committee of the Red Cross visit places of detention, or the right of any State Party to authorize the International Committee to visit places of detention in situations not covered by international humanitarian law.

Article 8

The Sub-Committee shall [undertake missions] [establish a programme of missions] to States Parties [based on the criteria capable of guaranteeing the principles of non-selectivity, impartiality, objectivity, transparency and universality] [based on criteria consistent with the principles set out in Article 3] [Apart from programmed missions, it shall also undertake other missions as appear to it to be appropriate].

[Those missions shall be] [mutually agreed between the Sub-Committee and the State Party concerned, in a spirit of cooperation] [undertaken by the express consent of the State Party concerned].

[Without prejudice to the provisions of Article 1], [the modalities for carrying out each mission shall be mutually agreed between the Sub-Committee and the State Party concerned, in a spirit of cooperation] [the Sub-Committee and the State Party concerned shall engage in consultation in order to determine the modalities of the mission].

[In preparation for such a mission], the Sub-Committee shall send a written notification to the Government of the State Party concerned of its intention to organize a mission [together with a detailed plan of the mission] [and after consultations with the State Party on the modalities of the mission]. [After such notification], the Sub-Committee may at any time visit any place referred to [in its detailed plan after a written agreement is given by the said Government] [in Article 1 paragraph 1].

1. The Sub-Committee [shall] [may] decide to postpone a mission to a State Party if the State Party concerned has agreed to a scheduled visit to its territory by the Committee against Torture, pursuant to Article 20 paragraph 3 of the Convention.

2. The Sub-Committee, while respecting the principles set out in Article 3, is encouraged to cooperate with relevant United Nations organs and mechanisms as well as international, regional and national institutions or organizations working towards strengthening the protection of persons from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

3. If, on the basis of a regional Convention, a system of visits to places of detention similar to the one under the present Protocol is in force for a State Party, the Sub-Committee shall still be responsible for missions/visits to such a State Party under this Protocol assuring its universal application. However, the Sub-Committee and the bodies established under such regional conventions are encouraged to [cooperate] [consult] with a view to promote the objectives of this Protocol [and avoid duplication of work and missions/visits].

Such cooperation may not exempt the States Parties belonging also to such conventions from cooperating fully with the Sub-Committee, nor [exempt] [preclude] the Sub-Committee from carrying out missions/visits to the territories of those States in the fulfilment of its mandate.

[Each State Party belonging also to such regional conventions is encouraged to submit to the Sub-Committee, on a confidential basis, visit reports drawn up by the regional body in respect of that country and response of the State Party to it.]

4. The provisions of the present Protocol do not affect the obligations of States Parties to the four Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and their Additional Protocols of 8 June 1977, or the possibility for any State Party to authorize the International Committee of the Red Cross to visit places of detention in situations not covered by international humanitarian law.

2. (a) The Subcommittee shall send a written notification to the Government of the State Party concerned of its [intention] [request] to organize a [mission] [visit], [followed by] [including] a list of places to be visited and the composition of the delegation. [The Subcommittee may also visit other places as needed during its mission];

[(b) Those [missions] [visits] shall be conducted after the consent of the State concerned and shall be mutually agreed upon between the Subcommittee and the State Party in a spirit of cooperation];

(c) [Missions] [visits] shall be organized and carried out in accordance with the principles set out in Article 3 of the Protocol;
3. [(a)] [Six months] Before a [mission] [visit] is carried out, the Subcommittee and the State Party concerned shall, [if either of them so requests,] enter into consultations with a view to agreeing [without delay on the practical arrangements] [on the modalities] of the [mission] [visit];

[(b) Such consultations on the practical arrangements for the [mission] [visit] may not include negotiations on the obligations of a State Party under Article 1 of the Protocol].

7 *Mexican Draft (13 February 2001)*⁸

Article 15

The Sub-Committee shall have as its mandate to:

1. Advise and assist States Parties, when necessary, in the establishment of national mechanisms;
2. Maintain close contact with national mechanisms and provide them with training and advice with a view to strengthening their capacities;
3. Provide national mechanisms with assistance and advice in assessing needs and measures in order to strengthen the protection of persons deprived of their liberty against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;
4. Supervise the functioning of national mechanisms;
5. Make recommendations to national mechanisms and to States Parties on measures to strengthen, if necessary, the protection of persons deprived of their liberty against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;
6. Make recommendations and observations to States Parties with a view to strengthening the capacities and mandate of national mechanisms for the prevention of torture.

Article 18

1. The Sub-Committee and the State Party concerned shall cooperate with each other in the implementation of this Protocol (former Article 3 paragraph 1).
2. The Sub-Committee should cooperate in the prevention of torture with all bodies and mechanisms and with all international or regional mechanisms working to strengthen the protection of persons deprived of their liberty against torture and other forms of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

8 *EU Draft (22 February 2001)*⁹

Article 9 (old 8 revised)

1. The Sub-Committee:
 - (a) Shall establish on the basis of a transparent procedure, a programme of regular missions to all States Parties. These missions may also include follow-up missions;
 - (b) Shall also undertake such visits or missions as appear to be required in the circumstances and based on information received by the Sub-Committee and assessed by it as credible, with a view to furthering the aims of this Protocol;
 - (c) Shall after a mission or a visit advise and assist the State Party in assessing the needs and appropriate measures for strengthening the protection of persons deprived of their liberty from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;
 - (d) May make recommendations to the State Party on the mandate, the competence and the effective functioning as well as other relevant activities of an established national mechanism for the prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, in accordance with Article 15;
 - (e) Shall transmit requests from a State Party for technical assistance and technical cooperation as well as facilitate the provision of such cooperation from the relevant United Nations bodies such as UNHCR, UNDP, ODCCP, UNICEF and UNIFEM.
2. The Sub-Committee shall send a written notification to the Government of the State Party concerned of its intention to organize a mission.
3. Before a mission is carried out, the Sub-Committee and the State Party concerned shall, if either of them so requests, enter into consultations with a view to agreeing without delay on the practical arrangements for the mission. Such consultations on the practical arrangements for the mission may not include negotiations on the obligations of a State Party under Articles 3 or 13.

9 *US Draft (16 January 2002)*¹⁰

The Subcommittee on Prevention, under the direction of the Committee, shall:

- (a) Assist members of the Committee with respect to the Committee's functions under the Convention, including, in particular, the making of confidential inquiries in accordance with paragraphs 1–5 of Article 20, as well as with voluntary visits the Committee may propose to States Parties that may be made in agreement with them;
- (b) Assist, upon request, States Parties in setting up national mechanisms;
- (c) Respond to requests for technical advice designed to assist States Parties with the operation of national mechanisms, as well as with the effective implementation of their obligations under Articles 2 and 16 of the Convention;
- (d) Serve as a resource for technical information and advice to promote safe, humane, cost-efficient and appropriately secure facilities for detention or imprisonment.

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

10 During the first session of the Working Group, held from 19 to 30 October 1992, Article 8 was discussed within the fourth basket titled 'Operation of the system' and Article 9 was considered within the fifth basket of issues called 'Relationships between the SPT and other institutions'.¹¹

11 The general approach of participants who were in the process of considering Article 8 of the revised Costa Rica draft was to support the concept of a programme of regular missions of a preventive character to States parties, which was to be supplemented as required by the circumstances.¹²

12 With regard to Article 9, most participants in the debate considered that a balanced relationship between the SPT and other bodies, including regional bodies and the International Committee of the Red Cross, was a very important element in the credibility and the administration of the system of visits. In addition, numerous questions were raised about the approach taken by the present text to address the issue of relations between regional and universal systems.¹³

13 The Working Group held its second session from 25 October to 5 November 1993. During the discussions on Article 9, the need for appropriate measures of coordination in order to avoid duplication with other bodies and to enhance complementarity were considered as vital requirements of the OP. It was felt that the Protocol's provisions should be universal in scope and not exclude any region, including areas where relevant regional agreements already existed.¹⁴

14 It was stated that the relationship between the SPT and other bodies, such as the Committee against Torture, regional bodies and the Special Rapporteur on Torture of the Commission on Human Rights, must be made clear. The need was also seen for a revision of the conditions for the establishment of cooperation with regional organizations, particularly with regional agreements. Moreover, it was proposed that a possible solution to the concern expressed above might be found in the principle of reciprocal cooperation between the bodies.¹⁵

15 The Working Group held its third session from 17 to 28 October 1994. At this session, the informal drafting group submitted the generally-accepted text of Article 9 to the plenary meeting of the Working Group. It was pointed out that paragraph 4 of that Article accommodated the balance in the relationship between the SPT and bodies established under other conventions.¹⁶ delegations.¹⁷ The majority of delegations in favour of the alternative draft stressed the supervisory role of the SPT vis-à-vis the national mechanisms and stated that ‘supervision’ had to be understood in a broad sense. Supervisory functions could be carried out through a permanent exchange of information and the submission of periodic and/or ad hoc reports by the national mechanisms. Other delegations, however, expressed their concern that the SPT would be reduced to serving merely as an advisory and technical assistance body. They insisted that the SPT should have visiting powers in addition to its role of monitoring the activities of the national mechanisms.¹⁸

17 During the tenth session of the Working Group from 14 to 25 January 2002, after a general debate was held on the proposed two-pillar system, which would involve combining an international visiting mechanism with national mechanisms in each participating State, the delegations discussed the international mechanism and its relationship with the Committee and the national mechanisms.¹⁹ The delegation of Spain, on behalf of the European Union and supported by the delegations of Argentina, the Czech Republic, Guatemala, Mexico, Canada, Sweden, Slovenia, New Zealand, Denmark, El Salvador, the Netherlands, Georgia, Germany, the United Kingdom, Norway, Latvia, France, Ecuador, Portugal, the Republic of Korea, Switzerland, Poland, Austria, and South Africa, had a preference for an international visiting mechanism which would not only provide technical assistance to the national mechanisms but also have very extensive visiting functions in connection with any place where people were deprived of their liberty. For the delegations of China, Cuba, Egypt, and the Syrian Arab Republic, the main function of the international mechanism was, however, to provide technical and financial support to the national mechanisms, whereas the visiting functions should mainly be entrusted to the national mechanisms.²⁰

18 On 17 January 2002, the Chairperson-Rapporteur presented her proposal for an OP.²¹ Part III of her draft described the mandate of the SPT which included three main areas: visits to places of detention, technical assistance, and cooperation for the prevention of torture with relevant UN organs as well as international, regional, and national institutions.²²

19 At its fiftieth meeting on 22 April 2002, the Commission on Human Rights finally adopted the text of the OP submitted by the Chairperson-Rapporteur at the tenth session of the Working Group by twenty-nine votes to ten.²³

3. Issues of Interpretation

20 According to the revised Costa Rica Draft of 1991, the main function of the SPT was to establish and carry out a programme of regular missions to each of the States parties and to undertake ad hoc missions, if required.²⁴ The Mexican Draft of 2001, on the other hand, focused on the advice, assistance, cooperation and supervision of NPMs. Article 11 OP reflects a compromise between both approaches. Country missions, visit places of detention and making respective recommendations to States parties (as stipulated in Article 11(a) OP) remain the primary tasks of the SPT, which are further defined in the following Articles.²⁵

3.1 Country Missions and Preventive Visits to Places of Detention

21 Conducting visits to places of deprivation of liberty is one of the crucial components of the SPT's country missions. It ensures that one of the core parts of SPT's mandate, namely its 'operational function' in order to improve systems of deprivation of liberty,²⁶ is fulfilled on a regular and sustainable basis, and is in fact 'the whole raison d'être of OPCAT'.²⁷ A corresponding duty for States parties to allow such visits and consider the SPT's recommendations is contained in Article 12(a) OP. During the last reporting period,²⁸ the SPT undertook ten official country missions in accordance with its mandate under Articles 11 to 13 OP,²⁹ visited places of deprivation of liberty and made respective recommendations to the States parties concerned with regard to the protection of persons deprived of their liberty against torture and other forms of ill-treatment.

22 In practice, the SPT has—from the beginning—chosen a broad and forward-looking approach to its mandate with regard to strengthening the protection of persons deprived of their liberty. Already during its first years of operation, it noted that the *scope of its preventive mandate*³⁰ was broad, encompassing factors such as any relevant aspect of, or gaps in, primary or secondary legislation and rules or regulations in force; any relevant elements of, or gaps in, the institutional framework or official systems in place; and any relevant practices or behaviors which constitute or which, if left unchecked, could degenerate into, torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment ... In examining examples of both good and bad practice, the SPT seeks to build upon existing protections, to close the gap between theory and practice and to eliminate, or reduce to a minimum, the possibilities for torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.³¹

23 In its third Annual Report, it elaborated quite extensively on its preventive approach, stating that

[t]he process of prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment ranges from the analysis of international instruments on protection to the examination of the material conditions of detention, taking in along the way public policy, budgets, regulations, written guidelines and theoretical concepts explaining the acts and omissions that impede the application of universal standards to local conditions.³²

³² See SPT, 'Third Annual Report of the Subcommittee on Prevention of Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment' (2010) UN Doc CAT/C/44/2, para 16.

24 By the end of 2010, the SPT published its approach to the concept of prevention of torture and other forms of ill treatment under the OP in a separate document.³³ There, it stated that it did not seek to strengthen the protection of persons deprived of their liberty by setting out additional substantive preventive obligations ‘but . . . by establishing, at both the international and national levels, a preventive system of regular visits and the drawing up of reports and recommendations based thereon’.³⁴

25 Thus, the SPT had elaborated ‘a number of key principles which guide [its] approach to its preventive mandate’.³⁵ First of all, the SPT pointed out its interest ‘in the general situation within a country concerning the enjoyment of human rights and how this affects the situation of persons deprived of their liberty’. Second, it stated that it must engage with the broader regulatory and policy frameworks relevant to the treatment of persons deprived of their liberty and with those responsible for them in each country. Moreover, it stressed the importance of a wide variety of procedural safeguards. It emphasized that recommendations regarding conditions of detention play a crucial role in effective prevention. Also, visits to States parties and to particular places of detention should—in the SPT’s view—be carefully prepared in advance, ‘as the manner in which visits are conducted, their substantive focus and the recommendations which flow from them may vary . . . in the light of the situations encountered in order to best achieve the overriding purpose of the visit, this being to maximize its preventive potential and impact’.³⁶ The SPT noted that reports and recommendations should be based on rigorous analysis and be factually well grounded. Furthermore, it stated that ‘[e]ffective domestic mechanisms of oversight, including complaints mechanisms, form an essential part of the apparatus of prevention’.³⁷ The SPT stressed the importance of a system of detention to be open to scrutiny. Moreover, it found that prevention was a ‘multifaceted and interdisciplinary endeavour’.

26 Last but not least, the SPT noted that in order to minimize the likelihood of torture or other forms of ill-treatment, respective expertise was needed in relation to all different kinds of groups, including women, juveniles, members of minority groups, foreign nationals, persons with disabilities, and persons with acute medical or psychological dependencies or conditions.³⁸

their efforts to establish, designate, or maintain an NPM.⁴¹ Since States, according to Article 17 OP, have one year after having become parties to the Protocol to achieve this task,⁴² this time span was used for conducting seminars in the respective countries or providing other forms of advice and assistance in order to ensure that the NPMs are truly independent, effective, and professional bodies which satisfy the criteria laid out in Articles 17 to 23 OP.

29 From the very beginning, the SPT was well aware of the important role it played in the process of developing NPMs. Thus, it requests States parties to send detailed information concerning the establishment of such mechanisms, containing information on their legal mandate, size, composition, expertise, financial resources, and frequency of visits.⁴³ Already during its first years, however, the SPT was concerned about the lack of progress in many States parties with regard to the required process of installing appropriate and effective NPMs and the ‘noticeable gaps as regards the required process of consultation for the establishment of NPMs, the necessary legislative foundation and the practical provision, including human and budgetary resources, to enable the NPMs to work effectively’.⁴⁴ Thus, the members of the SPT continue to take part in numerous meetings at national, regional and international levels, in order to advise and assist States parties in the establishment and/or designation of NPMs. Moreover, the SPT maintains contacts with various organizations involved in the development of NPMs in all the regions falling under the OPCAT mandate. Nonetheless, as at 31 December 2015, nineteen States parties still had not complied with their obligations under Article 17 of the OP.⁴⁵

30 The SPT raised certain issues in relation to the establishment of NPMs. It stated that States parties had to consider various factors such as the complexity of the country, its administrative and financial structure and its geography. The NPMs should possibly complement existing systems of protection against torture and other forms of ill-treatment instead of replacing or duplicating any existing bodies.⁴⁶

31 In order to facilitate the development of NPMs, the SPT set up Preliminary Guidelines concerning the development of NPMs already in its First Annual Report.⁴⁷ In December 2010, it issued a revised set of Guidelines on NPMs ‘to add further clarity regarding the expectations of the SPT regarding the establishment and operation of NPMs’.⁴⁸ These guidelines contain a number of ‘Basic Principles’ (Section I), informing on all aspects of the work of an NPM. Section II comprises ‘Basic issues regarding the establishment of an NPM’ and is addressed to States parties. Section III contains guidelines to both the State and the NPM ‘concerning the practical functioning of an NPM’.⁴⁹ With regard to various different forms that NPMs may take, the SPT indicated that ‘[their] form and structure ... is likely to reflect a variety of factors which are particular to the country concerned’. Consequently, ‘the SPT does not formally ‘assess’ or ‘accredit’ NPMs as being in compliance with the criteria set forth in the OP’.⁵⁰

32 In 2011, the SPT sought for a different approach in order to offer advice and assistance regarding the establishment of NPMs.⁵¹ Thus, it decided ‘to visit States parties as soon as possible following their ratification of the Optional Protocol’ and undertake such visits, which ‘need not necessarily include visits to places of detention . . . as an addition to its current regular programme’.⁵² In 2012, the SPT for the first time conducted such special visits, so-called NPM advisory visits, to Honduras (April/May), the Republic of Moldova (October), and Senegal (December).⁵³ After such NPM advisory visits, the SPT issues two reports, one to the NPM and one to the State party concerned. Each of these reports remains confidential to the recipient unless the NPM or State party gives its consent to publish.⁵⁴ During 2013, NPM advisory visits were undertaken to Germany (April) and Armenia (September),⁵⁵ and the SPT consolidated its practice in conducting such visits.⁵⁶ As the regular NPM advisory visits by nature require that NPMs are already in place and operational, the SPT decided in 2014 to vary its methodology by introducing so-called ‘Optional Protocol advisory visits’. Such visits were planned to be short and ‘focused on meeting with the relevant authorities in the State party in order to assist them in fulfilling their obligations under part IV of the Optional Protocol’.⁵⁷ In the same year, the SPT made an advisory visit to Nigeria in order to ‘fill the ‘Optional Protocol engagement gap’.⁵⁸ In the course of 2015, however, the SPT decided ‘to cease categorizing its visits and to formulate, from 2016, a plan best suited to the exigencies of each visit’.⁵⁹

3.3 Advice to NPMs

33 After an NPM has been established or designated, the SPT shall establish and maintain direct contact and offer the domestic body training and technical assistance. The explicit reference in Article 11(b)(ii) to confidential contacts between both bodies underlines and strengthens the independence of both bodies. After having received requests from some NPMs for assistance, the SPT developed a pilot programme for assistance in 2009, based on a combination of workshops and observation of NPM visits in action, framed by subsequent feedback and exchange of views.⁶⁰

34 Following its enlargement after the elections in 2010, the SPT had established regional task forces ‘to enable more meaningful and structured engagement with NPMs’ and to ‘make its work with NPMs more constructive and active’. Therefore, the SPT divided the States parties to the OP into four regions (Africa, Latin America, Asia–Pacific, and Europe). Each of the task forces was headed by a regional focal point and assisted by an NPM team, being composed of SPT members from within the region and from other regions.⁶¹ The role of the focal points, leading the work of each of the regional NPM task forces was to undertake liaison activities and to facilitate the coordination of the SPT's engagement within their respective regions.⁶² They met in parallel during plenary sessions and report back to the plenary, giving recommendations concerning plans for further engagement. Each year, they made recommendations for the upcoming visiting programme and make sure that it is generated 'in accordance with strategic operational criteria'.⁶³ However, even after the regional task forces had been successful in their engagement with NPMs, working with these mechanisms had not always proven to be productive.⁶⁴ Thus, the SPT, inter alia, established an ad hoc working group to consider systematic issues related to the interaction of the SPT with NPMs and issue applicable recommendations.⁶⁵

35 As the role of regional focal points and NPM teams largely overlapped in practice, the SPT decided to replace them with four regional teams, each led by a head, in the course of 2013.⁶⁶ Their main task is 'to undertake and coordinate the NPM related activities of the Subcommittee within each region'.⁶⁷ Every member of the SPT is assigned to a certain regional team, being also appointed country rapporteur for a number of States. The task of the country rapporteurs is 'to direct and coordinate the activities of the team, under the overarching direction of the Subcommittee Bureau, led by the Vice-Chairperson for NPMs in conjunction with the Subcommittee Chairperson'.⁶⁸ This merge had proven to be beneficial, especially with regard to the number and intensity of contacts as well as with regard to the exchange of information and advice.⁶⁹ Moreover, the SPT adopted new guidelines on its work with NPMs, which also establish the framework in which the SPT may develop its relations with other bodies and stakeholders regarding NPM activities.⁷⁰

36 A major step with regard to enhancing the cooperation between the SPT and NPMs can be seen in the development of the so-called 'European NPM Project'.⁷¹ It was developed by the Council of Europe and aims to create an active network of CoE NPMs to foster peer exchange, promote CPT and SPT standards and working methodologies, and provide a forum for the promotion of cooperation between the SPT, CPT, and NPMs.⁷² Since the start of the project, several thematic workshops had been organized. During in-country engagements, for example, members of the CPT and/or SPT together with international experts in the field of torture prevention 'shadow' NPM visits and provide practical feedback.⁷³

37 In addition to training and technical assistance, the SPT is also mandated by Article 11(b)(iii) to advise and assist NPMs in the evaluation of the needs and the means necessary to strengthen the protection of detainees against torture and ill-treatment. This far-reaching possibility of cooperation between both mechanisms was first introduced by Article 15(3) of the Mexican Draft of 2001.⁷⁴ In practice, such a form of technical assistance can only be provided by the SPT in any meaningful manner after having carried out a country mission and informed itself of the situation of detainees in the country concerned. It might also be financed by the Special Fund established under Article 26 OP. However, it is important to note that the assistance envisaged in Article 11(b)(iii) is provided to the independent NPM and not to the Government concerned. At a quite early stage, the SPT recognized that '[u]nless the mechanisms are able to fulfil their role as the on-the-spot visiting mechanisms for the prevention of ill-treatment, the work of the Subcommittee will be seriously limited and adversely affected'. Thus, the SPT was keen to continue and intensify its direct contact with NPMs and looking forward to being able to devote more resources to this important part of its mandate.⁷⁵

38 In February 2012, the SPT published a *preliminary guide regarding the functioning of NPMs*⁷⁶ as well as an analytical self-assessment tool for NPMs.⁷⁷ The tool states that each NPM should develop a strategy for its work in order to achieve the maximum impact on problems and challenges relevant to its mandate in the local context. Activities and their outcomes should be monitored and analyzed on an ongoing basis and the lessons learnt should be used to develop its practices. Such an assessment could be based on a framework, starting with existing challenges, such as resourcing issues, and an assessment of activities currently undertaken and moving through ... a range of additional factors ...⁷⁸

The factors mentioned are criteria for the selection of planned activities, criteria for the composition of working groups and other teams, an analysis of problems and challenges, cooperation with different actors, budgeted and spent resources, strategies and working methods, recommendations submitted to authorities, follow-up activities on recommendations issued, an assessment of implementation of recommendations, a systematization of observations, recommendations issued and the responses received thereto, an analysis of how and why both successes and failures in effecting change have occurred, as well as consideration for the need to develop alternative strategies and/or approaches.⁷⁹

39 Moreover, and in order to keep up to its mandated activities set out in Articles 11(a) and (b), the SPT adopted a decision on the need for additional meeting time. Therein it expressed its need for 'at least one additional week of meetings a year and a corresponding increase in staff and other resources', which would enable the SPT to continue to undertake more visits, adopt more reports and 'assist States parties in establishing and operating national preventive mechanisms in accordance with the Optional Protocol and ... the Paris Principles ...'⁸⁰ Until April 2017, this request had not been positively answered. Consequently, the SPT had to reiterate its request for more plenary meeting time in its tenth Annual Report.⁸¹

3.4 Recommendations and Observations

40 The SPT, usually after a respective country mission, is also mandated to make recommendations and observations to the State party concerned, with a view to strengthening the capacity and the mandate of the NPM.⁸² Such recommendations are of particular importance if the SPT comes to the conclusion that the respective national body lacks the independence, professionalism or the necessary resources to carry out its tasks in an efficient manner. In practice, the SPT includes references to the effective functioning and/or establishment of NPMs in the recommendations and observations in its visit reports. In its Second Annual Report, the SPT already noted that ‘most, if not all, of its recommendations and observations would be relevant to national preventive mechanisms’.⁸³ The Special Fund under Article 26 OP provides certain financial resources to implement the respective recommendations of the SPT.

3.5 Cooperation

41 In addition to cooperating with States parties and NPMs, the SPT shall also co-operate with the relevant UN organs and mechanism and other international, regional, and national institutions and organizations. This provision in Article 11(c) goes back to Article 9 of the revised Costa Rica Draft of 1991, which only related to regional mechanisms, particularly the CPT, conducting preventive visits to places of detention.⁸⁴ The idea behind it was that the SPT should have sent its own mission to a country regularly visited by the CPT or a similar body only in exceptional cases. Yet, it still might have participated in such a regional mission by sending one member. During the discussions in the Working Group, many delegations stressed, however, that the Protocol’s provisions should be universal in scope and not exclude any region, even where relevant regional agreements already existed.⁸⁵ This concept was reflected in the text of the Articles on 25 January 1996 which provided that the SPT, even with respect to States parties regularly visited by a regional mechanism, ‘shall still be responsible for missions/visits to such a State Party under this Protocol assuring its universal application’.⁸⁶ The final version of Article 11(c) OP deleted any specific reference to any regional preventive mechanism or the ICRC and requires the SPT to cooperate, in general terms, with all relevant international, regional, and national institutions and organizations. This ‘catch-all provision’⁸⁷ is, however, complemented by specific provisions relating to *regional preventive mechanisms*⁸⁸ and the ICRC.⁸⁹ At the UN level, the SPT shall, in particular, cooperate with the CAT Committee, the Human Rights Committee, and the Special Rapporteur on Torture, as well as with relevant UN bodies providing technical assistance, including UNDP, UNICEF, and ODDCP.⁹⁰ At the regional level, the SPT, in addition to the CPT,⁹¹ established close cooperation with the respective special rapporteurs and working groups of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights⁹² and of the African Commission on Human and Peoples’ Rights.⁹³ At the national level, close cooperation with NHRIs, Ombudsman institutions, but also with relevant NGOs, has repeatedly proven to be useful.

42 With regard to the cooperation with the CAT Committee, a contact group made up of two members from each treaty body had been created in order to facilitate contacts.⁹⁴

43 In practice, the SPT is constantly involved in the annual meetings of the Chairs of the human rights treaty bodies and participates in numerous other activities of the OHCHR. It strives for a systematic cooperation with various mechanisms at all levels. As there are points of common interest, the SPT is represented at the Inter Committee Meetings of the UN human rights treaty bodies in order to exchange views with experts whose mandates intersect substantively with the SPT's mandate. In 2012, the SPT adopted a statement on the treaty body strengthening process. It endorsed the Addis Ababa Guidelines⁹⁵ and adapted its rules of procedure accordingly.⁹⁶ In recent years, it took part in numerous discussions on the implementation of UNGA resolution 68/268. Moreover, it renewed and revised its policy on reprisals (UN Doc CAT/OP/6) in the light of the San José Guidelines,⁹⁷ which the Chairs of the human rights treaty bodies had endorsed in June 2015, and adopted revised SPT guidelines.⁹⁸

44 Moreover, the SPT immensely benefits from the support of civil society, particularly the APT and several academic institutions,⁹⁹ including the Ludwig Boltzmann Institute of Human Rights. Already at an early stage, a number of organizations (Amnesty International, Association for the Prevention of Torture, Action by Christians for the Abolition of Torture, Bristol University OPCAT project, International Committee of the Red Cross, Mental Disability Advocacy Centre, Penal Reform International, Rehabilitation and Research Centre for Torture Victims and World Organization against Torture) came together as the Optional Protocol Contact Group.¹⁰⁰

3.6 Budgetary Issues

45 As far as funding is concerned, no provision in the UN regular budget is foreseen for SPT activities related to NPMs. Consequently, the SPT experts had to make great efforts in being able to come up to their mandate in this regard. Among other things, an Optional Protocol Contact Group had been created. This involves various organizations¹⁰¹ that sponsored the participation of members of the SPT in a range of important meetings and assisted the SPT in the development of its working methods.¹⁰²

46 Although with the establishment of each new NPM the workload of the SPT increases, the level of core-funded support for the SPT does not increase accordingly. Unfortunately, the GA resolution 68/268, which refers to an adequate allocation of financial and human resources to those treaty bodies whose main mandated role is to carry out field visits,¹⁰³ did not lead to an increase of funding for in-country activities of the SPT either.¹⁰⁴

47 Since the SPT only has limited financial means of technical assistance at its disposal, Article 26 OP provides for the establishment of a Special Fund with the explicit task of financing 'education programmes of the national preventive mechanisms'.¹⁰⁵ Support provided through this Fund is directed towards projects aimed at establishing or strengthening NPMs. In 2016, grants amounting to $240,000 were awarded through the Fund to support several torture prevention projects in seven States parties.¹⁰⁶

Obligations of States Parties to Cooperate with the Subcommittee

In order to enable the Subcommittee on Prevention to comply with its mandate as laid down in article 11, the States Parties undertake:

- (a) To receive the Subcommittee on Prevention in their territory and grant it access to the places of detention as defined in article 4 of the present Protocol;
- (b) To provide all relevant information the Subcommittee on Prevention may request to evaluate the needs and measures that should be adopted to strengthen the protection of persons deprived of their liberty against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;
- (c) To encourage and facilitate contacts between the Subcommittee on Prevention and the national preventive mechanisms;
- (d) To examine the recommendations of the Subcommittee on Prevention and enter into dialogue with it on possible implementation measures.

1. Introduction

1 Article 2(4) OP stipulates that the SPT and the States parties ‘shall cooperate in the implementation of the present Protocol’. This principle of cooperation constitutes one of the main pillars of the Protocol¹ and creates rights and corresponding duties for both the SPT and States parties. While the duties of the SPT are spelled out primarily in Articles 2, 11, 13, and 16 OP, the corresponding obligations of States parties can be found, above all, in Articles 4, 12, 14, and 15 OP. These mutual rights and obligations are, of course, interdependent and should be interpreted correspondingly. The principle duty of governments is to allow country missions, without prior consent, and visits by the SPT to all places of detention, to all installations and facilities within such places of detention, and, above all, to grant the SPT the opportunity to conduct private interviews with all detainees, their family members, witnesses, lawyers, NGOs, and any other persons with whom it wishes to speak.² This obligation corresponds to Articles 2 and 8 ECPT, and to the practice of similar bodies carrying out country missions, such as special procedures of the UN.³ As the UN Special Rapporteur on Torture (SRT) has underlined, these terms of reference are 'fundamental, common-sense considerations that are essential to ensure an objective, impartial and independent assessment of torture and ill-treatment during country visits'.⁴

2 The object and purpose of preventive visits to places of detention differs from fact-finding missions by the SRT or the CAT Committee in the context of the inquiry procedure under Article 20 CAT. But, in addition to the fact that unannounced visits to places of detention usually by itself have a preventive effect, the SPT is explicitly entrusted by Article 16(1) to communicate its recommendations and observations to the State party and to advise it and the NPM, respectively, on the needs and the measures that should be adopted to strengthen the protection of persons deprived of their liberty against torture and ill-treatment.⁵ In order to advise States parties accordingly, the SPT must first carry out an independent assessment of the conditions of detention and the extent of torture and ill-treatment of detainees.

3 The best method of assessing the situation in the country concerned is to carry out unannounced visits to places of detention and to speak in private with all stakeholders involved, ie Government officials, NGOs, detainees, witnesses, etc. Consequently, such country missions and visits to places of detention serve different purposes: prevention, fact-finding, and cooperation with the Government concerned. On the other hand, the country missions of the SRT also aim at both fact-finding and cooperation with governments.⁶ A closer analysis, therefore, shows that the object and purpose of these country missions is not as different as it may seem at first.⁷

4 Since the obligation to allow visits by an international monitoring body to its territory without prior consent constitutes a fairly far-reaching waiver of a sovereign right of States by the mere fact of becoming party to the Protocol, Article 24 OP provides States parties with the possibility, upon ratification, to make a declaration postponing the implementation of Part III of the Protocol for a maximum of three years, and the CAT Committee may extend that period for an additional two years.⁸

1. Subject to the provisions of Article 9 paragraph 3, when the Government of a State Party to the present Protocol has been informed of a mission assigned to one or more delegate(s), the latter shall be authorised to visit in all circumstances and without previous notice any place of detention within the jurisdiction of the State Party.
2. The delegates shall receive from the State Party concerned all facilities for the accomplishment of their task. They may, in particular, obtain all information about the places where there are persons deprived of their liberty and interview them there without witnesses and at leisure.
3. Delegates may enter into contact with the families, friends and lawyers of persons deprived of their liberty.
4. During each visit, the delegates shall verify that persons deprived of their liberty are being treated in conformity with the provisions of the Convention.
5. If appropriate, they shall at once submit observations and recommendations to the competent authorities of the State Party concerned.
6. They shall submit a full report on their mission, with their observations and recommendations, to the Committee.

Article 12

1. The Subcommittee shall notify the Government of the State Party concerned of its intention to organize a mission. After such notification, it may at any time visit any place referred to in Article 1 paragraph 1.
2. The State Party within whose jurisdiction a mission is to take place or is being carried out shall provide the delegation with all the facilities necessary for the proper fulfilment of their tasks and shall not obstruct by any means or measures the programme of visits or any other activities which the delegation is carrying out specifically for or in relation to the visits. In particular, the State Party shall provide the delegation with the following facilities:
 - (a) access to its territory and the right to travel without restrictions;
 - (b) full information on the places referred to in Article 1 paragraph 1, including information requested about specific persons;
 - (c) unlimited access to any place referred to in Article 1 paragraph 1, including the right to move inside such places without restriction;
 - (d) assistance in gaining access to places where the delegation has reason to believe that persons may be deprived of their liberty;
 - (e) producing any person deprived of his liberty whom the delegation wishes to interview, at the request of the delegation and at a convenient location;

3. Members of the delegation may interview in private, inside or outside his place of detention, without witnesses, and for the time they deem necessary, any person deprived of his liberty under the terms of Article 1. They may also communicate without restriction with relatives, friends, lawyers and doctors of persons who are or have been deprived of their liberty, and with any other person or organization that they think may be able to provide them with relevant information for their mission. In seeking such information, the delegation shall have regard to applicable rules of national law relating to data protection and principles of medical ethics.

4. No authority or official shall order, apply, permit or tolerate any sanction against any person or organization for having communicated to the Subcommittee or to the delegates any information whether true or false, and no such person or organization shall be otherwise prejudiced in any way.

5. In urgent cases the delegation shall at once submit observations and recommendations either of general or specific nature to the competent authorities of the State Party concerned.

[1, 6] [Members of the delegation shall respect the national laws and regulations while undertaking the visits in the territory of the State Party concerned.] [National laws and regulations may not be used or interpreted as means or measures contravening the programme and purpose of the visits.]

2. The State Party within whose jurisdiction a mission is to take place or is being carried out shall provide the delegation with all the facilities necessary for the proper fulfilment of their tasks and promote the full cooperation of all competent authorities. In particular, the State Party shall provide the delegation [in accordance with national laws and regulations] with the following:

- (a) Access to its territory [and the right to travel without restriction] [for the purposes of the mission], [to freely visit places and persons referred to in Article 1];
- (b) All relevant information on the places referred to [in Article 1], [in the detailed plan] including information requested about specific persons;
- [(c) Unlimited access to any place referred to [in Article 1], [in the detailed plan], including the right to move inside such places without restrictions];
- (d) Assistance in gaining access to places where the delegation has reason to believe, [on the basis of well-founded and reliable information] that persons may be in situations referred to [in Article 1] [and providing a convenient place for private interview];
- (e) Providing access to, [and private interview with] any person in situations referred to [in Article 1,] whom the delegation wishes to interview, at the request of the delegation and at a convenient location;
- (f) Other information available to the State Party which is necessary for the delegation to carry out its task.

Article 12

[1. The Subcommittee and the State Party shall cooperate with a view to the effective fulfilment of the [mission] [visit]. In particular, the State Party shall provide:

- (a) The delegation with access to, and freedom of movement within, any territory under its jurisdiction [and control] for the conduct of the [mission] [visit];
- (b) The Subcommittee or its delegations with all information relevant to the effective conduct of the [mission] [visit], including in particular on any person or places referred to in Article 1 of the Protocol;
- (c) The delegation with access to and within any place referred to in Article 1 of the Protocol;
- (d) The delegation with access to persons referred to in Article 1 of the Protocol, and the opportunity for private interviews with them;
- (e) The Subcommittee and its delegation with the opportunity to communicate freely with any other person who is in a position to supply relevant information.

[2. The obligations referred to above shall be subject to any arrangements that the State Party concerned considers necessary for:

- [(a) The protection of sensitive areas [equipment] or information [based on imperative ground of national security] [or economic, technological or scientific secrets];]
- [(b) The protection of any constitutional obligations the State Party concerned may have with regard to proprietary rights, searches and seizures, or other constitutional rights [of individuals];]
- [(c) The physical protection and safety of persons, including the members of the Subcommittee; and]
- [(d) The protection of personal data of individuals as required by national legislation [consistent with human rights principles]].

If the State Party is unable to provide full access to places, information or persons, the State Party shall make every reasonable effort to demonstrate to the Subcommittee, through alternative means, its compliance with this Protocol]].

Article 16

1. In order to enable the Sub-Committee to fulfil its mandate as set out in Article 15, States Parties undertake to:

- (a) Facilitate contact between the Sub-Committee and national mechanisms;
- (b) Receive the Sub-Committee in their territory when required;
- (c) Implement the recommendations of the Sub-Committee.

2. The Sub-Committee may request any information from national mechanisms that may enable it to assess needs and the measures to be taken to strengthen the protection of persons deprived of their liberty against torture and other forms of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, including information concerning the number and location of places of detention, the persons deprived of their liberty and their treatment.

1. The Sub-Committee and the State Party shall cooperate with a view to the effective fulfilment of the mission. In particular, the State Party shall provide the Sub-Committee with:

- (a) Unrestricted access to all information, deemed relevant by the Sub-Committee, concerning the number of persons deprived of their liberty, in accordance with Article 16 of the Convention, as well as the number of places and their location;
- (b) Unrestricted access to all information, deemed relevant by the Sub-Committee, concerning the treatment and the conditions of detention;
- (c) Access to and freedom of movement within any territory under its jurisdiction and control for the conduct of the mission;
- (d) All information deemed relevant by the Sub-Committee to the effective conduct of the mission, including in particular on any person or places referred to in Article 3 of the Protocol;
- (e) Access to and within any place referred to in Article 3 of the Protocol;
- (f) Access to persons referred to in Article 3 of the Protocol, and the opportunity for private interviews with them;
- (g) The opportunity to communicate freely with any person whom they believe can supply relevant information.

2. With regard to a particular visit, the obligations referred to under paragraph 1 shall be implemented in a manner consistent with national law and professional ethics complimentary to international human rights standards.

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

11 During the first session of the Working Group, held from 19 to 30 October 1992, Article 12 was discussed under the fourth basket of issues 'Operation of the system'.¹⁵ One of the issues raised during the discussion was the access to information. Several delegates noted that information on specific persons might be subject to laws on privacy and data protection or the rules of professional ethics. Some felt that these paragraphs (paragraphs 2 (b), (f), and 3) should be redrafted to reflect the corresponding principles of the ECPT. One delegation was of the opinion that the consent of the person to be interviewed was essential, although a presumption of consent might be created except where the person specifically refused consent. It also noted particular concerns about the legal capacity of minors and mental patients to consent. Another delegation indicated that the aim of the provision was to protect the individual against abuse of private or personal information, rather than the State or public authority, and the provision should state the right to privacy and international standards relating thereto.¹⁶

12 At its third session from 17 to 28 October 1994, the Working Group continued to consider Article 12. During the discussions, the need to provide a delegation of the SPT with unrestricted access to the places of detention was once again strongly emphasized.¹⁷

13 During the sixth session of the Working Group from 13 to 24 October 1997, the Chairperson-Rapporteur once again invited delegations to discuss Article 12.¹⁸

14 The representative of the Netherlands pointed out that the article in question dealt with operational guidelines and not with questions of principle and, as such, should neither contain too many details nor refer to the issue of prior consent to receive missions. The representative of China expressed full support for the given proposal, stating that nothing should interfere with State sovereignty. The observer for the APT favoured a text drafted in language as close as possible to that of Article 12 as contained in the Costa Rica Draft of 1991. He pointed out that Article 12 would be one of the cornerstones of the new instrument and would allow the SPT to gain a full and clear understanding of the situation in the country visited, without which no helpful recommendations could be made. As a matter of fact, the visiting delegation must have the rights to travel without restriction to any place of detention, to enjoy unlimited access to such places and to interview detainees without witnesses. In his opinion, legitimate interests of States to restrict visits should be addressed in Article 13. Furthermore, he cautioned against lowering existing international humanitarian standards, such as the Third and Fourth Geneva Conventions. He opposed the granting of such rights in accordance with national laws, because every country had laws limiting access to detainees and providing, at least for certain categories of persons, that visits must be supervised. The observer for AI found that Article 12 was one of the most essential Articles and that the preventive effect of the OP could only be maximized if the SPT was able to visit any part of any detention facility and speak privately with detainees. The observer for the ICRC stated that access to all places and persons, together with the possibility of private talks and repeated visits, were essential conditions for a visit by his organization.

15 In the course of the discussion, the observer for Sweden proposed that the drafting group should return to the original version of Article 12 as proposed by Costa Rica in 1991. This view was supported by the representatives of Argentina, Brazil, Canada,

Denmark, Dominican Republic, France, Italy, South Africa, Uruguay, and the observers for Australia, Finland, Norway, and Switzerland as well as for AI and the ICRC.¹⁹

16 At the tenth plenary meeting on 22 October 1997, the Chairperson of the drafting group reported on the group's attempt to finalize Article 12, which—unfortunately—could not be done until the end of the sixth session of the Working Group.²⁰ Upon the proposal by the Chairperson-Rapporteur, the Working Group decided to continue its work on the draft OP by considering Article 12 at its seventh session from 28 September to 9 October 1998.²¹

17 It was generally felt that Article 12 was of crucial importance to the whole document since it contained references to the basic commitments that States would accept by ratifying the OP. The purpose of this article was therefore to define what host governments should offer the SPT in terms of cooperation, information, and assistance. The general approach of all delegations was that the contents of the present Article 12 could be reduced to several core elements of the visits, including access to the territory, provisions of information, access to places of detention, and access to individual persons, as well as the opportunity for private interviews with such individuals and the opportunity to communicate with persons who were in a position to supply relevant information.

18 Regarding the issue of domestic laws and regulations, it was the common understanding that all visits should be effected in the framework of or in accordance with the national legislation of host countries. However, this legislation should be consistent with international law. It was emphasized that national law or regulations should not be used in order to hinder the fulfilment of the missions or visits. It was, therefore, felt that the drafting of a reference to domestic law, if needed, should be made in a balanced way.

19 However, the delegations had still failed to arrive at a final text of Article 12. Thus, the text of Article 12 was included in Annex II to the seventh report of the Working Group to serve as a basis for future work.²² In addition, the Chairperson of the Working Group also referred to three nota benes. First, there was an understanding that Article 12 has a close relationship with Article X²³ dealing with national legislation, inter alia, with regard to issues of safety and privacy. It was understood that Article 12 may have to be modified based on the terms of Article X. Second, the issue was raised about gaining access to territory which is not under a State party's jurisdiction but under its de facto control. Third, the protection of persons who have communicated with the SPT will be addressed in a separate Article.²⁴ The question of where to place the reference to national legislation—in Article 12 or elsewhere in the text—had not been definitively settled during the discussions at the seventh session.

20 During the eighth session of the Working Group from 4 to 15 October 1999, the scope of cooperation envisaged between the States parties and the SPT was discussed under Article 12. Some delegations pointed out that their constitutional requirements and/or their national legislation could prevent them from giving the SPT free access to all types of information or places. Restrictions in national legislation could also limit the possibility of the SPT to require testimony from detained persons or to interview prisoners 'without witnesses'.²⁵ It was emphasized by some delegations that it was a pre-requisite to establish a framework for the normal work of the SPT, including such elements as freedom of movement and access to all relevant information, places, and persons.

21 In the course of the Working Group's considerations on Article 12, some delegations insisted that if an Article X on national legislation were included in the Protocol, they might be able to accept Article 12(1) as drafted. A number of others indicated that they opposed a separate Article X as it would undermine the objectives of the Protocol. All delegations agreed that paragraph 2 required further development, and as many divergent views had been expressed so far, the whole texts of Articles 12 and X were put in square brackets.²⁶

22 In the proposal presented by the Chairperson-Rapporteur, the mandate of the SPT was described in Part III, including three main areas: visits to places of detention, technical assistance, and cooperation for the prevention of torture with relevant UN organs as well as international, regional, and national institutions. Article 12 set out the obligations of States vis-à-vis the SPT.²⁷ During the debate on the proposal, several delegations, among them the delegation of the United States, found that the foreseen global reach of the SPT was impractical. Moreover, it stated that constitutional considerations such as appropriate restrictions on grants of authority for access to persons and places had not been accommodated.²⁸ The delegation of Japan questioned why the article regarding so-called 'unrestricted access' had been kept in the proposal.²⁹ Similarly, the Arab Group was not in favour of a SPT endowed with mandatory authority to visit States without their explicit consent.³⁰ However, most of the delegations supported the Chairperson-Rapporteur's proposal.

23 At its fiftieth meeting on 22 April 2002, the Commission on Human Rights finally adopted the text of the OP submitted by the Chairperson-Rapporteur at the tenth session of the Working Group by twenty-nine votes to ten.³¹ The fairly far-reaching obligations of States parties under Article 12 certainly contributed to the fact that so many States voted against the draft OP in the Working Group, the Commission, and ECOSOC.³²

3.1 The Controversial Nature of Article 12 OP

24 The travaux préparatoires reveal that Article 12 OP was one of the most controversial provisions during the drafting of the Protocol. The discussions primarily concentrated on the question of prior consent to country missions,³³ unannounced visits to places of detention, and private interviews with detainees. Article 10(1) of the original Costa Rica Draft of 1980 had explicitly provided for the right of the visiting body 'to visit in all circumstances and without previous notice any place of detention within the jurisdiction of the State Party'.³⁴

The ECPT does not contain an explicit provision for unannounced visits, but Article 8(2) (b) requires States parties to provide the CPT with ‘unlimited access to any place where persons are deprived of their liberty, including the right to move inside such places without restriction’. This provision has been interpreted by the CPT as authorizing it to carry out both announced and unannounced visits.³⁵ That the CPT may ‘at any time visit any place’, a formulation to be found both in Article 8(1) ECPT and in Article 12(1) of the revised Costa Rica Draft 1991, underlines this interpretation.

25 In the Working Group, two different views emerged. One group of States argued, in line with the ECPT, that Articles 12 and 14 were of crucial importance to the entire Protocol, as they contained basic commitments of States necessary for the effective implementation of the SPT’s tasks. Other delegations argued, however, that the SPT was always bound to comply with relevant domestic laws and regulations which might restrict unlimited access to places of detention, unannounced visits, and private interviews with detainees.³⁶ Since domestic laws usually contain limits of the general public to visit places of detention and provide for supervision of any communication with detainees, above all with pre-trial detainees, the mere existence of such laws might be misused by governments seriously to restrict the fact-finding by the SPT.³⁷ Governments could always refer to their obligation under domestic law to provide for the security of the visiting delegation and to ensure that its data protection laws are not violated in the course of private interviews. On the other hand, to visit a detention facility without being able to speak in private with detainees who, if they actually were subject to torture before, would always be afraid of reprisals if prison guards or any other public officials were present during the interview, simply does not make much sense. It would, in effect, be counterproductive as the fact-finding would reveal a distorted picture.³⁸

26 Nevertheless, no consensus could be reached between these different views, and the relevant provisions in Articles 12 and 14 OP are, therefore, unclear and in need of interpretation, taking into account the object and purpose of the Protocol, and the experience of the CPT, the ICRC, and similar visiting bodies, as well as the fact that no reference to national laws and regulations was included in the OP, as proposed by some delegations. On the other hand, Article 36(a) OP, which is related to the special privileges and immunities accorded to members of the SPT, contains an explicit obligation of SPT members to respect the laws and regulations of the visited State.³⁹

3.2 Obligation of States Parties to Allow Country Missions and Unannounced Visits to Places of Detention

27 Article 12(a) only repeats the obligation of States parties under Article 4 OP to allow missions to their territory, to receive the SPT, and to ‘grant it access to the places of detention’, as defined in Article 4. Whether these missions may be unannounced, is not explicitly spelled out in Article 12. It is quite clear, however, that country missions to States parties have to be announced beforehand in order to make all necessary arrangements (like for example prepare for visas or visa waivers).⁴⁰ Article 14(1)(c) OP requires States parties to grant the SPT ‘unrestricted access to all places of detention’, subject only to certain objections in exceptional circumstances, as spelled out in Article 14(2) OP. In light of the object and purpose of the Protocol, taking into account the relevant practice of the CPT, we are of the opinion that ‘unrestricted access’ also includes the right of the SPT to conduct unannounced visits to any place of detention. If the SPT had to announce in advance which places of detention it was to visit, both the preventive effect and the fact-finding purpose would be lost, because the authorities would be enabled to prepare the respective places of detention, remove detainees to other places,⁴¹ instruct detainees and prison guards what to tell to the visiting delegation, clean up dirty and overcrowded detention facilities, destroy or remove documents, etc.⁴²

28 According to the SPT’s mission reports that have been published so far, the SPT delegations in some cases have been granted unrestricted access to all the places, installations, and facilities they wanted to visit as well as to all information they requested; at the same time they have been given the opportunity to interview all persons deprived of their liberty in private, all in full accordance with the Protocol.⁴³ Certain problems with regard to access were faced mainly due to a lack of communication or prior information regarding the SPT’s mandate and could, thus, have been solved on a reasonable basis, eg thanks to the cooperation of the focal points or in the course of a short follow-up missions.⁴⁴ In some cases, however, the SPT delegations encountered a number of problems relating to access and therefore determined serious breaches of the States parties obligations under Article 12 OP.⁴⁵

29 Moreover, the SPT had to suspend three missions (to Azerbaijan, the Ukraine, and Rwanda) until the end of 2017 due to a lack of official cooperation and grave limitations that had been imposed on granting access to certain places of detention.

3.3 Obligation of States Parties to Provide Information

30 Article 12(b) requires governments to provide all relevant information which the SPT may need to assess the situation and evaluate the needs and measures that should be adopted to strengthen the protection of detainees against torture and ill-treatment. This provision was not controversial and is supplemented by the obligation under Article 14(1)(a) and (b) to grant the SPT unrestricted ‘access to all information concerning the number of persons deprived of their liberty in places of detention as defined in Article 4, as well as the number of places and their location’, as well as to ‘all information referring to the treatment of those persons as well as their conditions of detention’.⁴⁶ As with the CPT, the SRT, and similar bodies, the Government shall provide the SPT in advance of the mission with a full list of all places of detention, their precise location, and the total number of detainees in each facility. Should there have been any major incidents in the more recent past, such as prison riots, deaths or suicides in custody, allegations and/or findings of torture and ill-treatment in custody, etc, this information shall also be provided to the SPT in advance of the mission in order to enable it to prepare the mission accordingly. The obligation to provide information, of course, also applies during the mission and/or visits to detention facilities. First, the authorities shall provide the prison register, information on disciplinary punishments, the register of punishment cells, and similar information. If a detainee alleges, for instance, that he or she was recently subjected to torture by the police or prison guards, the SPT has the right to request the case file of the person concerned, medical records, the results of investigations conducted, and other information relevant for the assessment of the accuracy of such allegations.

3.4 Obligation of States Parties to Facilitate Contacts with NPMs

31 States parties, in accordance with Article 12(c) OP, shall also encourage and facilitate contacts between the SPT and the NPMs. This obligation shall enable the SPT to fulfil its task of advising and assisting NPMs in accordance with Article 11(b) OP. The SPT is also explicitly authorized by Article 11(b)(ii) to maintain confidential contact with the NPM.⁴⁷ In other words, the duty to ‘facilitate’ contacts shall not be misused to deny or obstruct confidential meetings between both bodies.

⁴⁵ See SPT, ‘Report on the Visit of the Subcommittee on Prevention of Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment to Benin’ (2011) UN Doc CAT/OP/BEN/1, paras 304–09; SPT, ‘Report on the Visit of the Subcommittee on Prevention of Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment to Mali’ (2014) UN Doc CAT/OP/MLI/1, paras 6–12; SPT, ‘Report on the Visit of the Subcommittee on Prevention of Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment to Kyrgyzstan’ (2014) UN Doc CAT/OP/KGZ/1, paras 10–11; SPT, ‘Report on the Visit of the Subcommittee on Prevention of Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment to Gabon’ (2015) UN Doc CAT/OP/GAB/1, paras 11–14.

32 In practice, the SPT faced certain difficulties when trying to contact the NPM of Mali during its regular country mission in December 2011. The SPT considered the structure of the NPM in question ‘to be unsatisfactory, particularly due to its lack of independence and the absence of funding’. As a result, the NPM was unable to arrange visits to places of detention outside the district of Bamako. The SPT emphasized that it tried to contact the NPM ‘to follow up its visit, notably regarding the question of possible reprisals, but received no response’.⁴⁸

33 In 2011, the SPT decided to develop a new tool in order to facilitate its contacts with NPMs: the ‘NPM advisory visits’.⁴⁹ Although this type of visits is not explicitly foreseen in the text of the OP, the SPT conducted eleven such visits between January 2012 and December 2016.⁵⁰ Besides, certain procedures have been installed by the SPT in order to foster cooperation and communication with NPMs apart from its visiting mandate, such as the establishment of regional teams, which act as focal points for NPMs, as well as the identification of specific SPT members for each of the States parties.⁵¹

3.5 Obligation of States Parties to Enter Into Dialogue with the SPT on Possible Implementation Measures

34 Finally, Article 12(d) contains an obligation of States parties to ‘examine the recommendations of the SPT and enter into dialogue with it on possible implementation measures’.⁵² This duty to take the observations and recommendations of the SPT seriously is an important aspect of the general principle of cooperation. If a Government permits unrestricted access to all places of detention, documents, and detainees but refuses to consider and implement any of the SPT’s recommendations, then the situation will not improve and the object of the country mission, namely to prevent torture and improve conditions of detention, was missed. Consequently, Article 16(4) OP contains a sanction against States parties which refuse to cooperate with the SPT and/or to take steps to improve the situation. At the request of the SPT, the CAT Committee may publish the report of the SPT or make a public statement.⁵³ The SPT may also propose and carry out a short follow-up visit after a regular visit.⁵⁴

35 Already after its second year of operation, the SPT pointed out that any responses to its recommendations received from a State before the adoption of the respective mission report in plenary would form an important part in the ongoing preventive dialogue between the SPT and the State party concerned.⁵⁵

36 At its twenty-fourth session in November 2014, the SPT adopted a statement regarding obligations of States parties to the OP.⁵⁶ In this statement it emphasized that States parties are obliged to ensure that the SPT is able to fully carry out its visiting mandate in accordance with Articles 12 and 14 OP. In the SPT's view, this comprises the States party's obligation to provide the SPT with all necessary information, including all documentation required (both prior and during a visit), to grant it unhindered access to all places under its jurisdiction where people are or may be deprived of their liberty (as defined in Article 4 of the OP), and to grant it the opportunity to have private interviews with persons deprived of their liberty. Should a State party refuse to cooperate fully, to the extent that the SPT considers the success of its mission to be in jeopardy, it may suspend or terminate its visit (as stipulated in paragraph 27 of the guidelines of the SPT in relation to visits to States parties).⁵⁷ Later on, these guidelines have been revised,⁵⁸ so that if a State party refuses to cooperate, the SPT may now choose to use all available measures to address such a lack of cooperation.⁵⁹

Obligations of the Subcommittee Concerning Country Missions

1. The Subcommittee on Prevention shall establish, at first by lot, a programme of regular visits to the States Parties in order to fulfil its mandate as established in article 11.
2. After consultations, the Subcommittee on Prevention shall notify the States Parties of its programme in order that they may, without delay, make the necessary practical arrangements for the visits to be conducted.
3. The visits shall be conducted by at least two members of the Subcommittee on Prevention. These members may be accompanied, if needed, by experts of demonstrated professional experience and knowledge in the fields covered by the present Protocol who shall be selected from a roster of experts prepared on the basis of proposals made by the States Parties, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the United Nations Centre for International Crime Prevention. In preparing the roster, the States Parties concerned shall propose no more than five national experts. The State Party concerned may oppose the inclusion of a specific expert in the visit, whereupon the Subcommittee on Prevention shall propose another expert.
4. If the Subcommittee on Prevention considers it appropriate, it may propose a short follow-up visit after a regular visit.

1. Introduction

1 While Articles 12 and 14 contain obligations of States parties to facilitate country missions and visits to places of detention by the SPT, Article 13 OP contains corresponding SPT obligations regarding the conduct of missions and visits. Taking into account the main objective of the Protocol, namely to establish a system of regular and preventive visits to places of detention,¹ and the guiding principles of impartiality, non-selectivity, universality, and objectivity,² the SPT shall establish a programme of regular missions,³ at first by lot. It shall notify the States parties of this programme in order to enable the governments concerned to make the necessary practical and logistical arrangements for the country missions. The fact that country missions are not unannounced is not only a concession to the Member States, but also constitutes a practical precondition for the smooth operation of such a mission, as is also the practice of the CPT.

2 In addition to regular missions, the SPT may also conduct follow-up missions. As a general rule, which is also contained in Article 7(2) ECPT, missions shall be conducted by at least two members of the SPT and, if needed, by experts selected from a roster which is kept by the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights. The State party concerned may oppose the inclusion of a specific expert in the delegation, but not of a member of the SPT.

Article 8

1. The Committee shall be responsible for arranging visits to places of detention subject to the jurisdiction of the States Parties to the present Protocol.
2. The Committee shall establish a programme of regular visits to each of the said States Parties and shall arrange such further visits as may appear necessary from time to time.

Article 9

1. The Committee may nominate as its delegates to carry out such visits one or more persons being members of the Committee or members of a panel of qualified persons chosen by the Committee from among the nationals of the States Parties to the present Protocol.
2. Members of the said panel shall be nominated for periods of three years. Their names shall be communicated to the States Parties to the present Protocol.
3. A State Party may exceptionally and for confidential reasons given confidentially to the Committee declare that a particular delegate will not be acceptable as a visitor to its territory.

Article 10

1. Subject to the provisions of Article 9 paragraph 3, when the Government of a State Party to the present Protocol has been informed of a mission assigned to one or more delegate(s), the latter shall be authorized to visit in all circumstances and without previous notice any place of detention within the jurisdiction of the State Party.

Article 8

1. The Subcommittee shall establish a programme of regular missions to each of the States Parties. Apart from regular missions, it shall also undertake such other missions as appear to it to be required in the circumstances.
2. The Subcommittee shall postpone any such mission if the State Party concerned has agreed to a visit to its territory by the Committee against Torture pursuant to Article 20 paragraph 3 of the Convention.

Article 10

1. As a general rule, the missions shall be carried out by at least two members of the Subcommittee, assisted by experts and interpreters if necessary.
2. No member of a delegation shall be a national of the State to be visited.

Article 11

1. Experts shall act on the instructions and under the authority of the Subcommittee. They shall have particular knowledge and experience in the areas covered by this Protocol and shall be bound by the same duties of independence, impartiality and availability as the members of the Subcommittee.
2. A State Party may exceptionally and for reasons given confidentially declare that an expert or other person assisting the Subcommittee may not take part in a mission to its territory.

Article 12

1. The Subcommittee shall notify the Government of the State Party concerned of its intention to organize a mission. After such notification, it may at any time visit any place referred to in Article 1 paragraph 1.

concerned shall engage in consultation in order to determine the modalities of the mission].

[In preparation for such a mission], the Sub-Committee shall send a written notification to the Government of the State Party concerned of its intention to organize a mission [together with a detailed plan of the mission] [and after consultations with the State Party on the modalities of the mission]. [After such notification], the Sub-Committee may at any time visit any place referred to [in its detailed plan after a written agreement is given by the said Government] [in Article 1 paragraph 1].

Consolidated Articles 10 and 11

[1. The missions/[visits] shall be carried out by at least two members of the Sub-Committee. [As a general rule] members of the Sub-Committee shall conduct their missions/[visits] to the State Party concerned [with] [without] the assistance of experts.

2. [In exceptional cases] the Sub-Committee may, if it considers it necessary in order to carry out its tasks efficiently, be assisted by experts known for their professional knowledge and experience in the areas covered by this Protocol.

[Those missions shall be] [mutually agreed between the Sub-Committee and the State Party concerned, in a spirit of cooperation] [undertaken by the express consent of the State Party concerned]. (From Article 8 paragraph 2)

[3. In order to establish a pool of experts available to the Sub-Committee, each State Party may propose to the Sub-Committee a list of [no more than five] persons who [may] [shall] be its nationals.]

[4. When preparing a mission the Sub-Committee will select experts from this pool and [may] complete the delegation with experts proposed by the United Nations Centre for Human Rights and/or the United Nations Crime Prevention Branch or from amongst the existing staff of the United Nations and its specialized agencies.]

5. No member of the delegation, with the exception of interpreters, may be a national of the State to be visited. The conduct of the delegation and of all of its members, shall be bound by the criteria of independence, impartiality, objectivity and confidentiality.

6. Experts to a mission shall be subordinate to and assist the Sub-Committee. They shall in all respects act on the instructions and under the authority of the Sub-Committee. [They shall in no case undertake any missions by themselves under this Protocol.]

7. The names of the experts and interpreters selected by the Sub-Committee to assist a particular mission shall be specified in the notification under [Article 12 paragraph 1] [Article 8 paragraph 1].

8. A State Party may, [exceptionally] [and for reasons given confidentially], [declare] [decide] that an expert or interpreter assisting the Sub-Committee may not take part in the mission to the territory under its jurisdiction.]

6 *Text of the Articles which Constitute the Outcome of the Second Reading (2 December 1999)*⁷

Article 13 [consolidated 10 and 11]

1. Missions should be carried out by at least two members of the Subcommittee, assisted by interpreters if necessary. If needed, the Subcommittee may be assisted by experts.
2. The Subcommittee shall upon deciding the composition of the mission take into account the particular objectives of the mission.
3. (a) The Subcommittee shall consult confidentially the State Party concerned, in particular regarding the composition and size of the mission other than with regard to the participating members of the Subcommittee.
(b) The State Party concerned may oppose the inclusion of an expert or interpreter in the mission to the territory under its jurisdiction, whereupon the Subcommittee shall propose alternatives.
4. No member of the delegation, with the exception of interpreters, may be a national of the State to be visited. The conduct of the delegation and of all of its members shall be bound by the criteria of independence, impartiality, objectivity and confidentiality.
5. Experts shall be subordinate to and assist the Subcommittee. With regard to a mission, they shall in all respects act on the instruction of and under the authority of the Subcommittee. They shall in no case undertake any missions by themselves under the present Protocol.

Article 14

1. In order to establish a list of experts available for the Subcommittee, each State Party may propose no more than five national experts, qualified in the areas covered by the present Protocol, giving due consideration to gender balance.
2. As needed, the United Nations and specialized agencies may also propose experts to be included on that list.
3. The Subcommittee will annually notify the States Parties of the comprehensive list of experts.
4. In special cases, where specific knowledge or experience is required for a particular mission, and such knowledge or experience is not available on the list of experts, the Subcommittee may include in a mission an expert who is not on the list.
5. In selecting experts for a mission, the Subcommittee shall give primary consideration to the professional knowledge and skills required, taking into account regional and gender balance.

2. The Sub-Committee shall establish, by lot, a programme of visits to all States Parties making the declaration provided for in the preceding paragraph.

3. Such visits may be conducted jointly with the national mechanism.

4. Visits shall be conducted by at least two members of the Sub-Committee. They may be accompanied by experts of demonstrated professional experience and knowledge in the fields covered by the present Protocol and shall be selected by consensus from a roster of experts prepared on the basis of proposals made by the States Parties that have made the declaration provided for in paragraph 1 of this Article, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the United Nations Centre for Crime Prevention. In preparing the roster of experts, the States Parties concerned shall propose no more than five national experts.

5. The delegation making the visits and its members shall enjoy the same powers and duties conferred on the national mechanism under Articles 5, 6 and 7 paragraphs 1 (a) and 2.

6. The provisions of this Article shall enter into force when five States Parties to the present Protocol have made the declaration provided for in paragraph 1 of this Article. such declarations must be deposited by States Parties with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall transmit copies thereof to the other States Parties. A declaration may be withdrawn at any time by notification to the Secretary-General. Such declarations shall not become effective until six months after their notification.

Article 9 (old 8 revised)

1. The Sub-Committee:

- (a) Shall establish on the basis of a transparent procedure, a programme of regular missions to all States Parties. These missions may also include follow-up missions;
- (b) Shall also undertake such visits or missions as appear to be required in the circumstances and based on information received by the Sub-Committee and assessed by it as credible, with a view to furthering the aims of this Protocol;
- (c) Shall after a mission or a visit advise and assist the State Party in assessing the needs and appropriate measures for strengthening the protection of persons deprived of their liberty from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;
- (d) May make recommendations to the State Party on the mandate, the competence and the effective functioning as well as other relevant activities of an established national mechanism for the prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, in accordance with Article 15;
- (e) Shall transmit requests from a State Party for technical assistance and technical cooperation as well as facilitate the provision of such cooperation from the relevant United Nations bodies such as UNHCR, UNDP, ODCCP, UNICEF and UNIFEM.

2. The Sub-Committee shall send a written notification to the Government of the State Party concerned of its intention to organize a mission.

3. Before a mission is carried out, the Sub-Committee and the State Party concerned shall, if either of them so requests, enter into consultations with a view to agreeing without delay on the practical arrangements for the mission. Such consultations on the practical arrangements for the mission may not include negotiations on the obligations of a State Party under Articles 3 or 13.

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

9 During the first session of the Working Group, held from 19 to 30 October 1992, the then Articles 8, 10, 11, and 12 of the revised Costa Rica Draft of 1991 were discussed within the fourth basket of issues, 'Operation of the system'.¹⁰

10 As to Article 8, and specifically the question of which kinds of visits the SPT should conduct, some delegates found that the programme of regular, preventive visits was the primary aim of consideration. However, it was felt that such a system was not enough by itself and that specific or ad hoc visits should be foreseen. Others felt that a clearer textual distinction should be drawn between the regular and the specific visits.¹¹

11 One delegate distinguished between the words 'visit' and 'mission', on the basis that a visit was restricted to places of detention, while a mission might have other purposes to accomplish in a State. Another point was made that the programme of regular or fixed visits might lack responsiveness to changing circumstances and resource needs and that flexibility of administration could be an important attribute. A final suggestion was that notification of visits should be required.

12 As to Article 10, another issue raised during the discussions was the composition of the missions as such. Some delegations found that the need for experts to assist the mission was debatable, given that the members of the SPT themselves were to be experts in the relevant fields. Various other comments were raised regarding the rights and duties of such experts; the need to clarify the way in which they would be identified and selected, as well as what their specific functions would be.

13 With regard to Article 11, one delegation felt that care must be given when selecting the experts in order to assess their qualifications in such a way as to complement the qualifications represented by the members of the SPT. Several members of the Working Group questioned the authority given to a State party, by virtue of Article 11(2), to exclude a person from taking part in a mission.

14 Regarding Article 12, the issue of notification was heavily discussed. Several delegations made the point that a notification to a State of an upcoming mission might not be adequate in that it would not permit the State, as required by the OP, to ensure the availability of all facilities required for the mission. It was discussed whether such a notification should remain indefinitely valid or be limited to a certain period of time. Some delegations were concerned that specific notice of the time and places of a visit might be conducive to abuse. One delegation found that agreement of the State concerned should be required for each visit of the SPT, while others were of the opinion that this would undermine the purpose of the Protocol as such. However, the observation was made that a lack of notice could generate delay and difficulties in ensuring access to the places to be visited.

15 In the course of its second session from 25 October to 5 November 1993, the Working Group continued to consider Article 8. As to its paragraph 1, some delegations, referring to the ECPT, were in favour of replacing the word ‘missions’ with the word ‘visits’. Most delegations, however, preferred to maintain the distinction between the two notions, as it was CPT practice to refer to the word ‘mission’ in the case of a CPT-delegation entering a State territory and to refer to the notion ‘visit’ in the case of such a delegation visiting any one place of detention.¹²

16 With regard to the different kinds of missions, a number of delegations were in favour of inserting a provision allowing for non-regular and ad hoc missions. Some felt the need to specify the circumstances that could give rise to such other missions, while others found that this should be left to the discretion of the SPT.

17 As to Article 10, some delegations stated that the need for experts to assist the mission was not clearly established and there was a need to clarify the way in which they would be selected. Others felt that the presence of experts was necessary because of the workload to be carried and the flexibility required.

18 At the third session from 17 to 28 October 1994, it was felt that the issue dealt with in Article 12(1) should be addressed in the context of Article 8. Some delegations were of the opinion that consent or agreement of the State concerned should be required for each visit of a delegation of the SPT.¹³ Others pointed out that this would greatly diminish the preventive character of the new system and that such consent or agreement was already implied in the ratification of the Protocol.

19 With regard to the issue of notification, one delegation, supporting the delegation of Egypt, found that the OP should explicitly provide for a ‘reasonable interval of time’ between the notification of a State concerned and the dispatch of the SPT’s mission.

20 Articles 10 and 11 were commonly considered during the third session of the Working Group. Once again, the need for additional experts to assist a delegation’s mission was doubted by several delegations. Many delegations stressed the need to have clear criteria for the selection of such experts. Some proposed that the States parties should draw up a list of experts from which the SPT could make its choice. One delegation put forward a proposal to combine Articles 10 and 11 in a single article, another one put forward a proposal to amend the two articles in order to define the functions of advisers and the circumstances in which they might be employed.

21 During the fourth session of the Working Group, held from 30 October to 10 November 1995, Articles 10 and 11 were reconsidered. The representative of the Committee against Torture emphasized the importance of having experts in a delegation. In his opinion, the selection of experts should be performed by a delegation of the SPT that was to carry out a mission to a State party, and the main criterion for their selection should be their competence. An expert should not visit his or her own country and a Government should be able to object to the visit of one or another expert without giving reasons therefor.¹⁴

22 At its seventh plenary meeting, the Chairperson of the informal drafting group proposed a consolidated text for Articles 10 and 11 to serve as a basis for the second reading of the draft OP. This text had originally been proposed by the delegation of El Salvador, and had subsequently been amended to include all the views expressed during the informal drafting process.¹⁵

23 At the Working Group's sixth session, held from 13 to 24 October 1997, a general discussion on consolidated Articles 10 and 11 was opened.¹⁶ On 16 October 1997, the observer for Sweden submitted a proposal on Article 10, having taken into account the various proposals on consolidated Articles 10 and 11 submitted at earlier sessions, the discussions held on the issues, and the original text as submitted by Costa Rica in 1991. It contained the 'general rule' that missions would be carried out by at least two members of the SPT, a method by which a transparent roster of experts would be established and a safeguard ensuring the integrity and impartiality of experts. It foresaw that experts were subordinate to the SPT and that a State party could exclude an expert or interpreter from taking part in a mission to territory under its jurisdiction.

24 The representative of China also submitted a proposal on Articles 10 and 11, limiting the number of experts and stating that experts should be used only in exceptional cases subsequent to permission of the State concerned. The observer for the Committee against Torture shared his experience as a member of the CPT, where at least two CPT-members had taken part in visits, always with the assistance of experts who rendered technical assistance and had no political influence.

25 On 20 October 1997, a new text of Article 10 was submitted to the Working Group by the Chairperson of the drafting group.¹⁷ In this proposal, the already proposed roster of experts was missing. Finally, Article 10 was adopted and the matter of a roster of experts was included in a new Article 10 bis. The text of the proposed Article 10 bis was then adopted by the Working Group as new Article 14.¹⁸

26 The Working Group then held its eighth session from 4 to 15 October 1999. On 14 October 1999, the Working Group had before it the consolidated texts of various proposals relating to Articles 1, 8, 12, and 13, which—after some consideration—were then accepted to serve as a basis for future discussions.¹⁹

27 During the ninth session from 12 to 23 February 2001, the issues in question were discussed with regard to the alternative draft submitted by the delegation of Mexico with the support of GRULAC contained in its Article 23. It was felt, in particular, that the frequency of visits to be carried out by the SPT and whether they should be periodical, ad hoc or both, should be subject of further considerations.²⁰

28 In the proposal presented by the Chairperson-Rapporteur, the mandate of the SPT was discussed in Part III, where Article 13 established the different types of visits that the SPT would undertake.²¹

3. Issues of Interpretation

3.1 Types of Country Missions

30 The practice of the CPT served as a model for the drafting of Article 13 OP, which distinguishes between regular missions and follow-up missions.

31 In practice, the SPT (originally) referred to four types of missions: (regular) country missions, country follow-up missions, NPM advisory missions,²³ and OPCAT advisory missions. While NPM advisory missions had a strong focus on assisting the NPM and/or the State party concerned regarding the establishment/designation and effective functioning of the preventive mechanism through practical capacity-building activities, the OPCAT advisory missions were addressed to help States parties in implementing their (other) obligations set out in the Protocol. The latter were short missions, focusing on high-level talks with senior Government officials of the relevant ministries and bodies, as well as civil society representatives and any other relevant entities. However, in the course of 2015 the SPT found that ‘such categorization has at times proved limiting and has hindered [it] in the full and robust exercise of its mandate’. It therefore ‘decided to cease categorizing its visit and to formulate, from 2016, a plan best suited to the exigencies of each visit’.²⁴ Consequently, in 2016 each country mission addressed all aspects of the SPT’s preventive mandate, in particular its two primary responsibilities of visiting places of detention and advising on the establishment or operation of the NPMs. In the view of the SPT, ‘the new methodology magnified the practical impact of the visits, enabling the Subcommittee to better fulfil its mandate under Article 11 (1) (b) of the Optional Protocol’.²⁵

3.2 Programme of Country Missions

32 That the first programme of regular missions was to be established by lot was even included in Article 13(1) OP in order to underline the non-selectivity of the SPT. However, this only applied to the initial (annual) programme. Non-selectivity and impartiality does not mean that there must be an equal number of regular missions to each State party, irrespective of its size, the number of places of detention, and the conditions therein. On the contrary, to decide the frequency of missions on an equitable basis and in a non-selective manner means precisely to take these criteria into consideration, but not to target specific countries on arbitrary grounds. Moreover, the SPT shall take into account that under the Protocol, regular preventive visits are primarily the responsibility of NPMs, and that the experience of such mechanisms shall also be taken into consideration when deciding about further annual programmes of country missions.

32 The Maldives, Mauritius, and Sweden were the first three countries drawn by lots that should be visited by the SPT; they had been visited by the SPT during 2007 and early 2008. Already in the course of its initial period of work, the SPT began to develop certain guidelines on country missions. Consequently, it selected the States to be visited by a reasoned process, with reference to the principles laid down in Article 2 OP, taking into account various factors like the date of ratification of the Protocol, the establishment of a NPM, the geographical distribution of countries, the size and complexity of a State, and regional preventive monitoring as well as urgent issues reported.²⁶ Due to serious budgetary constraints, however, the SPT had to limit its programme of visits to three per year during its first years. On 18 January 2011, the SPT finally published its first Guidelines in relation to visits to States parties,²⁷ which had been revised later on in 2014.²⁸

33 According to Article 13(2), the SPT 'shall notify the States Parties of its programme in order that they may, without delay, make the necessary practical arrangements for the visits to be conducted'. The requirement of prior notification of a country mission is the result of a compromise during the drafting process; however, it should not be confused with the requirement of prior consent as demanded by some governments. Apart from constituting a certain concession to the Member States prior notification is necessary for the smooth functioning of the mission.

34 In practice, the programme of missions is being determined by the SPT in plenary on the advice of its regional teams. Until 2016, the programme was published afterwards without specifying any concrete dates of missions. In the course of 2016, the SPT decided 'that it will no longer produce annual visiting programmes', but rather announce on a periodic basis the next countries to be included in its programme of missions.²⁹ In order to enable the States parties to make the necessary practical arrangements for the missions to be carried out effectively, the SPT 'may inform' the State party concerned of its intention to undertake a mission to it. The dates of each mission are being made public one week after the notification to the respective State party.³⁰ In its first years of practice, the SPT also carried out preliminary missions shortly before the planned regular country missions in order to initiate the process of dialogue with the authorities. Such preliminary meetings in the view of the SPT 'proved to be an important part of preparation for the visits, representing an opportunity to fine-tune the programme and enhance facilitation of the work of the delegation'.³¹

3.3 Unannounced Visits to Places of Detention

35 Since the SPT, as the CPT, is authorized to conduct unannounced visits to places of detention, it shall not provide the authorities with a list of places of detention which it intends to visit. Article 13(2) OP only obliges the SPT to notify States of its programme of country missions but not of its programme of visits to places of detention during a particular country mission.³² The notification of all the members of the delegation is not only required for the purpose of obtaining visas or other travel permits, but also because the State party is entitled to oppose the inclusion of a specific expert.

36 Pursuant to its policy on reprisals³³ in relation to its visiting mandate, the SPT decided to implement specific measures prior to conducting a country mission in addition to the general notification of a mission.³⁴ In future, it will communicate this policy document to the States parties together with the notification of its mission programme, and States parties are requested to inform all those with whom the SPT may come into contact during (or after) its visit. During its preparations for a specific country mission, the SPT will examine all relevant information with regard to the occurrence of reprisals in the country to be visited. One of the SPT's members will be appointed focal point on reprisals. In case the issue of potential reprisals becomes a matter of concern, the SPT may contact the respective State party in order to alert it to the SPT's concern; it may also request a meeting with the State party's Permanent Mission to the UN Office or other international organizations in Geneva.³⁵

3.4 Composition of SPT Delegations and Conduct of Country Missions

37 A country mission shall be conducted by a delegation of the SPT consisting of no less than two members, the necessary staff from the OHCHR, interpreters, possibly security staff, and, if needed, 'experts of demonstrated professional experience and knowledge in the fields covered by the present Protocol'. In practice, SPT delegations are composed of two (to four) experts. As a general rule, although not stipulated in the Protocol, members of the delegation shall, with the exception of interpreters, not be nationals of the country to be visited, in order not to imply a conflict of interest with their capacity as independent and impartial members of the SPT.³⁶

38 The possibility to include experts in country missions of the SPT was highly controversial during the drafting of this provision.³⁷ Some delegations found that the need for experts to assist the mission was dubious, in view of the fact that the members of the SPT themselves were to be experts in the relevant fields. Taking into account, however, that even the CPT with more than forty members includes experts in its missions, such assistance may be crucial for the proper and professional implementation of country missions. Moreover, the inclusion of additional experts is an effective way to meet the requirements set out in Article 5 of the OP. In our opinion, it is, for instance, absolutely essential that forensic experts assist the SPT members on every country mission. Furthermore, it is advisable that the members conducting a mission, as far as possible, speak the language of the country to be visited in order to be able to communicate with Government officials, detainees, and others, without interpreters. If the two SPT members who speak the language of the country concerned, have the same professional background, the multidisciplinary composition of the delegation, which is of utmost importance, would not be guaranteed. The same applies to gender balance, as it is absolutely essential that enough women are included in the delegation, since interviews with female detainees should be conducted, as far as possible, by women.

39 Article 13(3) constitutes a compromise between the different views expressed during the drafting process. The possibility of being accompanied by experts was maintained, but the selection of experts was made subject to the following procedure. On the basis of proposals by States parties, the OHCHR and the UN Centre for International Crime Prevention in Vienna, a roster of experts shall be established. While States parties are prevented from proposing more than five national experts, such limitation does not apply to the two UN offices. As the OHCHR is providing staff and facilities to the SPT, this roster of experts shall be maintained there. In preparing for a particular country mission, the SPT shall, if needed, select experts from this roster and notify the Government of the country to be visited accordingly. The State party concerned may oppose the inclusion of a specific expert in the mission, whereupon the SPT shall propose another expert.

40 As the roster of experts is still in preparation, the SPT tends to select 'experts from the list of names proposed by States parties and from among experts widely recognized as having the required relevant expertise'.³⁸ According to the public reports on SPT missions, the SPT members so far have only been accompanied by external experts on three occasions (namely on its visits to the Maldives, Sweden, and Benin).³⁹

41 The SPT delegations carry out the missions in line with the principles laid down in Article 2 OP. During the missions, the delegations meet with representatives of the respective State authorities as well as with members of the NPMs, if already set up, and various other actors like experts from human rights and/or academic institutions and non-governmental organizations.⁴⁰

42 At the end of a visit to a specific place of detention, the delegation may provide the relevant authorities with preliminary oral feedback. Such feedback is aimed at highlighting 'generic and systemic issues', giving room for confidential discussions on the outcomes of the visit.⁴¹ Moreover, it gives an opportunity to communicate issues and situations requiring immediate action.

43 At the end of a country mission, the SPT delegation may then communicate preliminary observations to the authorities of the State party concerned. These preliminary observations may also be communicated to the NPMs, which may also take part in the final (or any other) meeting (if the State party in question approves).⁴² The delegation may raise any urgent issues requiring immediate action as well as seek to 'explore potential preventive measures in dialogue with the State party’ (and other actors) and to ‘establish an agreed framework for securing an effective post-visit continuous dialogue’.⁴³ Moreover, the delegation may as well raise individual cases with the State party in order to achieve the necessary protection of the person(s) concerned, taking into account of course the risk of possible reprisals.⁴⁴

3.5 Follow-up Missions

44 Article 13(4) OP also provides for the possibility of follow-up missions. Although the text authorizes the SPT only to ‘propose a short follow-up visit to a regular visit’, the decision to conduct a follow-up mission due to, for example, certain problems encountered during the regular mission, is the exclusive competence of the SPT, subject only to the possibility of objections in exceptional circumstances, as spelled out in Article 14(2) OP. Crucially, States are not allowed to object to a follow-up mission as such, only to visits to a particular place of detention.⁴⁵ Follow-up missions might also be used as a means to assess whether particular projects financed by the Special Fund established in accordance with Article 26 OP in fact contribute to the implementation of its recommendations after a regular country mission.⁴⁶ According to Guideline 1, the SPT may, if it considers it appropriate, decide to carry out a short follow-up mission as provided for in Article 13(4) OP.⁴⁷ Until the end of 2017, the SPT conducted only six follow-up missions (to Paraguay, Cambodia, the Maldives, Benin, Mexico, and Bolivia). While reports on the respective missions to Cambodia, the Maldives, Benin, Mexico, and Bolivia were not made public until November 2017, it can be drawn from the report on the SPT’s follow-up mission to Paraguay, that ‘[t]he purpose of this visit was to follow-up on the observations and recommendations issued by the Subcommittee in its report on its first regular visit to the country, which took place on 10–16 March 2009’. During this mission, the SPT focused on follow-up to its recommendations, particularly those regarding the NPM and the situation of persons deprived of their liberty at the Tacumbú National Prison in Asunción and at police stations. In addition to visiting places of detention, the representatives of the SPT met with a number of officials and with members of civil society.⁴⁸ Due to the serious budgetary constraints, however, follow-up missions had not been a priority of the SPT, given the fact that still not all the States parties to the Protocol have been visited until the end of 2017.

Article 14

Obligation of States Parties to Facilitate Visits by the Subcommittee to Places of Detention

1. In order to enable the Subcommittee on Prevention to fulfil its mandate, the States Parties to the present Protocol undertake to grant it:
 - (a) Unrestricted access to all information concerning the number of persons deprived of their liberty in places of detention as defined in article 4, as well as the number of places and their location;
 - (b) Unrestricted access to all information referring to the treatment of those persons as well as their conditions of detention;
 - (c) Subject to paragraph 2 below, unrestricted access to all places of detention and their installations and facilities;
 - (d) The opportunity to have private interviews with the persons deprived of their liberty without witnesses, either personally or with a translator if deemed necessary, as well as with any other person who the Subcommittee on Prevention believes may supply relevant information;
 - (e) The liberty to choose the places it wants to visit and the persons it wants to interview.
2. Objection to a visit to a particular place of detention may be made only on urgent and compelling grounds of national defence, public safety, natural disaster or serious disorder in the place to be visited that temporarily prevent the carrying out of such a visit. The existence of a declared state of emergency as such shall not be invoked by a State Party as a reason to object to a visit.

1. Introduction

1 Article 14 OP is closely related to Article 12 OP and further defines the obligation of States parties to cooperate with the SPT in facilitating its preventive visits to places of detention. During the discussions in the Working Group, this Article proved to be just as controversial as Article 12 OP.¹ In particular, certain States objected to the right of the SPT to conduct unannounced visits to places of detention and private interviews with detainees. Since their attempts to make access of the SPT to places of detention and its right to conduct private interviews with detainees subject to national laws and regulations failed, they finally voted against the OP in the Working Group, the Commission on Human Rights, and ECOSOC.² On the other hand, no explicit reference to unannounced visits to places of detention is included in Articles 12 or 14 OP, and Article 14(2) contains the right of States parties to object to a visit of a particular place of detention on certain urgent and compelling grounds, similar to Article 9 ECPT.

1. Subject to the provisions of Article 9 paragraph 3, when the Government of a State Party to the present Protocol has been informed of a mission assigned to one or more delegate(s), the latter shall be authorised to visit in all circumstances and without previous notice any place of detention within the jurisdiction of the State Party.
2. The delegates shall receive from the State Party concerned all facilities for the accomplishment of their task. They may, in particular, obtain all information about the places where there are persons deprived of their liberty and interview them there without witnesses and at leisure.
3. Delegates may enter into contact with the families, friends and lawyers of persons deprived of their liberty.
4. During each visit, the delegates shall verify that persons deprived of their liberty are being treated in conformity with the provisions of the Convention.
5. If appropriate, they shall at once submit observations and recommendations to the competent authorities of the State Party concerned.
6. They shall submit a full report on their mission, with their observations and recommendations, to the Committee.

3 *Revised Costa Rica Draft (15 January 1991)*⁴

1. The Subcommittee shall notify the Government of the State Party concerned of its intention to organize a mission. After such notification, it may at any time visit any place referred to in Article 1 paragraph 1.
2. The State Party within whose jurisdiction a mission is to take place or is being carried out shall provide the delegation with all the facilities necessary for the proper fulfilment of their tasks and shall not obstruct by any means or measures the programme of visits or any other activities which the delegation is carrying out specifically for or in relation to the visits. In particular, the State Party shall provide the delegation with the following facilities:

- (a) access to its territory and the right to travel without restrictions;
- (b) full information on the places referred to in Article 1 paragraph 1, including information requested about specific persons;
- (c) unlimited access to any place referred to in Article 1 paragraph 1, including the right to move inside such places without restriction;
- (d) assistance in gaining access to places where the delegation has reason to believe that persons may be deprived of their liberty;
- (e) producing any person deprived of his liberty whom the delegation wishes to interview, at the request of the delegation and at a convenient location;
- (f) other information available to the State Party which is necessary for the delegation to carry out its task.

3. Members of the delegation may interview in private, inside or outside his place of detention, without witnesses, and for the time they deem necessary, any person deprived of his liberty under the terms of Article 1. They may also communicate without restriction with relatives, friends, lawyers and doctors of persons who are or have been deprived of their liberty, and with any other person or organization that they think may be able to provide them with relevant information for their mission. In seeking such information, the delegation shall have regard to applicable rules of national law relating to data protection and principles of medical ethics.

4. No authority or official shall order, apply, permit or tolerate any sanction against any person or organization for having communicated to the Subcommittee or to the delegates any information whether true or false, and no such person or organization shall be otherwise prejudiced in any way.

5. In urgent cases the delegation shall at once submit observations and recommendations either of general or specific nature to the competent authorities of the State Party concerned.

1. In the context of a mission, the competent authorities of the State Party concerned may make representations to the Subcommittee or its delegation against a particular visit if urgent and compelling reasons relating to serious disorder in the particular place to be visited temporarily prevent the carrying out of the visit.

2. Following any such representation, the Subcommittee and the State Party shall immediately enter into consultations in order to clarify the situation and seek agreement on arrangements to enable the Subcommittee to exercise its functions expeditiously. Such arrangements may include the transfer to another place of any person whom the Subcommittee proposed to visit. Until the visit takes place, the State Party shall provide information to the Subcommittee about any person concerned.

2. The State Party within whose jurisdiction a mission is to take place or is being carried out shall provide the delegation with all the facilities necessary for the proper fulfilment of their tasks and promote the full cooperation of all competent authorities. In particular, the State Party shall provide the delegation [in accordance with national laws and regulations] with the following:

- (a) Access to its territory [and the right to travel without restriction] [for the purposes of the mission], [to freely visit places and persons referred to in Article 1];
- (b) All relevant information on the places referred to [in Article 1], [in the detailed plan] including information requested about specific persons;

Article 13

1. In exceptional circumstances, in the context of a mission the competent authorities of the State Party concerned may make representations to the Sub-Committee or its delegation against a particular visit. Such representations with respect to the particular place to be visited may only be made on the grounds that [serious] disorder, [national defence, public safety, medical condition of a person and/or urgent interrogation relating to a serious crime is in progress] temporarily prevent the carrying out of the visit. The existence or [formal] declaration of a State of Emergency as such shall not be invoked by a State Party as a reason to object to a visit.

2. Following any such representation, the Sub-Committee and the State Party shall immediately enter into consultations regarding the circumstances and seek agreement on arrangements to enable the Sub-Committee to exercise its functions expeditiously. [Such arrangements may include the transfer to another place of any person whom the Sub-Committee proposed to visit.] Until the visit takes place, the State Party shall provide information to the Sub-Committee about any person concerned.

*5 Text of the Articles which Constitute the Basis for Future Work after the Second Reading (2 December 1999)*⁶

Article 12

[1. The Subcommittee and the State Party shall cooperate with a view to the effective fulfilment of the [mission] [visit]. In particular, the State Party shall provide:

- (a) The delegation with access to, and freedom of movement within, any territory under its jurisdiction [and control] for the conduct of the [mission] [visit];
- (b) The Subcommittee or its delegations with all information relevant to the effective conduct of the [mission] [visit], including in particular on any person or places referred to in Article 1 of the Protocol;
- (c) The delegation with access to and within any place referred to in Article 1 of the Protocol;
- (d) The delegation with access to persons referred to in Article 1 of the Protocol, and the opportunity for private interviews with them;
- (e) The Subcommittee and its delegation with the opportunity to communicate freely with any other person who is in a position to supply relevant information.

[2. The obligations referred to above shall be subject to any arrangements that the State Party concerned considers necessary for:

- [(a) The protection of sensitive areas [equipment] or information [based on imperative ground of national security] [or economic, technological or scientific secrets];]
- [(b) The protection of any constitutional obligations the State Party concerned may have with regard to proprietary rights, searches and seizures, or other constitutional rights [of individuals];]
- [(c) The physical protection and safety of persons, including the members of the Subcommittee; and]
- [(d) The protection of personal data of individuals as required by national legislation [consistent with human rights principles]].

Article 13

1. In exceptional circumstances, [in the context of a mission,] the competent authorities of the State Party concerned may make objections to the Sub-Committee [or its delegation] against a particular visit [or a mission]. Objections may only be made on [urgent and compelling] grounds of national defence, public [or individual] safety, natural disasters, serious disorder in [the place to be visited] [places where persons are detained,] [the medical condition of a person] [or that an urgent interrogation relating to a serious crime is in progress] [which temporarily prevent the carrying out

6 *Mexican Draft (13 February 2001)*⁷

Article 16

1. In order to enable the Sub-Committee to fulfil its mandate as set out in Article 15, States Parties undertake to:

- (a) Facilitate contact between the Sub-Committee and national mechanisms;
- (b) Receive the Sub-Committee in their territory when required;
- (c) Implement the recommendations of the Sub-Committee.

2. The Sub-Committee may request any information from national mechanisms that enable it to assess needs and the measures to be taken to strengthen the protection of persons deprived of their liberty against torture and other forms of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, including information concerning the number and location of places of detention, the persons deprived of their liberty and their treatment.

Article 23

1. A State Party to the present Protocol may at any time declare under this Article that it agrees to receive a delegation of the Sub-Committee to carry out, in accordance with the present Protocol, visits to any territory under its jurisdiction where persons deprived of their liberty by a public authority or at its instigation or with its consent or acquiescence are or may be held.

2. The Sub-Committee shall establish, by lot, a programme of visits to all States Parties making the declaration provided for in the preceding paragraph.

3. Such visits may be conducted jointly with the national mechanism.

4. Visits shall be conducted by at least two members of the Sub-Committee. They may be accompanied by experts of demonstrated professional experience and knowledge in the fields covered by the present Protocol and shall be selected by consensus from a roster of experts prepared on the basis of proposals made by the States Parties that have made the declaration provided for in paragraph 1 of this Article, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the United Nations Centre for Crime Prevention. In preparing the roster of experts, the States Parties concerned shall propose no more than five national experts.

5. The delegation making the visits and its members shall enjoy the same powers and duties conferred on the national mechanism under Articles 5, 6 and 7 paragraphs 1 (a) and 2.

6. The provisions of this Article shall enter into force when five States Parties to the present Protocol have made the declaration provided for in paragraph 1 of this Article. Such declarations must be deposited by States Parties with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall transmit copies thereof to the other States Parties. A declaration may be withdrawn at any time by notification to the Secretary-General. Such declarations shall not become effective until six months after their notification.

7 *EU Draft (22 February 2001)*⁸

1. The Sub-Committee and the State Party shall cooperate with a view to the effective fulfilment of the mission. In particular, the State Party shall provide the Sub-Committee with:

- (a) Unrestricted access to all information, deemed relevant by the Sub-Committee, concerning the number of persons deprived of their liberty, in accordance with Article 16 of the Convention, as well as the number of places and their location;
- (b) Unrestricted access to all information deemed relevant by the Sub-Committee, concerning the treatment and the conditions of detention;
- (c) Access to and freedom of movement within any territory under its jurisdiction and control for the conduct of the mission;
- (d) All information deemed relevant by the Sub-Committee to the effective conduct of the mission, including in particular on any person or places referred to in Article 3 of the Protocol;
- (e) Access to and within any place referred to in Article 3 of the Protocol;
- (f) Access to persons referred to in Article 3 of the Protocol, and the opportunity for private interviews with them;
- (g) The opportunity to communicate freely with any person whom they believe can supply relevant information.

2. With regard to a particular visit, the obligations referred to under paragraph 1 shall be implemented in a manner consistent with national law and professional ethics complimentary to international human rights standards.

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

8 During the first session of the Working Group, held from 19 to 30 October 1992, the issues were discussed under the then Article 12 and within the fourth basket of issues 'Operation of the system'.⁹

9 One of the issues raised during the discussion was access to information. Several delegates noted that information on specific persons might be subject to laws on privacy and data protection or the rules of professional ethics. Some felt that these paragraphs (paragraphs 2(b), (f), and 3) should be redrafted to reflect the corresponding principles of the ECPT. One delegation was of the opinion that the consent of the person to be interviewed was essential, although a presumption of consent might be made for cases lacking an explicit refusal of consent. The delegation also noted particular concerns regarding the legal capacity of minors and mental patients to declare their consent. Another delegation pointed out that the aim of the provision was to protect the individual against abuse of private or personal information, rather than the State or public authority, and the provision should state the right to privacy and international standards relating thereto.¹⁰

10 With regard to Article 13 of the revised Costa Rica Draft, it was generally considered that the declaration of a 'state of emergency' or similar derogation from legal regularity for an extended period should not, by itself, justify the suspension of a visit under the OP. A reference was made to the corresponding Article 9 ECPT, which is more detailed in this regard and covers 'public safety' as a safeguard for such interests. In the course of the discussion, the observation was made that this article was in the nature of a 'negotiated reservation' to the Protocol, and that such reservations must be as limited as possible in order to avoid abuse. It was further suggested that the circumstances in which suspension would be possible should be limited and carefully detailed in the Protocol in order to avoid problems that could diminish the body's effectiveness.

11 At its third session from 17 to 28 October 1994, the Working Group continued to consider Article 12.¹¹ During the discussions, the need to provide a delegation of the Subcommittee with unrestricted access to the places of detention was once again strongly emphasized. As to Article 13, most delegations found that the conditions under which a State party might object to a visit should be explicitly defined. It was proposed that a State could only in exceptional circumstances deny the SPT access to detention facilities. These circumstances would include, for example, national security concerns, public safety, the medical condition of a person, disorder in the detention facilities, or if the visit were to coincide with an urgent interrogation relating to a serious crime.

12 During the sixth and seventh sessions (13 to 24 October 1997, 28 September to 9 October 1998) the Working Group primarily discussed Article 12.¹² Regarding Article 13, it was again emphasized that representations could only be made in exceptional circumstances and with a view to a specific visit or a specific interview, not to a mission as a whole. In this regard, references were often made to Article 9 ECPT.¹³ As it was stated that torture was most often practised in precisely the circumstances that were listed as exceptional in Article 13, several delegations felt that if Article 13 was to be kept in the Protocol, the list of circumstances contained therein should be extremely narrow. Moreover, it was proposed to replace the term 'may make representations' by the term 'may object'.

13 Upon the proposal of the Chairperson-Rapporteur, Article 13 was referred to the drafting group for further examination. As no consensus had been reached on any of the possible approaches, the drafting group had finally decided to submit to the plenary the revised text of Article 13 as proposed by the Chairperson.¹⁴ This text was based on the understanding that it was essential for some delegations to point to a close relationship between Article 13 and Article 12, in particular relating to the issue of national legislation.

14 In the course of the following discussions, some delegations stated that they could only accept this proposal if their view was put on record regarding the similarity in content between Article 13 and Article 12, including the nota bene.¹⁵ On this understanding, the Working Group decided to add Article 13 to the text of Articles which constituted the basis for future work.¹⁶

15 In the proposal presented by the Chairperson-Rapporteur, the mandate of the SPT was described in Part III, including three main areas: visits to places of detention; technical assistance; and cooperation for the prevention of torture with relevant UN organs as well as international, regional and national institutions. Article 12 set out the obligations of States vis-à-vis the SPT, whereas Article 14 listed the obligations of States regarding visits and referred to the situations in which visits could be objected to.¹⁷

16 At its fiftieth meeting on 22 April 2002, the Commission on Human Rights finally adopted the text of the OP submitted by the Chairperson-Rapporteur at the tenth session of the Working Group by twenty-nine votes to ten.¹⁸

3. Issues of Interpretation

3.1 Unrestricted Access to Places of Detention, Information, and Documentation

17 Article 14 OP has to be read in conjunction with Article 12 and the overall principle of cooperation between the SPT and States parties, as stipulated in Article 2(4) OP.¹⁹ The general duty of States parties under Articles 4 and 12(1) to allow missions of the SPT on their territory and to grant it access to all places of detention is further defined by the obligation to grant the SPT unrestricted access to all relevant information and documentation. Among the documentation is included a full list of all places of detention and their precise location, the number of detainees in each place of detention, prison registers, incidents of torture, ill-treatment and deaths in custody, individual case files, and medical documentation.²⁰ This duty to provide information to the SPT in advance and during its country missions derives from Articles 12(b) and 14(1)(a) and (b) OP.

18 In accordance with Article 13(2), the SPT shall notify the State party concerned of its intention to carry out a mission in order for the Government to make the necessary practical arrangements. But the Protocol, as the ECPT, does not contain any provision requiring any prior notification of the precise places of detention the SPT wishes to visit.²¹ Article 14(1)(e) clearly emphasizes the liberty of the SPT to choose the places it wants to visit, and Article 14(1)(c) establishes an explicit obligation of States parties to grant the SPT 'unrestricted access to all places of detention and their installations and facilities', subject only to the possibility of objections in exceptional circumstances under Article 14(2). Taking into account the object and purpose of preventive visits to places of detention, the respective practice of the CPT,²² and the discussion of Article 4 and 12 OP above, the term ‘unrestricted access’ must be interpreted as permitting unannounced visits at all times, irrespective of any national laws and regulations to the contrary.²³ In fact, this is the only interpretation that is in line with the object and purpose of the Protocol as such.²⁴ States parties have to ensure that the respective laws are modified for the purpose of granting the SPT such unrestricted access.

19 With regard to methodology and logistics, ‘the Subcommittee requests information from the State party to be visited concerning the legislation and institutional and system features related to deprivation of liberty, as well as statistical and other information concerning their operation in practice’. The information gathered is summarized in a country brief prepared by the SPT.²⁵ Shortly before a planned country mission, the SPT tries to carry out so-called preliminary missions for preparatory purposes as often as possible and to initiate the process of dialogue with the respective authorities.²⁶ In practice, such initial missions to States parties, conducted by some SPT members, have proven to be best suited to deliver important information about the SPT and its mandate in general as well as to stress the confidential nature of its work.²⁷

20 Within the respective places of detention, the SPT enjoys the right of unrestricted access to all installations and facilities in accordance with Article 14(1)(c). This includes all buildings belonging to a detention facility, the cells and living quarters of detainees, isolation and punishment cells, courtyards, exercise areas, kitchens, workshops, educational and medical facilities, sanitary installations, staff quarters, etc.²⁸ It is important that the delegation can move freely around within the place of detention and choose the rooms and facilities it wishes to see, without any surveillance by prison staff.

3.2 Private Interviews with Detainees and Any Other Person Who the SPT Believes May Supply Relevant Information

21 Most importantly, the SPT, pursuant to Article 14(1)(e), may choose the persons, including detainees, witnesses, and prison staff, it wants to interview. Under Article 14(1)(d), States parties shall grant the SPT not only the right, but the practical ‘opportunity to have private interviews with the persons deprived of their liberty without witnesses, either personally or with a translator if deemed necessary, as well as with any other person who the Subcommittee believes may supply relevant information’. These other persons may be alleged victims who are no longer detained, family members of detainees, witnesses, lawyers, doctors, prison staff, NGO and media representatives, or anybody who wishes to provide the SPT with information. However, the SPT may only conduct an interview if the detainee or other person concerned voluntarily agrees to speak with the delegation after he or she has been fully informed of the reasons for the interview and the potential risks involved. Although not mentioned in the OP, this is an important limitation on the SPT's right to conduct interviews, which is a general rule of professional fact-finding based on the right to privacy of the person concerned and the obligation of visiting bodies to protect detainees and other interview partners against potential reprisals by police or prison staff.²⁹ Often detainees are afraid of reprisals, and the delegation must respect such fears and refrain from putting any pressure on the person concerned. In practice, the SPT's visiting delegations regularly enter into 'empirical fact-finding and discussions' not only with detainees but with various stakeholders, including officials of ministries and other governmental institutions, members of judicial or prosecutorial authorities, national human rights institutions, professional bodies, and representatives of civil society. In countries where NPMs are already existent, their members are important interlocutors as well of course.³⁰ It gathers its information independently from various sources, 'including direct observation, interviews, medical examination and perusal of documentation'.³¹

22 The term 'private interviews' means that no public official of the State concerned is allowed to watch the persons involved in the interview and/or to listen to their conversations. It is important that the delegation chooses a room in which the detainee feels comfortable and where the risk of being monitored is as low as possible. Usually, it is detainees themselves who know best where they feel safe to conduct the interview. Rooms provided by the prison administration for such interviews shall only be accepted if no other place is available and if the detainee voluntarily agrees. Private interviews should be conducted with individual detainees and, as far as possible, not with a group of detainees. The person conducting the interview shall not be alone with the detainee, but be assisted at least by one person taking the notes and, if necessary, by an interpreter. If a detainee alleges to have been subject to torture, it is always advisable to conduct a forensic examination. Signs of torture, such as scars and wounds inflicted should, when possible, be documented by photographic means, provided that the person concerned agrees.

23 Private interviews with detainees are indispensable for an objective assessment of practices of torture and ill-treatment. After all, torture usually takes place behind closed doors, and the authorities regularly try to conceal the evidence. Since there are usually few witnesses or other available evidence, it is extremely difficult to prove torture. Detainees who allege they were subjected to torture, and who are still detained in the place of the alleged torture, are often, and with good reason, afraid of reprisals.³² As such, they would never speak openly about their experiences unless sure that their testimony was not monitored by prison staff. It is, therefore, of utmost importance that the person conducting the interview asks the detainee whether his or her allegations should be kept strictly confidential or whether they can be raised with the authorities and included in the mission report. Any agreement made regarding the extent to which allegations of torture may be made public must be voluntary and based on informed consent. No pressure, whatsoever, shall be put on the detainee. In case of doubt, the testimony shall be kept confidential.

24 In September 2014, the SPT suspended its mission to Azerbaijan due to heavy difficulties encountered in carrying out its mandate under the Protocol. The delegation had been unable to visit several places of detention due to a lack of co-operation of the respective Azerbaijan authorities. Thus, given the serious breaches of the OP, the delegation found that the integrity of its visit had been impaired to such an extent that the visit had to be suspended.³³ After having been denied access to places in several parts of the country where it suspected people to be deprived of their liberty by the national Security Service, the Subcommittee suspended its mission to Ukraine in May 2016. Again, the SPT delegation concluded that the integrity of the mission had been compromised to such an extent that it had to be suspended, as the SPT mandate could not be fully carried out.³⁴ In October 2017, the SPT suspended a mission to Rwanda due to a series of obstructions imposed by authorities, such as accessing some places of detention, confidentiality of certain interviews, and over concerns that some interviewees could face reprisals.

3.3 Objections by States to a Particular Visit

25 The only reason to deny the SPT access to a particular place of detention is an objection by the State party on the basis of Article 14(2) OP. During the discussions in the Working Group, delegates often referred to Article 9 ECPT as a model for an exception to the obligation to allow visits at any time to any place. According to this provision, the authorities 'may make representations to the Committee against a visit at the time or to the particular place proposed by the Committee'. Such representations may be made only in exceptional circumstances on grounds of national defence, public safety, serious disorder in a place of detention, the medical detention of a detainee, or an ongoing interrogation relating to a serious crime. Following such representations, the CPT and the State party shall immediately enter into consultations in order to seek agreement on arrangements to enable the CPT to exercise its functions expeditiously.³⁵ Article 13 of the Costa Rica Draft contained a similar provision,³⁶ but many delegations felt the need to formulate such a provision as limited in nature as possible to avoid abuse.³⁷ It was also stressed that objections could only be made in exceptional circumstances and with a view to a specific visit or a specific interview, not to a mission as a whole.³⁸

26 Compared to its model, Article 14(2) OP is formulated in narrower and somewhat more cautious terms. The reasons for an objection to a visit are based on Article 9(1) ECPT, but do not contain ongoing interrogations or the medical condition of detainees. The ground of natural disaster has been added, however, because it is regarded as having the least potential for misuse. Instead of 'exceptional circumstances', the Protocol speaks about 'urgent and compelling grounds'. Article 14(2) is clear that States parties may only object 'to a visit to a particular place of detention' and not to the mission as a whole. This

³³ See SPT, 'Eighth Annual Report of the Subcommittee on Prevention of Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment' (2015) UN Doc CAT/C/54/2, para 46.

right is further limited as States may also not, as Article 9(1) ECPT provides, object to 'a visit at the time'. The word 'representations' was replaced by 'objection' and the consultation process in Article 9(2) was deleted. But Article 14(2) spells out that an objection is always related to only temporarily preventing the carrying out of such a visit. This means that the State party must, in principle, find a solution while the mission is ongoing. Of course, a natural disaster might be so grave or a prison riot might last for such an extended period of time that the delegation is prevented from visiting a particular place of detention for the entire time of the mission. However, such cases are clearly very exceptional and shall be solved by invoking the principle of cooperation in Article 2(4) OP. Until the end of 2017, no such objection had been made by any State party. In the case of Honduras for example, where a grave political and social crisis was going on during the SPT's mission in 2009, the SPT itself decided to focus on the prevention of torture and other forms of ill-treatment in the context of the protest movement and at the same time expressed its gratitude to the Honduran authorities who facilitated the mission.³⁹

27 The final sentence of Article 14(2) provides that the 'existence of a declared state of emergency as such shall not be invoked by a State Party as a reason to object to a visit'. This provision has been interpreted as prohibiting a State party to 'declare a state of emergency in order to avoid a visit'.⁴⁰ In our opinion, States are not prevented from declaring a state of emergency, but from invoking an already declared state of emergency as a reason to object to a visit. This means that under Article 14(2) even the fact of a declared state of emergency on the grounds of a natural disaster or an armed conflict shall not be used as a reason for objecting to a visit to, eg, a camp of internally displaced persons or to a prisoners of war camp.⁴¹ A State party may only object to a visit if, in addition to the ongoing armed conflict or natural disaster, there are urgent or compelling grounds of a temporary nature which are invoked for postponing the visit for a day or two. The last sentence, therefore, serves as an important safeguard against any abuse of this exceptional clause by a State party.

1. Introduction

1 Torture usually takes place behind closed doors in a situation of powerlessness of the victim, without witnesses. Apart from the results of a forensic investigation, which are usually not available to detainees, there is hardly any evidence which the victim can use to prove that he or she had been subjected to torture. After having made a confession or provided information under torture, victims are often threatened to not report on their experience and even forced by their tormenters to sign a written statement to the effect that they had not been subjected to any form of torture or ill-treatment.

2 As torture constitutes one of the most serious human rights violations, which is absolutely prohibited even in the most exceptional circumstances, the authorities responsible as well as States in general have a strong interest in denying practices of torture. According to our experience, even democratic governments with a highly developed human rights culture prefer to believe their law enforcement agencies rather than to investigate seriously allegations of torture. If accused of torture before an international body, they often react as strongly against such allegations as governments responsible for a systematic practise of torture.

3 This combination of factors, ie the powerlessness of the victim and the difficulties in proving torture on the one hand, and the strong interest of States to deny torture on the other, leads to another form of victimization. If a person alleges torture before any domestic or international body, the authorities directly accused, and often even the highest authorities of the country, not only deny these allegations but also accuse the claimant, who often is detained because of being accused of having committed a crime, as not trustworthy, as defamatory, as only wishing to avoid a criminal conviction by alleging that the confession he or she made before the police was made under torture. In addition, such persons are often threatened, harassed, or even again subjected to torture or killed.

4 This short analysis of a vicious circle, which can be confirmed by most organizations and monitoring bodies active in the field of torture prevention and/or assistance of torture victims, leads to three major conclusions:

- Efforts of combating torture must break through this vicious circle by unveiling the secrecy around torture and detention. The most effective means is by opening the doors of detention centres to independent scrutiny, monitoring, and preventive visits.
- Monitoring bodies which conduct prison visits must ensure that interviews with detainees are made on a strictly voluntary basis and are conducted in an atmosphere of mutual trust and respect, and that the information received from detainees is kept strictly confidential, unless the person concerned, on the basis of the principle of informed consent, voluntarily agrees to any form of publication.
- Detainees, witnesses, and other persons who provide any form of information to a visiting body must be protected, as far as possible, against any form of reprisals or re-victimization because of having agreed to provide evidence.

5 The need to protect detainees and other sources of information against reprisals has been recognized, eg in the terms of reference for fact-finding missions by UN special procedures which provide for guarantees by the Government that invited them to visit its country to the effect that 'no persons, official or private individuals who have been in contact with the special rapporteur/representative in relation to the mandate will for this reason suffer threats, harassment or punishment or be subjected to judicial proceedings'.¹ In our experience, the protection of interview partners in custody or human rights defenders against reprisals is the most difficult aspect of conducting country missions, visits to places of detention, and private interviews with detainees. Even if all precautionary measures in relation to the privacy of the interview and confidentiality of the information received have been fully complied with, the very fact that a particular individual was willing to speak to the Special Rapporteur can usually not be disguised from the staff of the place of detention or other State authorities concerned. After the Special Rapporteur leaves a particular detention facility or the country in general, he has only very limited means of monitoring whether the assurances received by the Government have in fact been complied with or not.

6 The ECPT does not contain a specific provision aimed at protecting detainees and other sources of information provided to the CPT during country missions against reprisals. But such an obligation of States parties can, of course, be derived from their obligation under Article 3 ECPT to cooperate with the CPT, and the practice of the CPT, the ICRC, and similar bodies carrying out visits to places of detention reflects their concern for the protection of their sources of information against reprisals and victimization.²

7 Article 15 OP, therefore, constitutes the first explicit provision in a human rights treaty which aims at protecting detainees and other persons or organizations against any

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

10 During the first session of the Working Group, held from 19 to 30 October 1992, Article 12 of the revised Costa Rica Draft of 1991 was discussed under the fourth basket of issues ‘Operation of the system’.⁸ Regarding Article 12(4), concern was expressed that this provision might, inter alia, have the effect of preventing recourse to domestic remedies for false or defamatory statements or breaching duties of confidence. One delegation considered that the principle of confidentiality should alleviate any legitimate concerns of this nature. It was argued, furthermore, that this degree of immunity from civil liability was excessive and unnecessary. Consequently, the issues addressed in Article 12(4) of the then draft text were not included in any of the following proposals.

³ Similar provisions have now been included in other Optional Protocols (cf Art 11 OP-CEDAW, Art 13 OP-ICESCR, and Art 4 OP3-CRC). Reprisals in the Context of United Nations Human Rights Mechanisms (2015) UN Doc HRI/MC/2015/3 of 13 April 2015, Annex I.

11 At the Working Group's seventh session from 28 September to 9 October 1998, it was generally felt that Article 12 was of crucial importance to the whole document since it contained references to the basic commitments that States would accept by ratifying the OP. The purpose of this Article was therefore to define what host governments should offer the SPT in terms of cooperation, information, and assistance. The general approach of all delegations was that the contents of the present Article 12 could be reduced to several core elements of the visits, including access to the territory, provisions of information, access to places of detention, and access to individual persons, as well as the opportunity for private interviews with such individuals and the opportunity to communicate with persons who were in a position to supply relevant information.⁹ Still, the delegations had failed to arrive at a final text of Article 12. Thus, its text was included in Annex II to the seventh report of the Working Group to serve as a basis for future work.¹⁰ However, there was an understanding reached in the Working Group, which was reflected in one of three notes, stating: 'The protection of persons who have communicated with the Subcommittee will be addressed in a separate Article.'¹¹

12 At the tenth session of the Working Group, held from 14 to 25 January 2002,¹² the issue of so-called victimization was taken up again by the Chairperson-Rapporteur in her draft in a new Article 15.¹³

3. Issues of Interpretation

13 Article 15 OP is identical to Article 12(4) of the revised Costa Rica Draft of 1991.¹⁴ This does not mean, however, that this provision was not controversial. On the contrary, delegates in the Working Group had expressed strong concerns that this provision might have the effect of preventing recourse to domestic remedies for false or defamatory statements and would in fact provide for immunity from civil liability, which was considered excessive and unnecessary.¹⁵ After the respective provision was deleted from the various drafts, the Chairperson-Rapporteur in her draft of January 2002 reintroduced it again in the version as originally proposed by Costa Rica.

14 The word 'sanction' is more formal than mere factual reprisals and includes civil liability and criminal sanctions. The term 'reprisals' is often used to describe punishment practices inflicted by guards or detaining authorities against detainees who have reported to independent monitors. Being defined as an act of revenge or retaliation, the term 'reprisal' is neither exact nor precise, since the effects suffered by individuals subjected to torture and other forms of ill-treatment do not result from committing an 'offence' justifying revenge or punishment. Therefore, the more generic term ‘sanction’, also used in Articles 15 and 21 OP, describing any punishment resulting from mere contact with an independent monitor, seems to be more adequate.¹⁶ In addition, the phrase ‘whether true or false’ indicates that even completely false and slanderous accusations against particular individuals of having committed the crime of torture are immune from civil or criminal liability. This is indeed a fairly far-reaching protection of all persons and organizations for having provided relevant information to the SPT, and States parties are under a respective obligation to provide for specific immunities in their civil and criminal codes. But in view of the object and purpose of the Protocol and the danger in which detainees and other persons providing respective information concerning torture to international monitoring bodies often find themselves,¹⁷ such a far-reaching protection seems justified. On the other hand, in assessing the facts and in making reports public in accordance with Article 16(2) and (4) OP, both the CAT Committee and the SPT also have a specific responsibility vis-à-vis police officers, prison guards, and other individuals who might have been falsely accused of torture. This is underlined by the SPT’s duty of confidentiality under Article 2(3) OP.¹⁸

15 On 23 March 2012, France was the first State party issuing a declaration relating to Article 15. It declared that

[p]ursuant to articles 15 and 21 of the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, no French authority or official shall order, apply, permit or tolerate any sanction against any person or organization for having communicated to the SPT or to its delegates or to the national preventive mechanism any information, whether true or false, and no such person or organization shall be otherwise prejudiced in any way, provided that, in the case of false information, the person or organization in question was unaware of the false nature of the information at the time of its communication and, moreover, without prejudice to the legal remedies that persons who are implicated may invoke for harm suffered as a result of the communication of false information about them.

16 Already in its second Annual Report, the SPT expressed its concerns about the possibility of reprisals after its visits.¹⁹ Persons deprived of their liberty who had been interviewed by members of the SPT may have been threatened if they did not reveal the content of their interviews or may have been punished for having spoken with the delegation. Also, the SPT had been informed about the fact that some interviewees might have been warned in advance not to say anything to the SPT experts. Thus, the SPT called on the authorities of each State visited to verify whether reprisals had in fact occurred and ‘to take urgent action to protect all persons concerned’.²⁰ Later on, it stressed the importance of NPMs in this context,²¹ as ‘[e]arly follow-up visits by NPMs and/or civil society . . . may offer a potential safeguard’.²²

17 During 2012, the SPT had established (among others) an ad hoc working group on reprisals²³ in order to develop a proactive policy asserting the SPT's strong commitment to preventing reprisals.²⁴ The working group concluded its work in 2014, having drafted an interim working tool for the SPT, which was adopted by the SPT at its twenty-fifth session (in February 2015).²⁵ A revised version of this policy was adopted at the SPT's twenty-eighth session (in February 2016).²⁶

18 The policy as such contains general principles (I) as well as a general operational practice (II), subdivided into specific (III) and protective measures (IV) or rather awareness-raising elements in order to avoid reprisals.

19 The SPT decided to appoint one of its members to be a rapporteur on reprisals in order to monitor the implementation of the SPT's policy in accordance with the San José Guidelines,²⁷ coordinate its activities relating to reprisals, and keep in contact with all the relevant bodies in order to avoid reprisals at any level. Where appropriate, the SPT decided to discuss issues concerning reprisals with States parties either collectively or in the course of bilateral meetings. Moreover, it announced to agree upon procedures for NPMs concerning responses to reprisals, taking into account the specific country needs depending on the respective situations.²⁸

20 In specific, the SPT will raise any concerns regarding reprisals confidentially with State party authorities. It will 'contact the State party to request information, express its concerns and request an investigation and the immediate cessation of the intimidation or reprisals'. When appropriate, the SPT may 'issue statements on specific incidents or generalized practices of intimidation or reprisals and circulate them to international and national media outlets, or make comments to the media and on social media'. Moreover, it may request the assistance of the OHCHR and its secretariat may inform individuals or groups (making allegations of intimidation or reprisals) 'that they may submit an urgent communication to the special procedure mandate holders of the Human Rights Council'.²⁹

21 In its communications, reports, and follow-up requests, the SPT will demand States parties 'to take the measures necessary to protect individuals and groups from intimidations or reprisals'.³⁰

Article 16

Reports of the Subcommittee

1. The Subcommittee on Prevention shall communicate its recommendations and observations confidentially to the State Party and, if relevant, to the national preventive mechanism.
2. The Subcommittee on Prevention shall publish its report, together with any comments of the State Party concerned, whenever requested to do so by that State Party. If the State Party makes part of the report public, the Subcommittee on Prevention may publish the report in whole or in part. However, no personal data shall be published without the express consent of the person concerned.
3. The Subcommittee on Prevention shall present a public annual report on its activities to the Committee against Torture.
4. If the State Party refuses to cooperate with the Subcommittee on Prevention according to articles 12 and 14, or to take steps to improve the situation in the light of the Subcommittee's recommendations, the Committee against Torture may, at the request of the Subcommittee on Prevention, decide, by a majority of its members, after the State Party has had an opportunity to make its views known, to make a public statement on the matter or to publish the report of the Subcommittee.

1. Introduction

1 After every country mission, the SPT shall draw up a report, including its recommendations and observations to the State party concerned. Despite the fact that the principle of confidentiality laid down in Article 2(3) OP constitutes one of the main principles of the Protocol,¹ the drafters of Article 16 OP attempted to strike a fair balance between the principle of confidentiality and the need for transparency and publicity of its activities, taking into account the respective provisions of the ECPT.²

² Arts 10 to 13 ECPR; See Ursula Kriebaum, Folterprävention in Europa: Die Europäische Konvention zur Verhütung von Folter und unmenschlicher oder erniedrigender Behandlung oder Bestrafung (Verlag Österreich 2000) 135ff; Malcolm D Evans and Rod Morgan, Preventing Torture: A Study of the European Convention for the Prevention of Torture and Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (Clarendon Press/OUP 1998) 198.

A country-specific mission report may be published in any of the following four circumstances:

- if the State party explicitly requests publication;
- if the State party makes part of the report public;
- if the State party refuses to cooperate with the Subcommittee;
- if the State party refuses to take steps to improve the situation in the light of the SPT's recommendations.

2 In the first two cases mentioned above, the decision to publish the report is made by the SPT itself. This is done either in accordance with a request of the State party or as a reaction to a partial publication of the report which may present a distorted picture. The SPT shall decide whether it wishes to publish only another part of the report in order to present a more accurate picture of the facts, observations, and recommendations, or whether it prefers to publish the entire report.

3 In the second set of cases, the decision to publish the report constitutes a sanction against the violation of the principle of cooperation by the State party concerned. Such decision is taken by the CAT Committee, at the request of the SPT and after the State party has had an opportunity to make its views known. Instead of publishing the report as a whole, the CAT Committee may also decide to make a public statement only.

4 In addition to country-specific mission reports, the SPT shall also present a public annual report on its activities to the Committee against Torture. No confidential country-specific information shall be included in such annual reports, unless it has been made public before in accordance with the different rules contained in Article 16 OP.

Article 11

1. The Committee, after considering a report of its delegates, shall inform the State Party concerned in confidence of its findings and, if necessary, make recommendations. It may initiate consultations with the State Party with a view to furthering the protection of persons deprived of their liberty.
2. With the consent of the State Party concerned the Committee may publish its findings and recommendations in whole or in part.
3. In the event of a disagreement between the State Party concerned and the Committee as to the Committee's findings or as to the implementation of its recommendations, the Committee may at its discretion publish its findings or recommendations or both in whole or in part.
4. The Committee shall submit to the annual Assembly a general report which shall be made public.

1. After each mission, the Subcommittee shall draw up a report on the facts found during the mission, taking account of any observations which may have been submitted by the State Party concerned. It shall transmit to the latter its report containing any recommendations it considers necessary and may consult with the State Party with a view to suggesting, if necessary, improvements in the protection of persons deprived of their liberty.
2. If the State Party fails to cooperate or refuses to improve the situation in the light of the Subcommittee's recommendations, the Committee against Torture may at the request of the Subcommittee decide by a majority of its members, after the State Party has had an opportunity to make known its views, to make a public statement on the matter or to publish the Subcommittee's report.
3. The Subcommittee shall publish its report, together with any comments of the State Party concerned, whenever requested to do so by that State Party. If the State Party makes part of the report public, the Subcommittee may publish the report in whole or in part. However, no personal data shall be published without the express consent of the person concerned.
4. In all other respects, the information gathered by the Subcommittee and its delegation in relation to a mission, its report and its consultation with the State Party concerned shall remain confidential. Members of the Committee against Torture, the Subcommittee, its delegations and their staff are required to maintain confidentiality during and after their terms of office.

1. The Committee against Torture shall examine the reports and recommendations which may be submitted to it by the Subcommittee. It shall keep them confidential as long as no public statement in accordance with Article 14 paragraph 2 has been made or as long as they have not become public in accordance with Article 14 paragraph 3 of this Protocol.
2. Subject to the rules of confidentiality, the Subcommittee shall every year submit a general annual report on its activities to the Committee against Torture, which shall include information on the activities under this Protocol in its annual report to the General Assembly of the United Nations in accordance with Article 24 of the Convention.

1. After each mission, the Sub-Committee shall draw up a report which shall be submitted to the State Party concerned. The Sub-Committee shall finalize its report after fair consideration is given to comments submitted, within a reasonable time, by the State Party concerned. If the State Party so wishes, its comments shall form an annex to the report. The Sub-Committee shall transmit to the State Party its report containing any [feasible] recommendations it considers necessary to improve the protection of persons deprived of their liberty. To this effect, the Sub-Committee and the State Party may consult on the implementation of the recommendations, including on ways and means in which the State Party can be assisted.

2. Except as otherwise specified in this Article, the information gathered by the Sub-Committee and its delegation in relation to a mission, its report and its consultation [and cooperation] with the State Party concerned shall remain confidential. Members of [the Committee against Torture,] the Sub-Committee and other persons assisting the Sub-Committee are required during and after their terms of office, to maintain the confidentiality of the facts or information of which they have become aware during the discharge of their functions.

3. At the request of the State Party concerned, the Sub-Committee shall publish its report. By agreement between the Sub-Committee and the State Party, the report may be published or made public in part. If the State Party decides to make part of the report public, the Sub-Committee may, after consultation with the State Party concerned [and with the consent of the latter], make a public statement or publish the report in whole or in part in order to ensure a balanced presentation of the contents of the report.

4. [If the State Party fails to cooperate or refuses to improve the situation in the light of the Sub-Committee's recommendations, the Committee against Torture may at the request of the Sub-Committee decide by a majority of its members, after the State Party has had an opportunity to make known its views, to make a public statement on the matter or to publish the Sub-Committee's report.]

5. No personal data shall be published without the express consent of the person concerned.

1. The Committee against Torture shall examine the reports and recommendations which may be submitted to it by the Sub-Committee. It shall keep them confidential as long as no public statement in accordance with Article 14 paragraph 4 has been made or as long as they have not become public in accordance with Article 14 paragraph 3 of this Protocol.

2. The Sub-Committee shall submit every year a general confidential report on its activities to the Committee against Torture, including a list of States Parties visited, the composition of the visiting delegations and the places visited. Furthermore, the Sub-Committee shall submit every year a public report, including the countries visited, and may include any general recommendations on ways of improving the protection of persons deprived of their liberty. 2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

11 During the first session of the Working Group, held from 19 to 30 October 1992, the issues in question were discussed under Articles 14 and 15 of the revised Costa Rica Draft of 1991 and within the fourth basket of issues 'Operation of the system'.

12 With regard to Articles 14 and 15, most delegations recognized that these articles were based upon the principle of confidentiality. There was general acceptance of the importance of that principle, and most speakers addressed specific aspects which needed clarification.⁹

13 One of the trends of the discussion related to the relationship between the SPT and the CAT Committee, and the need for strict confidentiality, which Articles 14 and 15 represented. One tendency was that confidentiality could be maintained by requiring the CAT Committee to respect the same conditions as the SPT. Another tendency was that the operation of a system of preventive visits depended on the body establishing relationships of confidence with States parties and national administrators. Cooperation would inevitably be difficult to establish and maintain if another body, with jurisdictional responsibilities, had the full details of specific findings by the SPT. Providing specific information to the CAT Committee in this regard could also affect the nature of its supervisory and monitoring duties in respect of particular States under the Convention. One delegation indicated that the operation of Articles 14 and 15 represented something of a compromise between the two tendencies.

14 Regarding the publication of information, several delegations found that the possibility of publication should not be used as a tool of compulsion but should be regarded as an element of the principle of cooperation. Some stated that the decision to make a public statement or to publish a report should be taken by a qualified majority of the members. It was emphasized by a number of delegations that both articles should be redrafted and a cooperative relationship between the two bodies should be developed.

15 At its fourth session from 30 October to 10 November 1995, Article 14 was reconsidered by the delegations of the Working Group.¹⁰ The importance of the principle of confidentiality was broadly recognized by the delegations, although opinions were divided over the extent of this principle and the exceptions thereto. It was agreed to change the order of the paragraphs in the original draft, so as first to state the general principle and then refer to the relevant exceptions to it. Furthermore, the principle of cooperation was recognized as an important principle. All delegations agreed that the SPT should consider the views of the State party in the preparation of its report. It was commonly felt that this Article should be based on recognition of good faith on the part of both the States parties and the SPT, without the Protocol losing its effectiveness to achieve its purpose. The representative of Australia stated that the CAT Committee rather than the SPT might be the appropriate body to make a public statement.

16 After various proposals had been discussed in the informal drafting group, its Chairperson introduced a revised draft of Article 14 which took into account the divergent views presented during the drafting group's meetings. The new article contained five paragraphs instead of four, paragraphs 2 and 4 had changed places, and a separate paragraph 5 had been added about the publication of personal data. At its next plenary meeting, the Working Group then adopted the Article as submitted by the informal drafting group in first reading.

17 The provisions of Article 15 were examined by the Working Group in conjunction with Article 14, and many of the considerations raised were inseparable from that article. The Working Group decided to retain Article 15(1) as contained in the Costa Rica Draft. Submitting the results of the considerations by the informal drafting group of Article 15 as a whole, its Chairperson stated that the group had decided to recommend that the SPT should include specific facts in its annual confidential report to the CAT Committee. The group also proposed that the SPT should submit every year a public report to the CAT Committee, including the countries visited and any general recommendations. The CAT Committee should include non-confidential information on the activities of the SPT in its annual report to the General Assembly. The proposals submitted by the informal drafting group were then approved by the Working Group.

18 The Chairperson-Rapporteur invited the Working Group to discuss Article 14 as adopted at first reading at its seventh session from 28 September to 9 October 1998.¹¹ In the course of the discussions, the observer for the Netherlands suggested a new text for this Article, replacing paragraphs 1 to 3 of Article 14. Moreover, he proposed replacing paragraphs 4 and 5 of Article 14 by new Articles 14 bis and ter. In the general discussion that followed this, it was emphasized that Article 14 was one of the key articles and no hasty decisions should be taken concerning it. Thus, the Chairperson-Rapporteur suggested that both the first reading of Article 14 and the proposal of the Netherlands should be used as a basis for future drafting.

19 During the eighth session of the Working Group from 4 to 15 October 1999, the nature and implementation of recommendations was addressed in the general discussion on Article 14. It was felt that the concept of technical assistance and cooperation should be duly highlighted in Article 14.¹²

20 On the question of public statements by the SPT or the publication of its reports, it was widely felt that such 'going public' would be an exceptional measure; the reports would normally be confidential unless the State concerned manifestly refused to cooperate.

21 Other issues raised in connection with Article 14 included the contents of the reports of the SPT, the feasibility of implementing its recommendations, the relationship between the SPT and the CAT Committee, the time frame for the implementation of the SPT's recommendations, and the question of how the special fund to be established under Article 17 would be informed of the SPT's recommendations.

3. Issues of Interpretation

3.1 Confidentiality of Mission Reports

22 Articles 14 and 15 of the revised Costa Rica Draft of 1991 were based almost literally on Articles 10 to 13 ECPT.¹³ But the OP differs from the ECPT in so far as the OP also has to take into account the relationship between two bodies, the SPT and the CAT Committee. Much of the discussion in the Working Group focused on this relationship.¹⁴ Delegates were afraid that the SPT would provide confidential information on country missions to the CAT Committee, which would use such information in the public State reporting or a quasi-judicial complaints or inquiry procedure. On the other hand, since the SPT is a subsidiary body of the CAT Committee, delegates proposed that the SPT should also submit its reports to the CAT Committee. Finally, the cooperative relationship between the SPT and the NPMs required that both bodies inform each other of their respective findings and recommendations. In general, the drafters of Article 16 OP achieved a fair balance between the principles of confidentiality and publicity, taking into account the legitimate interests of all stakeholders involved.

23 According to its guidelines in relation to missions to States parties under Article 11(a) OP, the members of a SPT delegation prepare a note summarizing their principle observations, which is then circulated among all members of the delegation in order to facilitate the drafting of the report. The draft report is prepared with the help of the secretariat. After having been approved by the head of the delegation, the draft report is circulated among the SPT members who had been participating in the mission and is revised accordingly. After the members of the delegation agreed upon a final draft, the draft report is sent to all SPT members for consideration and adoption.¹⁵

24 After every country mission, the SPT shall submit the adopted mission report confidentially to the State party concerned. Although Article 16(1) OP only speaks about ‘recommendations and observations’, there can be no doubt that the report as a whole shall be communicated to the respective Government, similar to Article 10(1) ECPT. At this time the mission report is not communicated to the CAT Committee but, ‘if relevant, to the national preventive mechanism’. The travaux préparatoires give no indication when the submission of the report to the NPM is ‘relevant’. The decision rests with the SPT, which generally makes it dependent on the level of cooperation with its domestic counterpart and on its duty of confidentiality.

25 If the State party concerned neither makes part of the report public nor requests the publication of the report, it shall remain confidential. This is in line with the practice under the ECPT.¹⁶ However, States parties to the ECPT have developed from the very beginning a culture of transparency by regularly requesting the CPT to publish the respective mission reports.¹⁷ As of 16 November 2017, a total of 419 missions have been concluded

¹⁶ The ECPT lacks, however, a provision similar to Art 16(2) OP which would entrust the CPT to publish the report as a whole if parts have been made public by the State party concerned. But see r 42(2) of the CPT’s RoP which stipulates as well that the CPT may publish the entire report if the State party concerned made only parts of it public: see CPT/Inf/C (89) 3 rev. 1.

¹⁷ See Kriebaum (n 2) 135ff; Evans and Morgan (n 2) 200.

by the CPT, ie 247 periodic missions and 172 ad hoc missions. So far, 368 reports have been published at the request of the governments concerned. Only a small minority of States parties, above all Azerbaijan and the Russian Federation still tends to be restrictive in giving its authorization to publish reports.¹⁸ This practice of transparency has contributed significantly to a culture of gradually opening up closed institutions in the member States of the Council of Europe to public scrutiny, which by itself is a major factor in preventing torture and other forms of ill-treatment. It remains to be seen whether other States will follow in this respect the practice of European States. Similarly, the SPT noted already at quite an early stage that the '[p]ublication of an SPT visit report and the response from the authorities concerned is a sign of the commitment of the State party to the objectives of the OPCAT' and '[e]nables civil society to consider the issues addressed in the report and to work with the authorities on implementation of the recommendations to improve the protection of people deprived of their liberty.'¹⁹

26 In 2010, the SPT summarized certain recommendations from the reports that had been published at that time (on Honduras, the Maldives, and Sweden) as it found that 'they may be useful for other States in the area of prevention of torture'. These recommendations related to NPMs, the legal and institutional framework, and places of deprivation of liberty.²⁰

27 Moreover, the SPT established a follow-up procedure to its mission reports, requesting States parties to provide 'a response giving a full account of actions taken to implement the recommendations contained in the ... report within a period of six months'.²¹ This procedure underwent an innovation, as in 2012 the SPT allowed the participation of the Mexican NPM at a private meeting with the Mexican authorities on the State party's reply to the SPT's mission report. The participation enabled the NPM to provide oral comments on the report which had been made available to it in advance according to Article 16(1) OP.²² In 2013, the SPT started to issue confidential written responses to all replies it receives,²³ which were open for replies by States parties.²⁴ Later on, the SPT decided to end this approach and to initiate a more focused post-mission dialogue process by inviting States parties to discuss and agree upon the most effective means of entering into dialogue with the SPT at the end of each mission.²⁵

²⁵ See SPT, 'Ninth Annual Report of the Subcommittee on Prevention of Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment' (2016) UN Doc CAT/C/57/4, para 18.

28 By the end of 2016, the SPT had issued a total of fifty-one mission reports to States parties and NPMs; twenty-four reports had been made public following requests from their recipients.²⁶ In its tenth Annual Report, the Subcommittee once again noted that ‘publication of its visit reports reflects the spirit of transparency on which preventive visiting is based’ and at the same time encouraged States parties and NPMs to authorize their publication.²⁷

3.2 Publication as a Sanction

29 If the State party concerned makes part of the SPT’s report public, the latter may publish the report in whole or in part in accordance with Article 16 OP. This provision has no counterpart in the ECPT.²⁸ It constitutes a useful measure to prevent a practice of unilaterally publishing only those parts of a report which are favourable to the Government concerned. The question arises whether the SPT is also authorized to publish its report if parts of it have been published by others, including the NPM which may receive the confidential report in accordance with Article 16(1) without being bound by the same duty of confidentiality. If the parts published by the NPM present a distorted picture in favour of the Government, the SPT, in our opinion, may decide to use its authority under Article 16(2) to publish the report in order to present a more accurate picture. If the NPM only publishes the most critical parts of the report, it is up to the Government concerned to request the entire report to be published. But the SPT has to be careful not to contribute to a situation in which parts of the report are deliberately leaked to the public by whomever in order to achieve its publication by a decision of the SPT or of the Government. In any case, the SPT, when preparing and publishing its reports, must comply with the prohibition on publishing personal data without express consent of the person concerned, which constitutes a generally accepted rule of professional fact-finding based on the human right of privacy and data protection of all persons interviewed.²⁹

30 Similarly, the authority of the SPT under Article 16(4) to request the CAT Committee to publish the SPT’s report or to make a public statement on the situation in a given country shall be exercised with caution. The same holds true for the power of the CAT Committee to ‘go public’ as a sanction against a non-cooperative State party. These powers of both the CAT Committee and the SPT, which go beyond those of the CPT under Article 10(2) ECPT,³⁰ should only be invoked against governments that clearly refuse any meaningful cooperation, obstruct the work of the SPT, and/or do nothing to implement the respective recommendations of the SPT in clear violation of their obligations under Articles 2(4), 12, 14, and/or 15 OP. In any case, before ‘going public’, the CAT Committee shall provide the State party with an opportunity to make its views known. The respective Government shall be granted sufficient time to submit its views³¹

³⁰ The CPT needs a decision by a majority of two-thirds of its members to make a public statement, whereas the CAT Committee may decide by simple majority to make a public statement or to publish the report as a whole. Until the end of 2017, the CPT issued eight public statements under Art 10(2) ECPT. See also Kriebaum (n 2) 138ff; Evans and Morgan (n 2) 201.

which, according to the principles of objectivity and impartiality, should be included in the public statement of the CAT Committee. Until the end of 2017, publication had not been used as a sanction.

3.3 Annual Reports of the SPT

31 In accordance with Article 16(3) OP, the SPT shall present a public annual report on its activities to the CAT Committee. This provision, which corresponds to Article 12 ECPT, ensures a minimum of transparency about the activities of the SPT even if the country-specific mission reports are not made public. Article 16(3) contains no further guidelines as to which information shall be included in the SPT's annual report. But Article 15(2) of the draft which constituted the outcome of the first reading in January 1996 specified that the annual report should include the countries visited and any general recommendations on ways of improving the protection of persons deprived of their liberty.³² In any case, the principle of confidentiality requires that no confidential country-specific information shall be included in the annual reports, unless the respective country mission reports have been made public or a respective public statement has been made by the CAT Committee in accordance with Article 16(4) OP. A summary of the SPT's annual reports shall also be reflected in the annual reports of the CAT Committee, which are submitted to the States parties and the General Assembly in accordance with Article 24 CAT.³³

32 In practice, the SPT uses its annual reports to reflect on its work and to put its thoughts on various issues of substance into public domain. After an introduction and overview of the respective year in review, including eg information on the developments concerning NPMs, the SPT regularly reported on issues arising from its work, the development of its working practices (for example, the establishment of certain ad hoc working groups), and certain *substantive issues*³⁴ that were of prior concern within the respective reporting period. The SPT also uses its annual reports to expand on certain issues relating to the outcome of its visits and to address States parties apart from concrete country missions. It has, for example, repeatedly addressed the issue of reprisals³⁵ and called on the authorities of all States parties to take urgent action measures in order to avoid reprisals after country missions.³⁶

1 Article 17 OP repeats the obligation of States parties under Article 3 OP to maintain, designate, or establish one or several independent national mechanisms for the prevention of torture at the domestic level. The two pillar-system, which was introduced in 2001 by Mexico at a time when the discussions in the Working Group had reached a dead end, corresponds to a general rule that States have the primary responsibility under international law to respect, protect, and ensure the human rights of all people subject to their jurisdiction, whereas monitoring by international bodies of States’ compliance with their international human rights obligations is only of a complementary nature. As with its international counterpart, the Subcommittee on Prevention, the main function of NPMs consists of conducting preventive visits to all places of detention in the territory of the State party concerned and making recommendations to the relevant authorities with the aim of improving prison conditions and preventing torture and ill-treatment of detainees.

2 Further provisions on the independence and efficiency of the NPMs are contained in Article 18 OP, on the mandate and powers of the NPM in Article 19 OP, and on the corresponding obligations of States parties to facilitate preventive visits to places of detention, to implement the respective recommendations of NPMs, and to publish its annual reports in Articles 20 to 23 OP.

Each State party shall maintain, designate or establish, at the latest one year after the entry into force of the present Protocol or of its ratification or accession, one or several independent national preventive mechanisms for the prevention of torture at the domestic level. Mechanisms established by decentralized units may be designated as national preventive mechanisms for the purposes of the present Protocol, if they are in conformity with its provisions.

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

5 On 13 February 2001, at the second meeting of the Working Group during its ninth session from 12 to 23 February 2001,³ the delegation of Mexico introduced its alternative draft, prepared with the support of GRULAC.⁴

6 There was no real discussion focusing on Article 17 (Article 3 OP) in the Working Group. However, at its third meeting, on 14 February 2001, the Working Group held a general discussion on the Mexican draft. Some delegations strongly supported the draft, emphasizing the complementary nature of the proposed national and international mechanisms. Others, however, found that no proper balance was struck between the national and the international level and feared that the latter might become subsidiary to the former. The delegations who supported the draft underlined that it constituted an improvement of the original draft by installing a two pillar-system. Being on the spot, national mechanisms would be in a better position to prevent torture and to visit facilities all over a country.⁵

3. Issues of Interpretation

3.1 Organizational Form of the NPM

7 The organizational form of an NPM is not provided for in the OPCAT. Hence, States have much freedom on the model they chose as long as they respect the minimum requirements of the OPCAT.

8 In the course of its mission reports, the SPT has consistently referred to the flexible approach of the OP regarding the format and structure of the NPM, but the subsequent formulation of the obligations for the States parties have become increasingly demanding: the SPT has stated that, although the OP leaves the institutional format of the NPM to the States Parties' discretion, 'it is imperative that the mechanism be structured and that it carries out its mandate in accordance with the Optional Protocol, as reflected in the SPT "Guidelines on national preventive mechanisms".⁶ The SPT later added that it is imperative that the NPM's 'functional and operational independence is guaranteed, taking account of the Principles relating to the Status of National Institutions ("the Paris Principles")'.⁷

9 According to the SPT, States parties 'must choose the model they find most appropriate, taking into account the complexity of the country, its administrative and financial structure and its geography'.⁸ Beyond independence, the SPT 'looks at NPMs from a functional perspective, and recognizes that just because one model works well in one country does not mean it will work well in another. What is important is that the model adopted works well in its country of operation.'⁹ Effective operation of the NPM is, therefore, a relevant characteristic for compliance with the Optional Protocol.

3.1.1 Meaning of 'one or several independent national preventive mechanisms'

10 According to Article 17 OP, States Parties can also aim to have 'several' NPMs in place. Multiple NPMs may be based on thematic, geographic, and/or jurisdictional divisions, eg the NPMs in the United Kingdom, the Netherlands, New Zealand, and Sweden.¹⁰

⁶ SPT, 'Report on the Visit for the Purpose of Providing Advisory Assistance to the National Preventive Mechanism of the Federal Republic of Germany, Report to State Party' (2013) UN Doc CAT/OP/DEU/1, para 19; SPT 'Report on the Visit for the Purpose of Providing Advisory Assistance to the National Preventive Mechanism of the Federal Republic of Germany, Report to the National Preventive Mechanism' (2013) UN Doc CAT/OP/DEU/2, para 18; SPT, 'Visit to Armenia Undertaken from 3 to 6 September 2013: Observations and Recommendations Addressed to the National Preventive Mechanism, Report to the National Preventive Mechanism' (2017) UN Doc CAT/OP/ARM/2, para 22.

⁷ SPT 'Report on the Visit for the Purpose of Providing Advisory Assistance to the National Preventive Mechanism of the Republic of Malta, Report to State Party' (2016) UN Doc CAT/OP/MLT/1, para 18; in this sense, SPT, 'Report on the Visit for the Purpose of Providing Advisory Assistance to the National Preventive Mechanism of the Netherlands, Report to State Party' (2016) UN Doc CAT/OP/NLD/1, para 23; SPT, 'Report on the Visit for the Purpose of Providing Advisory Assistance to the National Preventive Mechanism of the Republic of Armenia, Report to State Party' (2015) UN Doc CAT/OP/ARM/1, para 26.

3.1.2 Meaning of ‘decentralized units’

11 For the case of jurisdictional division, the last sentence of Article 17 OP explicitly provides for the possibility that mechanisms established by decentralized units ‘if they are in conformity with the provisions of the Protocol’.¹¹ This decentralized structure was opted for by, for example, Brazil and Argentina. Furthermore, the mechanisms must together fulfil the mandate of NPMs according to Articles 19 OP and 22 OP. This means foremost that every place of deprivation of liberty is subject to the monitoring of at least one NPM. Article 29, furthermore, ensures that the OPCAT is applied ‘to all parts of federal States without any limitations or exceptions’. In addition, the system of several NPMs must function in a way to ensure that recommendations are made regarding the whole system and that proposals are made to existing or draft legislation.¹²

3.2 Modes of Creating an NPM

12 While Article 3 OP obliges States parties to ‘set up, designate or maintain’ such a mechanism, the verbs ‘maintain, designate or establish’ are used in Article 17 OP.

3.2.1 Meaning of ‘maintain’

13 As the term ‘set up’ is synonymous with the term ‘establish’, no conflict arises. The inclusion of the term ‘maintain’ intended to cover States parties with monitoring bodies that already existed at the time of entry into force and carry out functions equivalent to those of NPMs.¹³ While the term ‘designate’ covers instances when the State party builds the NPM upon existing institutions, the term ‘establish’ covers a situation in which a State party creates an entirely new body to undertake NPM functions.¹⁴

3.2.2 Meaning of ‘designate’

14 To date, the majority of the States parties to the OPCAT has designated an existing institution as NPM. The majority of the latter has chosen to give this mandate to a National Human Rights Institution (NHRI).¹⁵ According to the Paris Principles, an NHRI is an institution ‘vested with competence to promote and protect human rights’.¹⁶ NHRIs have been designated as NPMs in different formats such as ombuds-institutions and human rights commissions. Some countries created a new NHRI and designated it as NPM.¹⁷

3.2.3 Meaning of 'establish'

15 To date, only some States parties to the OP have established an NPM as an entirely new institution in the country.¹⁸

3.3 Open, Transparent, and Inclusive Process

16 While there is no explicit requirement under the OP as to how States should deal with the national designation procedure, the SPT clarified quite early in its 2010 Guidelines that '[t]he NPM should be identified by an open, transparent and inclusive process which involves a wide range of stakeholders, including civil society'.¹⁹ According to the SPT, the selection process should also preferably be prescribed in the governing NPM legislation.²⁰ The Paris Principles also additionally foresee that there should be a transparent process that includes civil society.²¹ Indeed, an open, transparent, and inclusive process enhances the credibility of the future NPM and hence its effectiveness.

17 When the process is not driven by civil society,²² but initiated by State authorities/ the Government, civil society should be consulted on the choice of which organizations or individuals represent its position.²³ For the future independence (especially perceived independence) and effectiveness of the body, it should aim for the participation of a wide range of stakeholders, namely representatives of the political leadership of the executive Government and relevant members of the permanent administration with technical expertise (at all applicable levels: municipal, provincial, and/or national), members of the legislature representing both Government and opposition parties, NHRIs, organizations that already carry out visits to places of detention, and national NGOs and other civil society groups.²⁴ The broad scope of places falling under the OPCAT necessitates the inclusion of organizations working with persons in a situation of vulnerability, such as migrants, asylum-seekers, refugees, children, women, ethnic and cultural minorities, and persons with disabilities.²⁵

18 The SPT expressed its satisfaction with the process that led to the adoption of the draft legislation setting up the NPM of Paraguay, that has been described 'as a model for the open, transparent and inclusive participation of a wide range of stakeholders'.²⁶

3.4 Operational Autonomy

19 The SPT stated in its Guidelines that '[t]he operational independence of the NPM should be guaranteed'²⁷ and '[t]he NPM should enjoy complete financial and operational autonomy when carrying out its functions under the Optional Protocol'.²⁸ With reference to these paragraphs, the SPT noted in its Compilation of Advice on 'organizational issues regarding national preventive mechanisms that form part of a national human rights institution' that 'Article 18 (1) of the Optional Protocol is unequivocal on the need for the State party to allocate specific resources to national preventive mechanism work, so as to guarantee the operational independence of the mechanism'.²⁹ It further stated that 'this implies that national preventive mechanisms must be capable of acting independently, not only from the State but also from the national human rights institution'.³⁰

20 In its Guidelines, the SPT stated that, '[w]here the body designated as the NPM performs other functions in addition to those under the Optional Protocol, its NPM functions should be located within a separate unit or department, with its own staff and budget'.³¹ In its Third Annual Report, the SPT argued similarly, stating that '[w]here existing institutions such as the Ombudsman or the national human rights institution (NHRI) are designated as national preventive mechanisms, a clear distinction should be made between such bodies, which generally act in response to specific situations, and national preventive mechanisms, which have preventive functions',³² making the creation of a subunit necessary.³³

21 For the sake of institutional visibility, the SPT also recommended that the activities of the NPM be clearly separated from those of the NHRI.³⁴ When the NHRI implements activities under the NPM mandate, it 'should be clearly stated as such in all visits, meetings, written communications with the authorities, penitentiary and other institutions

²⁸ CAT/OP/12/5 (n 19) para 12; the SPT has stated in its visit reports that, although the Optional Protocol leaves it up to the State Party's discretion in which institutional format the NPM should be set up, it is imperative that the NPM's 'functional and operational independence is guaranteed', taking account of the Paris Principles, in CAT/OP/MLT/1 (n 7) para 18; CAT/OP/MLT/1 (n 7) para 26: 'The SPT recommended that the State party incorporate the OPCAT into domestic law; amend and enhance the existing legal framework providing for the establishment of the NPMs by enacted specific legislative provisions setting out their mandate, institutional and operational independence, appointment criteria and membership processes, functions and powers in a way which fully reflects the OPCAT, the NPM Guidelines and the Paris Principles'; CAT/OP/ARM/1 (n 7) para 26: 'In a subsequent visit report, the SPT stated that "it is imperative that the NPM law ensures full compliance with OPCAT and the SPT "Guidelines on national preventive mechanisms" as well as the functional and operational independence of the NPM, also taking into consideration the Paris Principles'; CAT/OP/ARM/1 (n 7) para 27: and that "[i]t is furthermore important that the NPM is funded through a separate budget line in the State budget, and be assured complete financial and operational autonomy". Finally, in the report of the SPT on its visit to the Netherlands, the SPT encouraged "the enactment of legislation that ensures the functional and operational independence of the NPM, with due consideration to the Paris Principles", in CAT/OP/NLD/1 (n 7) para 39.

³² CAT/C/44/2 (n 8) para 51.

³³ The SPT highlighted, for example, that '[w]ithin Ombudsman Plus model freely chosen by the State party, a specialized subunit dedicated only and exclusively to the preventive mandate of the NPM shall be created': see SPT, 'Report on the Visit for the Purpose of Providing Advisory Assistance to the National Preventive Mechanism of Moldova, Report to State Party' (2013) UN Doc CAT/OP/MDA/1, para 17.

³⁴ CAT/OP/ARM/2 (n 6) para 26; CAT/OP/PRY/1 (n 26) para 17.

and individuals'.³⁵ The SPT further recommended that, to the greatest extent possible, the NPM 'be represented in its own right at institutional meetings that concern its mandate so that it may bring to bear its experience and the preventive focus of its work'.³⁶

22 Indeed, the OP and SPT Guidelines 'foresee two different and separate structures serving two different mandates and preserving a level of autonomy'.³⁷ The SPT added in its Compilation of Advice:

While the national preventive mechanism is charged with the core national preventive mechanism functions, this does not preclude other departments or staff of the national human rights institution from contributing to its work, as that cooperation might lead to synergies and complementarity. For instance, the number of complaints received by the institution in relation to a specific place of detention may inform the work of the mechanism. Similarly, the mechanism could refer some cases to the institution for litigation or other action.³⁸

Indeed, the advantages of NHRIs as NPMs are the availability of broader expertise and a human rights-based approach within the institution as well as the number or type of complaints received by the NHRI as a possible criterion for the NPM's prioritization of visits.³⁹

23 In order to guarantee operational independence of an NPM that is part of a larger organization, '[t]he relationship between the national preventive mechanism function and the rest of the organization, the working methods and the safeguards applicable to preserve the independence of that function should be clearly set out in the relevant internal regulations'.⁴⁰

24 The autonomy of the NPM unit does not change the fact that the final decision-making power for the NPM often rests with the Ombudsman/deputy Ombudsman, the Human Rights Commission, or a human rights commissioner.⁴¹ However, even when the NPM has a proper head, the SPT has encountered situations in which placement of an NPM as a section, for instance under a legal department, has jeopardized the autonomy of the mechanism's decision-making process.⁴² Therefore, the SPT recommends in its Compilation of Advice that,

[i]n order to guarantee the operational autonomy of the national preventive mechanism and a 'flat' relationship between the national human rights institution and the national preventive mechanism, the Subcommittee would recommend placing the mechanism as a parallel structure at the level of the head of the institution and abstaining from situations in which the mechanism is placed under several departments, which diminishes its visibility.⁴³

⁴² CAT/C/57/4 (n 29) Annex, para 16, with reference to; CAT/OP/ECU/2 (n 36) para 24: important decisions taken by the national preventive mechanism in fulfilment of its mandate require the approval of the Directorate-General for Protection, the Deputy Ombudsman and the Ombudsman'. The Subcommittee voiced its concern that 'this procedure may stand in the way of its effectiveness in terms of, for example time management and the autonomy to which the national preventive mechanism is entitled in matters within its area of competence'.

25 However, this raises more issues of concern: the SPT found that when the NPM is legally placed under the Ombudsman, the support team—employed by the Ombudsman’s office—is dependent on his/her instructions and not on the collegial body of the NPM. This controverts, according to the SPT, Article 18(1) OP, which states that States parties shall guarantee the independence of the NPM personnel.⁴⁴

26 As to the content of the autonomous decision-making, the SPT concretized in its Compilation of Advice that ‘[u]ltimately, the organizational chart should reflect the requirements of the Optional Protocol, which specify that the national preventive mechanism should have operational autonomy with regard to its resources, workplan, findings, recommendations and direct, and, if needed, confidential contact with the Subcommittee.’⁴⁵ Regarding resources, the SPT recommends providing the NPM with ‘operational’ discretion regarding the use of appropriate financial, human, and logistical resources.⁴⁶

27 Also, as a result of the interpretation of the Paris Principles, the NPM should ‘have authority to choose and employ its own staff based on requirements and criteria it alone determines’.⁴⁷ Furthermore, to ensure operational autonomy, the NPM should ‘also have exclusive authority to develop its own rules of procedure without external modification’.⁴⁸

3.5 Deadline

28 According to Article 17 OP, the State party must designate or establish one or several NPMs ‘at the latest one year after the entry into force of the present Protocol or of its ratification or accession’. The twenty States that became parties to the Protocol before its international entry into force on 22 June 2006⁴⁹ must have had established an NPM at the latest by 22 June 2007.⁵⁰ For the other States that ratified or acceded to the Protocol at a later date, ‘[t]he NPM should be established within one year of the entry into force of the Optional Protocol for the State concerned, unless at the time of ratification a declaration has been made in accordance with Article 24 of the Optional Protocol.’⁵¹ Article 24 OP enables the States parties to postpone the implementation of this obligation for a maximum of three years, and the CAT Committee may extend that period for another two years.⁵²

29 The OPCAT does not specify any procedure for the act of international designation. In practice, many States parties have provided a list of their NPMs to the UN.⁵³ Other States parties have notified the SPT of their NPM choice through direct correspondence.⁵⁴ While the OP is silent on the point of whether the State has an obligation to inform the SPT that it has designated a NPM,⁵⁵ the SPT noted that it should be ‘promptly’ notified by the State party of the body which has been designated as the NPM.⁵⁶ Indeed, States should view the obligation to inform the SPT of the choice of their NPM as part of maintenance of an on-going relationship between the SPT, the State, and the NPM.⁵⁷

30 Contact with the SPT is also of relevance in the time available until the end of the one-year deadline for the SPT to provide advice and assistance on NPM establishment according to Article 11(b)(i) OP. At each Subcommittee session, the regional teams review progress towards the fulfilment of each State party’s obligation, making appropriate recommendations to the plenary on how the Subcommittee can best advise and assist the States parties concerned.⁵⁸ In its Annual Reports, the SPT has become increasingly concerned regarding the number of States parties that have not complied with the deadline under Art 17 OP.⁵⁹ In its twenty-ninth session in June 2016, the SPT publicized a list of States parties whose compliance with obligations set out in Article 17 OP is substantially overdue.⁶⁰

Independence, Pluralism, and Efficiency of National Preventive Mechanisms

1. The States Parties shall guarantee the functional independence of the national preventive mechanisms as well as the independence of their personnel.
2. The States Parties shall take the necessary measures to ensure that the experts of the national preventive mechanisms have the required capabilities and professional knowledge. They shall strive for a gender balance and the adequate representation of ethnic and minority groups in the country.
3. The States Parties undertake to make available the necessary resources for the functioning of the national preventive mechanisms.
4. When establishing national preventive mechanisms, States Parties shall give due consideration to the Principles relating to the status of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights.

1. Introduction

1 The role of NPMs within the universal system of torture prevention is of special significance, especially as the novelty of the whole system 'lies in requiring states to utilize such mechanisms in combating torture as a matter of international legal obligation'.¹

¹ Malcolm D Evans, 'The Place of the Optional Protocol in the Scheme of International Approaches to Torture and Torture Prevention and Resulting Issues' in Herald c Scheu and Stanislava Hýbnerová

In 2009, the General Assembly called on States parties to the OP to fulfil their obligation to designate or establish ‘truly independent and effective national preventive mechanisms for the prevention of torture’.² Indeed, the provision of independence ‘lies at the heart of the OPCAT and is the most important characteristic that an NPM must possess’.³ The need for ensuring its independence was identified as one of the key issues during the OPCAT’s drafting process and also one of the key reasons why the original Mexican proposal was not acceptable to many states who feared ‘puppet’ NPMs and why a counter-proposal to strong SPT emerged.⁴

2 Article 18(4) OP explicitly refers to the Principles relating to the status of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights (‘Paris Principles’) that States shall only give ‘due consideration’ to when establishing NPMs.⁵ Hence, the provisions of Article 18 OP shall be interpreted in light of the travaux préparatoires and the Paris Principles.

⁴ Steinerte (n 3) 6.

⁵ The formulation has its good reason. First, some provisions of the Paris Principles are owed to the broad mandate of the NHRIs to protect and promote the broad spectrum of human rights by numerous responsibilities (UNGA, ‘Principles Relating to the Status of National Institutions’ Res 48/134 of 20 December 1993 (Paris Principles), Principle 3 (Competence and responsibilities)) and, hence, are not suited to the NPM’s specific preventive mandate with the main responsibility to carry out visits to places of deprivation of liberty and provide reports and recommendations to the authorities. Therefore, provisions may not be relevant at all or may be ‘superseded by more detailed provisions within the OPCAT’ (APT and IIDH, Optional Protocol to the UN Convention Against Torture: Implementation Manual (rev edn, APT and IIDH 2010) 91, referring to APT (ed), Guide: Establishment and Designation of National Preventive Mechanisms (APT 2006) 38). Second, the Paris Principles focus more on the establishment and creation of bodies and less on their actual practice and effectiveness once they are operational; see Rachel Murray, ‘National Preventive Mechanisms Under the Optional Protocol to the Torture Convention: One Size Does Not Fit All’ (2008) 26 Netherlands Quarterly of Human Rights 485 (‘One Size Does Not Fit All’), 489. Also some other authors have challenged the usefulness of the instrument, arguing that the Paris Principles pay more attention to formal requirements and fail to examine the actual effectiveness of NHRIs on the ground: see Obiora Chinedu Okafor and Shedrack C Agbakwa, ‘On Legalism, Popular Agency and “Voices of Suffering”: The Nigerian National Human Rights Commission in Context’ (2002) 24 Human Rights Quarterly 662; SPT, ‘Analytical Assessment Tool for National Preventive Mechanisms’ (2016) UN Doc CAT/OP/1/Rev.1, para 3; see more under para 65.

2. Each State Party shall take the necessary measures to ensure that the members of the national mechanism have the professional knowledge and skills required. It shall also take account of the gender balance and the need to ensure that ethnic groups and minorities are adequately represented.

3. The members shall be chosen from among persons of high moral character having proven professional experience in the field of the practice of law and the administration of justice, in particular in criminal law, prison or police administration or in the various medical fields relevant to the treatment of persons deprived of their liberty or in the field of human rights.

Article 15 (new)

For the purpose of this Protocol, a State Party wishing to establish a national mechanism undertakes to ensure that:

- (a) The national mechanism will be composed of independent experts fulfilling the requirements set out in Articles 4 paragraph 3 and 5 paragraph 2;
- (b) It has full powers to issue recommendations to the concerned authorities;
- (c) It has unrestricted access to all places where persons are deprived of their liberty under all situations, including in peacetime, times of public disorder or states of emergency and during war in accordance with international humanitarian law;
- (d) Unrestricted access to persons deprived of their liberty;
- (e) Full freedom to interview the persons deprived of their liberty without witnesses, with the assistance of interpreters, if required, as well as all relevant personnel or persons;
- (f) Unrestricted liberty to contact, inform and meet with the Sub-Committee with a view to implementing Article 9 paragraph 1 (d);
- (g) The reports on its visits shall be public.

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

5 On 13 February 2001, at the second meeting of the Working Group during its ninth session from 12 to 23 February 2001,⁸ the delegation of Mexico introduced its alternative draft (prepared with the support of GRULAC) proposing the obligation for the States parties to the Protocol to establish national mechanisms for the prevention of torture.⁹

6 During the discussion, it was recalled that in order to ensure, as much as possible, the effectiveness of national mechanisms, it was important that the Protocol identified the principles on which they should be based. Thus, the Working Group considered related issues, such as the NPMs' mandate, independence, degree of effectiveness, links with other national institutions, governmental and non-governmental status, the importance of flexibility, and the impact of their recommendations.¹⁰

7 Some delegations stated that, in some countries, national institutions for the protection of human rights clearly lacked independence and effectiveness, and expressed concern about the ability of such institutions to reach the goals set forth in the Protocol.

8 During the tenth session of the Working Group from 14 to 25 January 2002, the concept of NPMs was further elaborated.¹¹ Many delegations, including those of Spain (on behalf of the European Union), Argentina, Egypt, Georgia, El Salvador, the Republic of Korea, Poland, and South Africa, made statements regarding the ways and means of ensuring the independence of the national mechanisms. It was emphasized that these mechanisms should be established on the basis of the Paris Principles, that they should be independent from any other national authority, able to issue recommendations to the concerned authorities, and be adequately funded.

9 In the compromise proposal presented by the Chairperson-Rapporteur, the concept of national preventive mechanisms was described in Part IV, where it was stated that States would be required to maintain, designate or establish national mechanisms, based on the Paris Principles, to work in close cooperation with the Subcommittee.¹²

3. Issues of Interpretation

10 While States parties enjoy a certain flexibility on the structure of their single or several NPMs according to Article 17 OP, they are obliged by Article 18 OP to guarantee the existence of an NPM with minimum guarantees, the most important of which is independence. In this sense, the SPT stated that ‘it is not for the Subcommittee to say in the abstract what may or may not be appropriate. All NPMs must of course be independent.’¹³ This emphasis that the SPT places on the characteristic of independence is also reflected in the fact that nearly every SPT’s mission report reiterates that ‘one of the crucial factors inhibiting ill-treatment is the existence of a fully functioning system of independent visits to monitor all places where persons may be deprived of their liberty’.¹⁴ Indeed, ‘[t]he linchpin for assessing the appropriateness of the choice of a particular institution as an NPM as well as what is seen as a factor in their effectiveness is independence’.¹⁵

11 Surprisingly, although it is the central requirement for NPMs and is, thus, mentioned often in the OPCAT (Articles 1, 17, 18, and 35), independence is not precisely defined, but is in fact formulated quite broadly, leaving terms open for interpretation. The provisions of Article 18 OP must be read together in order to ensure the full independence of NPMs in their different aspects.¹⁶ On the issue of establishment of the ¹⁵ Rachel Murray and others, The Optional Protocol to the UN Convention against Torture (Oxford University Press 2011) 119.

NPM, Article 18 (4) OP contains a specific reference to the 'Principles relating to the status of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights' (the 'Paris Principles').¹⁷

3.1 Functional Independence of NPMs

12 Article 18(1) OP requires States parties to guarantee the independence of NPMs. Independence is defined as 'functional independence', meaning that NPMs must enjoy independence from all State authorities (the legislative, executive, and judicial branches of Government),¹⁸ as well as from the authorities responsible for places of detention, civil administration, and party politics.

13 Functional independence is highly important for the effectiveness of NPMs,¹⁹ including several aspects. The first way to ensure functional independence is that the NPMs are based in a clear constitutional or at least legislative framework. Secondly, NPMs shall enjoy financial independence from the executive branch and dispose of a sufficient budget allocated by parliament that they are able to utilize as they wish. Furthermore, the members and staff of NPMs shall be appointed for a minimum period of office and be protected against any arbitrary removal during their term of office.

3.1.1 Establishment by Law

14 While the OP is silent on this issue, the Subcommittee elaborated also in its Analytical Assessment Tool for NPMs that it should be clearly set forth in a new or existing constitutional or legislative text 'that the national preventive mechanism is to be given a preventive mandate and powers in accordance with the Optional Protocol'.²⁰ The SPT has further reiterated that having a legal basis for an NPM is 'a prerequisite for its institutional stability and functional independence'.²¹ Also the SRT demands for a clear legal basis.²²

²⁰ CAT/OP/1/Rev.1 (n 5) para 10, referring to Paris Principles (n 5) and SPT, 'Guidelines on National Preventive Mechanisms' (2010) UN Doc CAT/OP/12/5, para 7. Still more vague in SPT, 'Third Annual Report of the Subcommittee on Prevention of Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment' (2010) UN Doc CAT/C/44/2, para 52: 'The Subcommittee wishes to reiterate the provisions of its preliminary guidelines to the effect that the national preventive mechanism should preferably be established by law or by the Constitution.'

²¹ SPT, 'Report on the Visit to Honduras' (2010) UN Doc CAT/OP/HND/1, para 262; in cases where States parties designated the NPM or intended to define its modalities of work in a decree, the SPT either urged the drafting of legislation to consolidate and reinforce the original decree creating the NPM or recommended that the modalities of work of the NPM be spelt out clearly in the draft NPM law: see CAT/OP/MEX/1 (n 14) para 30 and CAT/OP/BEN/1 (n 14) para 22. Designation of bodies as NPM by Legal Notices, ie regulations, led the SPT to voice concern 'at the weakness of the legal framework providing for the independent and effective functioning of the NPMs'; see SPT, 'Report on the Visit for the Purpose of Providing Advisory Assistance to the National Preventive Mechanism of the Republic of Malta, Report to State Party' (2016) UN Doc CAT/OP/MLT/1, para 25.

15 A clear constitutional or legislative basis specifying the NPM's mandate and powers guarantees that an NPM has structural independence from all branches of state,²³ above all from the executive branch,²⁴ including the police, military, and other security forces. Hence, an NPM placed under the authority of a Ministry or administratively attached to a Ministry raises questions about its functional independence. While, in practice, this link can be purely formal and the NPM can act truly independently in reality, it puts the NPM in a situation of vulnerability. The SPT for example expressed concern about the office of one NPM being within the Ministry of Justice, from which it derives the human resources for its operation.²⁵

16 The SPT envisages the provisions on the NPM to be found in a clear legal basis, may it be a separate law²⁶ or clear provisions in existing legislation. A separate law is especially important for the perceived independence of an NPM that is part of an institution with an additional mandate, as appearance of partiality can be exacerbated by the lack of a separate legal basis.²⁷ The Paris Principles²⁸ have been interpreted by the OHCHR and ICHR to require a separate law,²⁹ and the SRT supported this solution.³⁰

17 As to the content of legislation establishing the NPM, it is of fundamental importance that the requirement for an NPM's legal basis includes 'the fact of designating an existing institution to carry out the NPM mandate'.³¹ Such 'anchoring' of the NPM in legislation guarantees that the only authority with the ability to alter the existence of the

²⁵ SPT, 'Report on the Visit to Italy' (2016) UN Doc CAT/OP/ITA/1, para 13.

²⁶ In its mission reports, the SPT deemed 'the adoption of a separate NPM law as a crucial step'—eg in SPT, 'Report on the Visit for the Purpose of Providing Advisory Assistance to the National Preventive Mechanism of the Republic of Armenia, Report to State party' (2015) UN Doc CAT/OP/ARM/1, para 26. It furthermore stated that '[w]hile the institutional format of the NPM is left to the State Party's discretion, it is imperative that the State party enact NPM legislation which guarantees an NPM in full compliance with OPCAT and the NPM Guidelines. Indeed, the SPT deems the adoption of a separate NPM law as a crucial step to guaranteeing this compliance': see SPT, 'Report on the Visit for the Purpose of Providing Advisory Assistance to the National Preventive Mechanism of the Netherlands: Recommendations and Observations Addressed to the State Party' (2016) UN Doc CAT/OP/NLD/1, para 26; ibid, para 24: 'While acknowledging the existence of legal provisions providing the foundational basis for each individual institution within the NPM, a striking weakness in the current functioning of the NPM is the absence of a separate legislative text regulating NPM-specific functions, an NPM mandate, the relationship between NPM members and other bodies, such as observer institutions and the Netherlands Institute for Human Rights, and other issues that ought to be regulated, in line with part IV of the OPCAT.'

³¹ Steinerte (n 3) 12.

NPM is the legislature itself³² while it cannot guarantee freedom from abuse, namely by the legislature.³³ When the body designated as the NPM performs other functions in addition to those under the OP, an explicit designation of the body carrying out the NPM, eg the entire NHRI or the ombudsperson, prevents uncertainty regarding which institution fulfils the mandate of the NPM and hence inhibits weakening the efficiency and the institutional credibility of the NPM.³⁴ Further, the relationship between the NPM function and the rest of the organization, the working methods and the safeguards applicable to preserve the independence of that function should be clearly set out in internal regulations.³⁵

18 What clearly has to be set out in a constitutional or legislative text is the mandate and powers of the NPM.³⁶ According to the SPT, this is to be done by ‘specifying the composition of the mechanism and its sphere of competence’.³⁷ The SPT further elaborated in its Assessment Tool that, first, ‘[s]uch legislation should extend the visiting mandate to all places where people are or may be deprived of their liberty, as set out in article 4 of the Optional Protocol’.³⁸ This wording should be taken over and an exhaustive list avoided as it could exclude certain new types of places of detention.

19 Second, with reference to Articles 19 and 20 OP, the SPT states that the legislative text should grant the NPM at minimum:³⁹

- (a) The power to freely select the places of deprivation of liberty in which visits are to be carried out; to regularly examine the treatment of persons deprived of their liberty in those places; to select the timing of such visits and determine whether they are to be announced or unannounced; and to choose the persons to be interviewed;
- (b) Access to all information, including personal and sensitive information, premises and persons necessary for pursuing its mandate;
- (c) The power to make recommendations to the relevant authorities;⁴⁰
- (d) The power to submit proposals and observations concerning existing or draft legislation;⁴¹
- (e) The right to have contact with the Subcommittee.⁴²

20 Third, as to the NPM's mandate under Article 22 OP, the SPT notes that '[l]egislation should clearly state the obligation of competent authorities to examine the recommendations of the national preventive mechanism and to enter into a dialogue with it regarding the implementation of its recommendations'.⁴³

21 Fourth, as to the obligation of the States parties to guarantee the functional independence of the NPMs according to Article 18(1) OP, the SPT notes that '[t]he relevant legislation should specify the period of office, whether determined or open-ended, of the members of the national preventive mechanism and any grounds for their dismissal'.⁴⁴

22 Fifth, regarding the obligation of the States parties to guarantee the independence of the NPMs' personnel according to Article 18(1) OP, the SPT states that the legal basis should guarantee that the members of the national preventive mechanism and its staff enjoy such privileges and immunities as are necessary for the independent exercise of their functions,⁴⁵ and should address the issue of reprisals and other such actions against members of the mechanism,⁴⁶ their partners and any person who has communicated with the mechanism.⁴⁷

The selection process for the members of the NPM should, according to the SPT, 'preferably be prescribed in the governing NPM legislation'.⁴⁸

23 When criticizing States parties for the lack or weak legal basis, the SPT has stipulated further recommendations on the content of NPM law. Regarding NPM membership, the SPT specifically recommended that the State party should enact specific legislative provisions setting out 'appointment criteria and membership processes'.⁴⁹ In another case, the SPT recommended that the law on the NPM 'provide that membership of the NPM is incompatible with any other function which could affect its independence and impartiality'.⁵⁰

24 Regarding the visits of NPMs, the SPT urged the State Party to ensure that the legal framework provides for 'unrestricted access to all places of detention'.⁵¹ Moreover, 'the State party should guarantee in law and in practice the full mandate of the NPM, in particular its right to conduct private interviews with persons deprived of liberty'.⁵² The NPM's legal framework should also outline privileges and immunities of 'those who contribute to the NPM, including experts and civil society'.⁵³ The legal framework should furthermore guarantee 'protection for persons who provide information to the NPM'.⁵⁴

25 Budgetary issues should also be regulated directly in the NPM law. As to Article 18 OP, the NPM's legal framework should, in order to ensure its continuous financial and operational autonomy, 'require a separate budget line in the State budget for the funding of the NPM'.⁵⁵ On budgetary issues, the SPT deems it important to specify in the legislative provisions that the NPM will be allocated sufficient additional resources to enable it to fulfil its functions.⁵⁶ It is also suggested that the source and nature of the NPMs' funding be specified in their founding instruments.⁵⁷

26 Similarly, the SPT suggested that the NPM law should mention the obligations of the State party to present and discuss the annual reports in the national legislative assembly.⁵⁸

27 Finally, the SPT noted that the State party should 'guarantee in law and in practice the full mandate of the NPM, in particular ... to maintain direct contact with the SPT, in order, inter alia, to follow up on compliance with the present recommendations'.⁵⁹

28 The NPM legislation has to be adapted to the national circumstances with the aim of an effectively functioning NPM.⁶⁰ The SPT's satisfaction with the NPM law in Paraguay⁶¹ and Honduras⁶² may be referred to here. Also some other NPM laws provide models on certain provisions, eg giving broader powers than required by the OPCAT⁶³ or containing a provision that resemble the provisions of the OPCAT.⁶⁴

⁵⁹ CAT/OP/ITA/1 (n 25) para 14.

⁶¹ SPT, 'Report on the Visit to the Republic of Paraguay' (2010) UN Doc CAT/OP/PRY/1, para 56: 'The law 'meets the minimum requirements of the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (OPCAT), including financial independence of the MNP.'

⁶³ The Prevention of Crimes of Torture Act in New Zealand, for example, was amended to provide for the NPM to 'make any recommendations it considers appropriate to the person in charge of a place of detention' to improve the conditions, treatment or for prevention: see Crimes of Torture Act 1989 (NZ) s 27(b) as amended. Murray, 'One Size Does Not Fit All' (n 5) 491–92.

Similarly, the French legislation establishing the Inspector General for Places of Detention states that visits may take place to any place within French territory where persons are deprived

3.1.2 Financial Independence: ‘necessary resources for the functioning’

29 Financial independence is not expressly mentioned in the text of the OP. However, it is a very important aspect of functional independence and implied by the obligation of States parties under Article 18(3) ‘to make available the necessary resources for the functioning of the national preventive mechanisms’. In this sense, the SPT has stressed that ‘only financial autonomy of the NPM can guarantee its functional independence’.⁶⁵ The SPT stated clearly in its Guidelines that ‘[t]he NPM should enjoy complete financial and operational autonomy when carrying out its functions under the Optional Protocol.’⁶⁶ The Paris Principles state that ‘[t]he national institution shall have an infrastructure which is suited to the smooth conduct of its activities, in particular adequate funding.’⁶⁷ Financial independence thus has two aspects: autonomy on budgetary issues and disposal of an adequate budget.

3.1.2.1 Financial Autonomy

30 For the SPT, the NPM should enjoy complete financial autonomy when ‘carrying out its functions’ under the OP.⁶⁸ Also the Paris Principles make clear that financial autonomy is a fundamental requirement of independence: without it NPMs ‘cannot exercise operational autonomy or independence in decision-making’.⁶⁹ Hence, the NPM should be able to make decisions on how best to allocate funding for specific aspects of its work free from both governmental control and the need for governmental authorization or approval.⁷⁰

31 As to the source of funding, ie the body determining the funding, the Paris Principles formulate an aim of funding ‘to be independent of the Government and not be subject to financial control’.⁷¹ The implicitly suggested solution that funding be provided by the legislature has also been foreseen for NHRIs to assure their overall of their liberty by virtue of a decision of a public authority, although it hurries to clarify that any health establishment entitled to receive patients who are hospitalised without their consent, as provided for in public health legislation, will also be visited; see Loi no 2007-1545 du 30 octobre 2007 instituant un Contrôleur général des lieux de privation de liberté (FR), Art 8. And in some countries, in the Former Yugoslav Republic (FYR) of Macedonia, eg, legislation includes the mandate and detailed powers of the NPM, as recommended by the SPT: ‘a legal amendment to the Ombudsman’s legislation provides for specific powers to bring the institution in line with OPCAT requirements. These include that the Ombudsman will conduct regular unannounced visits to all places of detention and will be given access to all information in these places. The law also states that officials are responsible for informing the Ombudsman of how they have implemented its recommendations within 30 days of receiving its reports’: see APT, ‘Opportunities and Challenges’ (n 34) 7.

⁶⁶ CAT/OP/12/5 (n 20) para 12.

⁶⁷ Paris Principles (n 5) Principle 2 (Composition and guarantees of independence and pluralism). It continues: ‘The purpose of this funding should be to enable it to have its own staff and premises, in order to be independent of the Government and not be subject to financial control which might affect its independence.’ The SPT referred to the Paris Principles on the question of resources as offering ‘an adequate set of standards to ensure the genuine functional independence of the NPMs and the persons who form part of it’: see CAT/OP/SWE/1 (n 14) para 38.

⁶⁸ CAT/OP/12/5 (n 20) para 12. In its mission reports, the SPT recommended that the States parties ‘allow the NPM as a collegial body to have budgetary independence by ensuring access to a budget of its own’ and ensure that the NPMs ‘are able to freely determine how to use the resources available to them’: see CAT/OP/MDA/1 (n 58) para 20(b); SPT, ‘Report on the Visit to New Zealand’ (2014) UN Doc CAT/OP/NZL/1, para 14.

greater independence from the executive,⁷² an issue that is even more crucial for NPMs.⁷³ However, even funding by the legislative may not be without problems.⁷⁴ The NPM's founding law should specify the source and nature of funding.⁷⁵ Financial autonomy implies also that the NPM is funded through a separate budget line.⁷⁶

32 In practice, most NPMs receive their funding from the State budget⁷⁷ or from the same source as the institution the NPM has been established from or has become

However it must be noted that, in itself, receiving funds from the legislature is not sufficient to guarantee adequate funding: eg, the South African Human Rights Commission receives its funding from Parliament as well as reports to it on a regular basis, but the interest from the parliamentarians has been at times minimal and repeated calls for increase in funding have fallen on deaf ears: see South African Human Rights Commission (SAHRC), 'Thirteenth Annual Report' (SAHRC 2009).

On the Protector of Human Rights and Freedoms (PHRF) in Montenegro: 'The SCA notes that the mandate of the PHRF has expanded in recent years to include responsibility as the NPM under OPCAT and to provide for an anti-discrimination mandate. While the PHRF has some additional funding for these mandates, the SCA is concerned that the budgetary resources allocated to the PHRF are insufficient for it to effectively carry out its mandate': see Global Alliance of National Human Rights Institutions (GANHRI) 'Report and Recommendations of the Session of the Sub-Committee on Accreditation (SCA)' (Geneva 2016), <<https://nhri.ohchr.org/EN/AboutUs/GANHRIAccreditation/Documents/SCA%20FINAL%20REPORT%20-%20MAY%202016-English.pdf>> accessed 12 December 2018.

⁷⁴ Murray and others (n 15) 123. It may be noted that the SPT recommends in its Compilation of Advice on financial autonomy of the NPM with respect to the budget of the NHRI: 'A request for the national preventive mechanism budget should be drafted by the mechanism itself . . . and submitted to the State authorities and/or legislative power . . . In case of a public hearing or audience in the National Assembly/Congress, the Subcommittee is of the view that the head of the national preventive mechanism should present the draft budget and respond to any related questions. Once the budget is approved, decision-making regarding the use of specific mechanism resources remains the prerogative of the mechanism itself.' The method of funding should not affect the perceived independence of the NPM, neither by the source of funding nor by emergency solutions. See SPT, 'Report on the Visit for the Purpose of Providing Advisory Assistance to the National Preventive Mechanism of the Federal Republic of Germany, Report to State Party' (2013) UN Doc CAT/OP/DEU/1, para 37: 'the SPT notes that some federal institutions have tried to support the mechanism by providing, for example, logistical support and transportation. While the SPT understands the good intentions of those federal institutions in doing so, such activities could affect the perceived independence of the NPM by making it dependent on the practical support provided by the administration'.

⁷⁵ APT and IIDH (n 5) 91; see also APT, Guide (n 5) 46.

⁷⁷ Steinerte (n 3): eg, the German National Agency for the Prevention of Torture, the German NPM, receives its funding from the Federal Ministry of Justice of Germany: see Federal Agency for the Prevention of Torture, 'Annual Report 2009/2010' (Federal Agency for the Prevention of Torture 2011) 12.

part of.⁷⁸ In fact, the source of funding has not so often been an issue of concern as the level of funding.⁷⁹

3.1.2.2 Adequate Budget

33 While Article 18(3) OP requires States parties only to make the resources necessary for ‘the functioning’ of an NPM available, the SPT Guidelines state that ‘[t]he necessary resources should be provided to permit the effective operation of the NPM in accordance with the requirements of the Optional Protocol’.⁸⁰

34 Resources for an effective functioning include human, material and financial resources.⁸¹ Material resources include, inter alia, vehicles, interpretation, and working spaces.⁸² As to human resources, the NPM must have sufficient personnel and financial means to remunerate experts to visit the number of places of detention covered by the NPM’s mandate effectively.⁸³ The budget should be sufficient to leave the NPM the decision on frequency and manner of the visits and follow-up visits⁸⁴ as well as enable the NPM to fulfil its other functions, ie write visit reports and annual reports including recommendations, and submit proposals on legislation.⁸⁵

⁷⁹ Steinerte (n 3) 16; see above para 29 on adequate funding.

⁸¹ The SPT concretized that an NPM ‘must have structures equipped with the human, material and financial resources which will enable it to function satisfactorily’: see CAT/OP/SWE/1 (n 14) para 38.

⁸³ The SPT specifies that this obligation also entails enabling the NPM to have a sufficient number of staff (CAT/OP/NZL/1 (n 68) para 14), including secretariat and external experts (CAT/OP/MLT/1 (n 21) para 32). The SPT recommends that the State party provide the NPMs ‘with the means to ensure that they have access to the full range of relevant professional expertise, as required by OPCAT’ (CAT/OP/NZL/1 (n 68) para 14). A ‘sufficient number’ of personnel is for the SPT such as to ensure that the NPM’s ‘capacity reflects the number of places of detention within its mandate, as well as being sufficient to fulfil its other essential functions under the Optional Protocol’: see CAT/OP/NZL/1 (n 68) para 14(c); CAT/OP/ARM/1 (n 26) para 36; CAT/OP/DEU/1 (n 74) para 26.

⁸⁴ While the SPT argued in its first report that it is sufficient to provide the NPM with the resources it needs to merely function satisfactorily ‘in the light of the number and distribution of places of detention ... and the numbers of persons to be visited regularly and with a periodicity which is reasonable for adequate monitoring’ (CAT/OP/SWE/1 (n 14) para 39), it has since increased its demands: it recommended that the respective State party ensure that the NPM ‘is able to carry out visits in the manner and frequency that the NPM itself decides’ (CAT/OP/ARM/1 (n 26) para 34; CAT/OP/NLD/1 (n 26) para 49), has the funds allowing the NPM to ‘draw up annual work plans for visits’ (CAT/OP/ARM/1 (n 26) para 32; CAT/OP/NLD/1 (n 26) para 48; see also CAT/OP/BRA/1 (n 76) para 86) and is able ‘to carry out its visiting programme in all regions of the State party and to conduct follow-up visits’; see CAT/OP/DEU/1 (n 74) para 38; CAT/OP/ARM/1 (n 26) para 32.

⁸⁵ Furthermore, funding should allow the NPM to ‘systematically enlist the support of other bodies with whom it wishes to cooperate’ (CAT/OP/NLD/1 (n 26) para 48; CAT/OP/ARM/1 (n 26) para 32; CAT/OP/BRA/1 (n 76) para 87) and suffice for the logistical and other infrastructure related needs, including ‘publication of its reports and relevant dissemination tools’ (CAT/OP/ARM/1 (n 26) para 32; CAT/OP/NLD/1 (n 26) para 48).

35 Clearly, the mandate of NPMs is very cost-intensive. After all, to conduct regular visits to all places of detention by a sufficient number of qualified staff, to examine regularly the treatment of persons detained therein and to make recommendations to the relevant authorities is a highly professional, time consuming, responsible, and emotionally demanding task. Such positions are only attractive for the most competent and professional individuals when an adequate honorarium is provided if they exercise this function on a part-time basis.⁸⁶ Thus, in the mission report on Malta, the SPT recommended that the State party ‘consider making membership of the NPMs a full-time and remunerated position’.⁸⁷ In its mission reports to Germany, the SPT voiced concrete concern that there was only one honorary member with a mandate extending to some 370 institutions⁸⁸ and four honorary members for the Joint Commission responsible for monitoring some 13,000 places of detention.⁸⁹ Indeed, it must be underlined: it is ‘by the allocation of adequate resources that States parties demonstrate their genuine commitment to the prevention of torture’.⁹⁰ If not, a consequently low quality of work will decrease the overall deterrent effect of the NPM’s work and thereby negatively affect its preventive function.⁹¹

3.1.3 Period of Office and Protection From Removal

36 The third aspect of functional independence is that the members and staff of NPMs shall be appointed for a minimum period of office. The SPT noted that ‘[p]eriods of office, which may be renewable, should be sufficient to foster the independent functioning of the NPM.’⁹² When the period of office of NPM members is determined,⁹³ it seems reasonable that the members and staff of NPMs be appointed for a minimum period of four to six years.⁹⁴

⁹⁰ SRT (Nowak) A/65/273 (n 22) para 83. Apart from a few cases of good practice (‘[a] minority of NHRs have received extra resources explicitly aimed at funding the NPM work. This is the case for example in Montenegro, Georgia, Austria and Sweden’: see APT, ‘Opportunities and Challenges’ (n 34) 12), many governments have claimed, when existing institutions were designated to undertake NPM functions, that such undertaking does not require extra funding (Steinerte (n 3); this is the case in many States Parties, like The Netherlands, where no additional funding has been allocated to institutions designated as part of the Dutch NPM: Inspectorate of Security and Justice (n 56) 15; see also Murray, ‘One Size Does Not Fit All’ (n 5) 496, referring to, eg, Denmark and the UK) aiming perhaps for a ‘cost-saving’ option: Steinerte and Murray (n 3) 61–62. This approach is apparent in relation to both ombudspersons and HRCs, and poses significant problems for both: see Steinerte and Murray (n 3) 62. For example, in relation to the Costa Rican Ombudsman, see examination of the State report by the Committee Against Torture, including CAT, ‘List of Issues to be Considered During the Examination of the Second Periodic Report of Costa Rica’ (2008) UN Doc CAT/C/CRI/Q/2, para 28; see also CAT, ‘Conclusions and Recommendations of the Committee against Torture: Costa Rica’ (2008) UN Doc CAT/C/CRI/CO/2, para 26; New Zealand Human Rights Commission, ‘Report of the Ombudsman 2008/2009’ (2009) <http://www.ombudsman.parliament.nz/system/paperclip/document_files/document_files/372/original/ar_2008-09.pdf?1348524067> accessed 11 November 2017; see also New Zealand Human Rights Commission, First Annual Report of Activities Under the Optional Protocol to the Convention Against Torture (OPCAT): 1 July 2007 to 30 June 2008 (Human Rights Commission 2008) 24.

⁹¹ As the SPT stated, insufficient budget, lack of honoraria for members of the NPM, and absence of support from an administrative team may jeopardize the ‘quality of reports, the motivation of the members and, in the long term, the credibility of the NPM as a whole’: in CAT/OP/MDA/1 (n 58) para 14.

37 As with the members of the SPT, staggering the end-date of terms of office of the NPM members ensures that there is continuity in the membership and institutional knowledge. The relevant legislation should specify the period of office.⁹⁵

38 The issue of dismissal is crucial for the independence of the NPM. The members and staff of the NPM shall be protected against any arbitrary removal during their term of office. Grounds for dismissal shall be specified in the relevant legislation.⁹⁶

3.2 Independence of the NPMs' Personnel

39 Besides independence of the NPM, Article 18(1) OP obliges the States Parties to guarantee that their 'personnel' is 'independent'. To reach this aim of independence for NPM members, the procedure for their selection has to fulfil certain criteria.

3.2.1 'personnel'

40 An NPM's independence is affected by how individuals carry out the day-to-day work, the manner in which they operate, including their experience, as well as their ability to keep certain distance and not to be influenced by others.⁹⁷ Hence, 'personnel' is to be understood as every person involved in the substantive work of the NPM: members of the NPM (ie, persons officially appointed to the institution),⁹⁸ staff (ie, persons hired by NPM members to support their work),⁹⁹ as well as external experts and other potential contributors.¹⁰⁰

3.2.2 'independence'

41 According to the SPT's Guidelines, '[m]embers of NPMs should . . . ensure that they do not hold or acquire positions which raise questions of conflicts of interest'.¹⁰¹ Hence, the NPM's independence and impartiality stand and fall with the personnel carrying out the NPM's mandate. Conflicts of interest should, therefore, be avoided by all personnel of the NPM.¹⁰² taken into account. cf Manfred Nowak, UN Covenant of Civil and Political Rights: CCPR Commentary (2nd rev edn, N.P. Engel 2005) 319ff. The SPT recommends that the State 'ensure that the NPMs have a . . . membership with sufficiently long terms of membership' (CAT/OP/MLT/1 (n 21) para 28), finding that the practice in one country of a one-year term of membership does not conform with the NPM Guidelines and the OPCAT (CAT/OP/MLT/1 (n 21) para 27). Regarding a draft law providing for a length of mandate of three years, the SPT suggests adding the possibility of reappointment for a second and last mandate 'in order to retain persons with accumulated experience in the field of prevention of torture' (CAT/OP/MDA/1 (n 58) para 31(d)). The Paris Principles only define the following requirements: 'In order to ensure a stable mandate for the members of the institution, without which there can be no real independence, their appointment shall be effected by an official act which shall establish the specific duration of the mandate. This mandate may be renewable, provided that the pluralism of the institution's membership is ensured' (Paris Principles (n 5) Principle 3 (Composition and guarantees of independence and pluralism)). One suggestion for NHRIs is that 'five years is a reasonable period within which members can be effective but not too influenced by concerns about future job prospects'; ICHRP and OHCHR (n 29) 12.

¹⁰⁰ The SPT stated that '[p]ursuant to article 18 of the Optional Protocol, the State must guarantee the functional independence of the national preventive mechanism as well as the independence of its staff': CAT/OP/ECU/2 (n 38) para 16.

¹⁰¹ CAT/OP/12/5 (n 20) para 19. In one case, the SPT recommended that the NPM law 'provide that membership of the NPM is incompatible with any other function which could affect its independence and impartiality': CAT/OP/BEN/1 (n 14) para 20.

¹⁰² For definition of the term 'personnel', see para 41.

42 Conflicts of interest can only be prevented if individuals are institutionally and personally independent. Institutional independence leads to the situation that neither the members nor the staff of the NPM may be subject to any orders or instructions by any State authority or other stakeholder. Hence, due to potential conflict of interest, persons holding a position in the branches of state,¹⁰³ above all from the executive branch,¹⁰⁴ including the police, military, and other security forces, are precluded from the position as NPM members or other personnel.¹⁰⁵ Civil servants should not be appointed as members or staff of an NPM; also if they are not subject to any orders or instructions during their terms of office, perceived independence would suffer inappropriately.

43 Personal independence is more difficult to grasp. It has been seen as lack of close friendships, political allegiances or pre-existing professional relationships vis-à-vis leading figures in the respective areas, with focus on the executive branch.¹⁰⁶

44 Even if a person working for an NPM acts in an impartial manner despite existing institutional or personal dependence, perceived independence is at stake. The loss of this valuable characteristic can seriously compromise the work of the NPM.

45 Privileges and immunities are crucial for independence. Article 35 OP provides further details in this regard.

46 Independence of the NPMs' personnel is assured by a certain selection procedure and period of office.

3.2.3 Procedure for Selection of NPM Members

47 According to the SPT and with reference to Article 18(1) and (2) OP, members of the NPM should be selected through an 'open, transparent and inclusive process'.¹⁰⁷ The head of the NPM should also be appointed by such a procedure.¹⁰⁸ This selection process should preferably be prescribed in the governing NPM legislation.¹⁰⁹ Such legislation should also specify the period of office of the members of the NPM as well as any grounds for their dismissal¹¹⁰ and set out 'appointment criteria and membership processes'.¹¹¹

48 The State party should advertise publicly posts becoming vacant within the NPM.¹¹² The published criteria should aim to select the most competent¹¹³ and independent¹¹⁴ persons. A public nomination process is highly important as it also guarantees the other qualities envisaged by the SPT: an open, inclusive, and public appointment procedure of competitive character.¹¹⁵ Additionally, it is suggested that interviews be held in public.¹¹⁶ Public can also keep an eye on the aim that the selection is in accordance with published criteria.¹¹⁷

49 The consultation process of the State party should be very inclusive, involving civil society organizations such as NGOs, social and professional organisations, and universities, as well as other experts.¹¹⁸ The process can be led by an independent judicial appointments commission¹¹⁹ or in case of an institutional and political separation between the executive Government and the parliament, a Parliamentary Committee.¹²⁰

50 The selection body taking the substantive decision (ie, appointing the NPM members) must be free from any perceived or real conflict of interests.¹²¹

51 There are no prerogatives regarding the formal appointment, but direct appointment by the executive branch of Government is incompatible with the Paris Principles.¹²²

- (a) Non-governmental organizations responsible for human rights and efforts to combat racial discrimination, trade unions, concerned social and professional organizations, for example, associations of lawyers, doctors, journalists and eminent scientists;
- (b) Trends in philosophical or religious thought;
- (c) Universities and qualified experts;
- (d) Parliament;
- (e) Government departments (if these are included, their representatives should participate in the deliberations only in an advisory capacity).'

¹¹⁹ APT, Guide (n 5) 41.

¹²⁰ ICHRP and OHCHR (n 29) 14.

¹²¹ The SPT has only voiced its concern with selection by the President and/or the executive of the State party (CAT/OP/BRA/1 (n 76) para 16: The SPT voiced concern with a draft NPM law proposing as method for selecting NPM members a system whereby the President of the State selects 'NPM members from a list of candidates prepared by [a body], whose members, in turn, are selected and appointed by the President.' The SPT found stronger words in the case of 'appointments being made at the sole discretion of the Minister for Home Affairs and National Security'. It reminded the State Party that its current practice is not in conformity with the NPM Guidelines and the OPCAT (CAT/OP/MLT/1 (n 21) para 27). And the fact that the relevant law provides that the NPM 'will be a collegial body, comprised of one President and two members [who are] to be appointed by the President of the Republic, following a decision of the Council of Ministers and the opinion of the relevant Parliamentary Commissions' seems to have been one reason for the SPT to note that the legislation does not 'clearly provide for sufficient functional, personal and financial independence required for a NPM to be in compliance with OPCAT (Article 18)'; CAT/OP/ITA/1 (n 25) para 13) and noted that 'any perceived or real conflict of interests of the selection panel could cause damage to the legitimacy of the elections and, thus, should be avoided' (CAT/OP/MDA/1 (n 58) para 19). Therefore, the manner of selection is central, namely because it 'gives [the NPM members] independence from influence or control by the arm of Government the office is designed to investigate - the executive/administrative branch'—and other governmental and non-governmental bodies that could influence its activities. See Linda C Reif, 'Building Democratic Institutions: The Role of National Human Rights Institutions in Good Governance and Human Rights Protection' (2000) 13 Harvard Human Rights Journal Spring 1, 25.

¹²² ICHRP and OHCHR (n 29) 14.

3.3 Expertise and Pluralism

3.3.1 'required capabilities and professional knowledge'

52 For the NPM to be effective, professional work is necessary when exercising its mandate by conducting visits¹²³ or issuing recommendations.¹²⁴ An NPM can only have a deterrent, ie preventive, effect in the long run if visits are conducted professionally and the recommendations are of a certain quality. Hence, the prerogative for expertise and pluralism concerns the same persons that Article 18(1) OP demands independence for the personnel of the NPM, ie the NPM's members, staff,¹²⁵ external experts, and other potential contributors.

53 The NPM should dispose over an adequate range of expertise within its membership which should only occasionally, but not regularly, be supplemented by engaging outside experts.¹²⁶ Adequate expertise among the NPM members is also a prerogative as decision-making should be in the hand of a collegial body reflecting expertise and pluralism.¹²⁷

54 The expertise of the NPM should be manifold to enable a multidisciplinary approach¹²⁸ and to be able to adequately deal with the numerous issues covered by the broad mandate provided by the OP.¹²⁹ Also Principle 29 of the Principles for the Protection of ¹²³ It may be referred to Principle 29 of the Body of Principles (n 108), which requires that 'places of detention shall be visited regularly by qualified and experienced persons appointed by, and responsible to, a competent authority distinct from the authority directly in charge of the administration of the place of detention or imprisonment'; see also Joint Committee on Human Rights, UN Convention Against Torture: Discrepancies in Evidence Given to the Committee About the Use of Prohibited Interrogation Techniques in Iraq (twenty-eighth report); Memorandum from Rachel Murray, Director of the OPCAT Project Team, University of Bristol, dated 3 April 2008 (2007-08, HL 157, HC 527). See also Murray, 'One Size Does Not Fit All' (n 5).

¹²⁴ APT, 'Opportunities and Challenges' (n 34) 10.

¹²⁶ In its Guidelines and Assessment Tool the SPT notes that, '[b]earing in mind the requirements of Article 18 (1) and (2) of the Optional Protocol', 'members of the [NPM] should collectively have the expertise and experience necessary for [its] effective functioning': CAT/OP/12/5 (n 20) para 17; CAT/OP/1/Rev.1 (n 5) para 13. However, in its Guidelines, it states that 'the NPM should ensure that its staff have between them the diversity of background, capabilities and professional knowledge necessary to enable it to properly fulfil its NPM mandate': CAT/OP/12/5 (n 20) para 20. In the Assessment Tool, the SPT adds that the NPM should 'ensure that its team has the diversity of background, ... capabilities and professional knowledge, necessary to enable it to properly fulfil its mandate': CAT/OP/1/Rev.1 (n 5) para 13, referring to CAT/OP/12/5 (n 20) paras 17 and 20. Concretely, the SPT recommends 'enabling candidates of different backgrounds to be considered for membership in the NPM, in order to increase the likelihood of a variety of professions and experience, including greater gender and ethnic balance and adequate representation of minority groups within the NPM and its visiting teams': CAT/OP/DEU/1 (n 74) para 32. In another report, the SPT recommends that the State party 'ensure that the NPMs have a multi-disciplinary, independent, impartial and competent membership with sufficiently long terms of membership': CAT/OP/MLT/1 (n 21) para 28, emphasis added.

¹²⁷ APT, Guide (n 5) 51. In fact, the SPT stated clearly in its ninth Annual Report that '[w]hen power is vested in one individual, such as an Ombudsperson, the requirements of a plurality and a multidisciplinary approach are by definition impossible': CAT/C/57/4 (n 16) para 15. In such a case, these requirements are transferred to the NPM's staff; APT and IIDH (n 5) 250.

¹²⁸ In its first report, the SPT elaborated that '[p]revention necessitates the examination of rights and conditions of deprivation of liberty', and such examination should 'take a multi-disciplinary approach', in CAT/OP/SWE/1 (n 14) para 36; see also CAT/OP/MLT/1 (n 21) para 28; SPT, 'Report on the Visit to Kyrgyzstan' (2014) UN Doc CAT/OP/KGZ/1, para 18; CAT/OP/ECU/2 (n 38) para 38.

¹²⁹ The SPT notes in its Assessment Tool that the NPM should 'ensure that its team has the diversity of background ... capabilities and professional knowledge, necessary to enable it to properly fulfil its mandate': in CAT/OP/1/Rev.1 (n 5) para 13, referring to CAT/OP/12/5 (n 20) paras 17 and 20. In one mission report,

All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment requires that ‘places of detention shall be visited regularly by qualified and experienced persons appointed by, and responsible to, a competent authority distinct from the authority directly in charge of the administration of the place of detention or imprisonment’.¹³⁰

55 The SPT places a different emphasis than that foreseen in Article 5(2) OP relating to the Subcommittee on Prevention.¹³¹ Pursuant to the SPT Guidelines, ‘inter alia, relevant legal and health-care expertise’ should be included.¹³² In order to lessen the likelihood of ill-treatment, the SPT notes the need of expertise in relation to persons in a situation of vulnerability, such as women, juveniles, members of minority groups, foreign nationals, persons with disabilities, and persons with acute medical or psychological dependencies or conditions.¹³³

56 Hence, the NPM’s team should include professionals from the medical, psychiatric, legal, and psychosocial fields¹³⁴ as well as experts relating to indigenous peoples,¹³⁵ children and adolescents,¹³⁶ women’s rights¹³⁷ and gender,¹³⁸ social work, security, and pedagogy.¹³⁹ International expertise is also relevant, namely in human rights legal standards, especially in view of the human rights-based approach of the NPM’s work.¹⁴⁰

57 The obligation for multidisciplinary expertise among the membership of the NPM requires of NHRIs and in particular Ombudsman’s offices, who are predominantly made up of lawyers to draw on additional expertise. Solutions can be the formal inclusion of civil society representatives by the ‘Ombudsman plus’ model,¹⁴¹ or the involvement of specific experts in particular visits.¹⁴² In some smaller States that have difficulties finding available local expertise, hiring experts from neighbouring States has been considered.¹⁴³

the SPT recommended ‘enabling candidates of different backgrounds to be considered for membership in the NPM, in order to increase the likelihood of a variety of professions and experience ... within the NPM and its visiting teams’, in compliance with Article 18(2) OP: in CAT/OP/DEU/1 (n 74) para 32.

¹³⁰ Body of Principles (n 108) Principle 29.

¹³¹ See above Art 5 OP. Art 4(3) of the Mexican Draft (E/CN.4/2001/67 (n 6) Annex I) contained a similar provision for the composition of NPMs (see para 3 above), but this provision was not included in the final text.

¹⁴² Murray and others (n 15) 135. In this sense, the SPT states in its Assessment Tool that in its activities the NPM ‘should also take benefit from cooperation with civil society, universities and qualified experts, Parliament and Government departments, among others. Special attention should be paid to developing relations with civil society members dedicated to working with vulnerable groups.’

¹⁴³ Murray and others (n 15) 135.

58 To make their work most efficient, the NPM's staff and members should be regularly trained and review their working methods.¹⁴⁴

59 The OP envisages that the NPM should function as a soft-power instrument, using recommendations and constructive exchange to fulfil its task. Therefore, capabilities that are also necessary for the NPM personnel are, as demanded for the members of the SPT by Article 5(2) OP, high moral character or integrity¹⁴⁵ 'and respect within society. Members should also have demonstrated a personal commitment to the prevention of torture and ill-treatment and improvement of conditions in places of detention.'¹⁴⁶

3.3.2 Composition of the Membership

60 Article 18(2) OP explicitly provides that States parties, in establishing NPMs, shall 'strive for a gender balance and the adequate representation of ethnic and minority groups in the country'. While an NPM membership with expertise in gender issues and minority rights could already guarantee sensitivity for special issues regarding these groups, personal representation would guarantee it further. More importantly, the principle of pluralism ensures the NPM to have the knowledge and the ability to gather the information necessary to make effective recommendations.¹⁴⁷ Sensitivity to different groups will help the NPM to fulfil its mandate more effectively, as it may make it possible to obtain better information from interviewees when they can talk about their treatment with someone of their ethnic or minority group, can communicate directly in the same language of a linguistic minority, or can share extremely intimate issues with a person of the same gender.¹⁴⁸

3.3.3 'adequate representation of ethnic and minority groups'

61 While the term 'ethnic and minority groups' can be understood as referring to 'national, ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities',¹⁴⁹ in line with international human rights law, the phrase could be interpreted in a broader manner in the context of the OP, including members of other groups in a situation of vulnerability such as migrants,

¹⁴⁴ The SPT considers it 'to be essential that the NPMs, as a first priority, educate their members and staff concerning the role and functioning of NPMs under the OPCAT and the Guidelines on national preventive mechanisms'; in CAT/OP/MLT/1 (n 21) para 20. The SPT also recommends that the State party increase the capacity of newly appointed NPM staff members and facilitate and intensify training of members and staff of the NPM; see CAT/OP/BRA/1 (n 76) para 88; CAT/OP/DEU/1 (n 74) para 40. Once it is operational, the NPM, its members and its staff should, according to the SPT Guidelines, be required to 'regularly review their working methods and undertake training in order to enhance their ability to exercise their responsibilities under the Optional Protocol'; CAT/OP/12/5 (n 20) para 31; CAT/OP/DEU/1 (n 74) para 14; see also CAT/OP/ECU/2 (n 38) para 70. The SPT specified that in order to ensure consistency of working methods and transfer of knowledge among all, adequate training on standard operating procedures for all persons participating in visits, including associated experts, is essential and should be sought, including through the development of handbooks and assistance of international partners; in CAT/OP/ARM/2 (n 34) para 44. Finally, the SPT recommended a NPM to provide its staff with security training; in CAT/OP/ECU/2 (n 38) para 58. The SPT also recommends that the NPM continue to develop its capacity through increasing cooperation with the Subcommittee, as well as through engagement with other NPMs and state preventive mechanisms; in CAT/OP/BRA/1 (n 76) para 88.

persons with special needs, or being LGBTI.¹⁵⁰ The ‘adequate representation’ of the respective country’s minority groups is of relevance here. Hence, the SPT urged a State party to ensure that the composition of the NPM ‘adequately represents the country’s key ethnic and minority groups’.¹⁵¹ In this sense, while the OPCAT does not specifically specify the need for the inclusion of indigenous communities, this is an issue to be considered in countries with indigenous inhabitants.

62 The principle of pluralism in the composition of national human rights institutions plays an important role in the Paris Principles and is also appropriate for NPMs.¹⁵²

63 Due to its importance, the SPT also recommends that provision be made for gender balance and ethnic and minority representation in the NPM composition.¹⁵³

3.4 Due Consideration of the Paris Principles

64 Article 18(4) OP explicitly refers to the Paris Principles that States parties ‘shall give due consideration’ to when ‘establishing NPMs’, ie during the whole procedure of any establishment according to Art 17 OP. The Paris Principles consist of a comprehensive series of recommendations on the role, composition, status, and functions of national human rights institutions (NHRIs).¹⁵⁴ In particular, the Paris Principles stress the independence, pluralism, and efficiency of national human rights institutions and demand that their composition and mandate should be clearly set forth in a constitutional or legislative act.

65 In fact, by explicitly referring to the Paris Principles, Article 18(4) OP was interpreted as also possibly encouraging states to use NHRIs for the implementation of the OP¹⁵⁵—which, to date, the majority of States parties to the OP have done.¹⁵⁶ However, it must be noted that an NHRI’s compliance with the Paris Principles does not equal compliance with the OP, since the requirements on NPMs are found in Article 18(1)–(3) OP. Hence, on the one hand, compliance with the Paris Principles is the key determining

¹⁵⁵ NHRIs have been encouraged to engage in the issue of prevention of torture and other ill-treatment in several ways (APT, Asia Pacific Forum, and OHCHR, ‘Preventing Torture: An Operational Guide for National Human Rights Institutions’ (2010)), including monitoring places of detention. Several provisions of the Nairobi Declaration, adopted at the Ninth International Conference of National Institutions for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights (Nairobi, 21–24 October 2008), are directly relevant to torture prevention, such as providing training for law enforcement and prison staff; conducting unannounced visits to police stations and places of detention; reviewing standards and procedures; and promoting ratification of the United Nations Convention against Torture and its Optional Protocol. The annual review of the implementation of the Nairobi Declaration during meetings of the International Coordinating Committee provides an additional opportunity for NHRIs to be more actively involved in the prevention of torture: see APT, Asia Pacific Forum, and OHCHR (n 155) 83, referring as legal basis to Paris Principles (n 5) Principle 3(a)(ii) and (iv) as well as 3(b) (Competence and responsibilities). See also ICHRP and OHCHR (n 29) 18–19: ‘NHRIs should have authority to make regular visits to all places of detention, at times of their choosing, preferably with minimal notice. Their powers should be those foreseen for national preventive mechanisms in the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture.’

factor in the accreditation process by the Global Alliance of NHRIs (GANHRI, before the Sub-Committee on Accreditation (SCA)) of the International Coordinating Committee (ICC) with status 'A', 'B', or 'C'.¹⁵⁷ On the other hand, the SPT made clear that even after the accreditation process has become more robust and arguably more independent,¹⁵⁸ accreditation by the ICC with 'A' 'does not automatically qualify an NHRI as an NPM'.¹⁵⁹ Therefore, the accreditation process by the ICC cannot be seen as indicative for the level of fulfilment of the OP requirements by the respective NHRI, ie not even a status 'A' of an NHRI means that it is in full compliance with the OP.¹⁶⁰

The International Coordinating Committee of National Institutions for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights (ICC) was originally established by NHRIs at their International Conference in Tunis in 1993. It coordinates the activities of Paris Principle-compliant NHRIs internationally, including the accreditation of its members (ie providing official recognition that NHRIs meet or continue to comply fully with the Paris Principles). Accreditation takes place under the rules of procedure of the International Coordinating Committee's Sub-Committee on Accreditation (SCA). The SCA can accord NHRIs with one of three statuses: 'A status' denotes a voting member of the ICC that complies fully with the Paris Principles; 'B status' denotes an observer member that does not fully comply with the Paris Principles or has not yet submitted sufficient documentation to make that determination; and 'C status' denotes a non-member that does not comply with the Paris Principles. The SCA clarified in its General Observations regarding its assessment of NHRIs as NPMs that it will consider, besides of general compliance with the Paris Principles, 'as it thinks appropriate'—eg as far as applicable to NHRIs—'any guidance that has been developed by the relevant treaty body', referring as example to the SPT's Preliminary Guidelines: SPT, 'First Annual Report of the Subcommittee on Prevention of Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment' (2008) UN Doc CAT/C/40/2, ch IV(B) (Preliminary guidelines for the ongoing development of national preventive mechanisms) paras 28–29. 'It notes, however, that its role is to assess a NHRI against the Paris Principles (n 5), whereas the relevant treaty body undertakes its assessment of a national preventive or monitoring mechanism against the relevant international instrument upon which it is based': ICC, General Observations (n 71) 46. The SPT clarified this, arguing that, '[w]hereas the accreditation process is clearly seen as of value to/by NHRIs ... it is important to distinguish between the general human rights mandate of NHRIs and the specific preventive mandate of NPMs': CAT/C/42/2/Corr.1 (n 159) para 49—including Corr. Rather, it 'is a supplementary mechanism but should not be used as a procedure for accreditation of national mechanisms in general, since it is for the Subcommittee to make such assessments in specific cases': CAT/C/44/2 (n 20) para 61.

¹⁶⁰ CAT, 'Concluding Observations: Azerbaijan' (2009) UN Doc CAT/C/AZE/CO/3, para 10: 'Notwithstanding the "A" rating received by the Ombudsman's office from the body that oversees implementation of the Paris Principles, the Committee is deeply concerned at the information from the State party that the Ombudsman's office is not permitted by its founding documents to monitor all State organs. The Committee is concerned that the Ombudsman lacks the requisite degree of independence to be the national institution responsible for investigating complaints of torture and other human rights violations, as well as to serve as the national prevention mechanism under the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture'. In this sense, NHRIs also recognized in the Nairobi Declaration (n 155) that states should consider designating NHRIs as NPM only when the necessary powers and resources are made available to them.

Mandate and Power of National Preventive Mechanisms

The national preventive mechanisms shall be granted at a minimum the power:

- (a) To regularly examine the treatment of the persons deprived of their liberty in places of detention as defined in article 4, with a view to strengthening, if necessary, their protection against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;
- (b) To make recommendations to the relevant authorities with the aim of improving the treatment and the conditions of the persons deprived of their liberty and to prevent torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, taking into consideration the relevant norms of the United Nations;
- (c) To submit proposals and observations concerning existing or draft legislation.

1. Introduction

1 The mandate and power of NPMs, as defined in Article 19 OP, must be read together with the corresponding obligations of States parties under Articles 17, 18, and 20 to 23 OP. The main function of NPMs is to conduct regular visits to all places of detention in their respective country, to examine the conditions of detention therein and the treatment of detainees with a view to strengthening their protection against torture and ill-treatment. On the basis of such visits, the NPM shall make recommendations to the relevant authorities with the aim of improving conditions of detention and preventing torture. In addition, the NPMs are granted the power to comment on existing or draft legislation, allowing them to become involved in preventive legislative efforts.

2 As was pointed out above, the purpose of visits to places of detention is three-fold: preventive, fact-finding, and as a means of cooperating with the Government concerned.¹ Whereas Art 1 OP stresses the preventive function of visits to places of detention as the overall objective of the Protocol,² Art 19 OP concentrates more on the fact-finding task of NPMs.

Article 5

National mechanisms shall have the following powers, as a minimum:

- (a) To examine the situation of persons deprived of their liberty with a view to strengthening, if necessary, their protection from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;
- (b) To make recommendations to the competent authorities with a view to improving the treatment and conditions of persons deprived of their liberty and preventing torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;
- (c) To propose or comment on draft or existing legislation on this question;
- (d) To take any initiatives that would help States Parties fulfil their obligations under the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and other relevant international instruments.

Article 15 (new)

For the purpose of this Protocol, a State Party wishing to establish a national mechanism undertakes to ensure that:

- (a) The national mechanism will be composed of independent experts fulfilling the requirements set out in Articles 4 paragraph 3 and 5 paragraph 2;
- (b) It has full powers to issue recommendations to the concerned authorities;
- (c) It has unrestricted access to all places where persons are deprived of their liberty under all situations, including in peacetime, times of public disorder or states of emergency and during war in accordance with international humanitarian law;
- (d) Unrestricted access to persons deprived of their liberty;
- (e) Full freedom to interview the persons deprived of their liberty without witnesses, with the assistance of interpreters, if required, as well as all relevant personnel or persons;
- (f) Unrestricted liberty to contact, inform and meet with the Sub-Committee with a view to implementing Article 9 paragraph 1 (d);
- (g) The reports on its visits shall be public.

Article 3

National mechanisms may, inter alia:

- (a) Examine the situation of persons deprived of their liberty pursuant to an order of a public authority with a view to strengthening, if necessary, their protection from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;
- (b) Make recommendations to the competent authorities with a view to improving the treatment and conditions of such persons and preventing torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;
- (c) Propose or comment on draft or existing legislation on matters relating to the treatment of such persons;
- (d) Request, where necessary, technical advice from the Subcommittee on Prevention designed to assist States Parties with the effective implementation of their obligations under the Convention with a view to strengthening, if necessary, the protection of such persons from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

6 During its ninth session from 12 to 23 February 2001, the Working Group discussed the alternative draft the delegation of Mexico had submitted with the support of GRULAC.

7 Most delegations considered that the mandate of national mechanisms should be as broad as possible and that they should apply universal standards for the protection of detainees.⁶

8 At the tenth session of the Working Group from 14 to 25 January 2002, the concept of national preventive mechanisms was further elaborated.⁷ With regard to the functions of these mechanisms, the delegations of China, the United States of America, and Egypt proposed that national and regional bodies should take the leading role in visiting places of detention. However, the delegation of the United States of America strongly opposed the concept of establishing mandatory visiting mechanisms for these bodies with unrestricted authority to visit places of detention and suggested instead a system of limited authority that would provide checks and balances and ensure accountability.⁸

9 In the proposal presented by the Chairperson-Rapporteur, the concept of national preventive mechanisms was described in Part IV, where it was stated that States would be required to maintain, designate, or establish national mechanisms, based on the Paris Principles, to work in close cooperation with the Subcommittee.⁹ During the discussions on the proposal, the delegation of Japan stated that there were no reasonable grounds for the establishment of a mandatory national visiting mechanism that would have basically the same mandate as an international visiting mechanism.¹⁰

3. Issues of Interpretation

10 Article 19 OP precisely lists the operational powers of an NPM: to regularly examine the treatment of the persons deprived of their liberty, to make recommendations to the relevant authorities and to submit proposals and observations concerning existing or draft legislation. These are declared to be the minimum powers to be granted to an NPM ('shall be granted at a minimum the power ...').

3.1 Regularly Examine Places of Detention

11 Whereas Article 11(1)(a) OP defines the mandate of the SPT to 'visit the places referred to in article 4', Article 19 OP formulates the power to 'regularly examine the treatment of the persons deprived of their liberty'. However, it is evident that the latter provision attributes the conduct of visits as the core mandate of the NPM, which is also referred to in Article 3 OP as 'visiting' body and in the Preamble when noting the objective of the OP to be 'to establish a system of regular visits undertaken by independent international and national bodies.' In this sense, the SPT clarifies in its Self-Assessment Tool that '[t]he major function of a national preventive mechanism in discharging its preventive role is to carry out visits ... to places of detention. The purpose of such visits is to regularly examine the treatment of persons deprived of their liberty'.¹¹

12 The word 'examine' reflects the fact that a preventive function of visits also implies a fact-finding task.¹² While this power is mainly realized by visiting places of detention, it also includes the analysis of information from other reliable sources.¹³ In fact, the SPT stated that the NPMs should ensure that information is collected 'from all available sources, such as the administration and staff of the institution visited, detainees from all areas and units, other visitors, if appropriate, and outside actors, such as civil society and other monitoring mechanisms'.¹⁴ On this information, the NPM should keep record in an archive¹⁵ and put in place an 'effective data management system'¹⁶ to build an institutional memory.¹⁷

13 The phrase 'regularly examine' in Article 19(a) OP mainly means examination by regular visits.¹⁸ While the OP leaves the decision on the frequency of the visits to places

¹⁷ See also below Art 20 OP, § 33.

¹⁸ In this sense, the Preamble refers twice to 'regular visits to places of detention' and Article 1 OP refers to 'a system of regular visits undertaken by ... national bodies'. Principle 29 of the Body of Principles also provides that 'places of detention shall be visited regularly by qualified and experienced persons appointed': see UNGA, 'Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment', Res 43/173 of 9 December 1988 (Body of Principles), Principle 29; The SPT stated in its Guidelines that the State should 'ensure that the NPM is able to carry out visits in the manner and with the frequency that the NPM itself decides (SPT, 'Guidelines on National Preventive Mechanisms' (2010) UN Doc CAT/OP/12/5, para 25) and that the NPM should 'establish a work plan or programme which, over time, encompasses visits to all, or any, suspected, places of deprivation of liberty' in the realm of the OP (para 33; see also SPT, 'Report on the Visit for the Purpose of Providing Advisory Assistance to the National Preventive Mechanism of Honduras, Report for the National Preventive Mechanism' (2010) UN Doc CAT/OP/HND/3, para 18).

of deprivation of liberty with the NPM, it makes clear that the NPM should not ignore any institution or geographical area.¹⁹ For the monitoring system established by the OP to have a preventive character, it is crucial that visits are conducted in a regular manner. Regularity is highlighted as necessary element for inspections of places of detention to be the 'most effective preventive measure'²⁰ against torture and other ill-treatment.

14 The SPT stated that NPMs have to visit places of detention with appropriate frequency²¹ or periodically.²² The aim of a 'sufficient frequency' is 'to make an effective contribution to the prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment'.²³ NPMs must conduct visits in such a frequency to achieve two of their central purposes: first, to have by repetition of appearance a preventive effect by deterrence (the mere fact of being able to enter places of detention unannounced²⁴ reduces the risk of torture and other forms of ill-treatment); second, to have up-to-date information on the treatment of persons concerned.²⁵ The latter enables the NPM to make a system-wide analysis that aims to identify risks of torture and other ill-treatment and, thus, allows root causes to be addressed.

15 However, this minimum of frequency, the NPM should not visit every place of detention with the same mathematical regularity, but rather prioritize certain types of or individual places of detention. In this sense, the SPT recommends that NPMs 'collectively develop criteria for selecting the facilities to be visited that will ensure that they are all visited periodically'.²⁶ Such criteria are, according to the SPT's Self-Assessment Tool, 'the type and size of institutions, their security level and the nature of known human rights problems, while leaving room for flexibility in the allocation of resources to ensure that follow-up and urgent visits can be undertaken'.²⁷

16 The terms 'persons deprived of their liberty' and 'places of detention' shall be interpreted in line with the respective definitions in Article 4(1) and (2) OP.²⁸

The very fact that national or international experts have the power to inspect every place of detention at any time without prior announcement, have access to prison registers and other documents, are entitled to speak with every detainee in private and to carry out medical investigations of torture victims has a strong deterrent effect. At the same time, such visits create the opportunity for independent experts to examine, at first hand, the treatment of prisoners and detainees and the general conditions of detention.'

3.2 Recommendations

17 Article 19(b) OP mandates NPMs to make recommendations to the authorities aimed at, first, ‘improving the treatment and the conditions of the persons deprived of their liberty’ and, second, ‘to prevent torture, cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment’. NPMs are, thus, empowered to make recommendations with the aim not only to contribute to immediately correcting problems affecting detainees, but, more importantly, to examine all aspects of detention and identify the factors and the situations that increase the risk for persons deprived of their liberty to be ill-treated or tortured.²⁹ In this sense, the SPT notes in its Self-Assessment Tool that recommendations should, in general, ‘have a preventive focus, addressing systematic gaps and practices (root causes)’.³⁰ It clarifies in its Approach to the Concept of Prevention that the purpose of recommendations is not only to bring about compliance with international obligations and standards but to offer practical advice and suggestions as how to reduce the likelihood or risk of torture or ill-treatment occurring and will be firmly based on, and informed by, the facts found and circumstances encountered during the visits undertaken.³¹

Focus should be laid on the legal and administrative measures applied within the place; the material conditions; the regime of detention and the activities; the medical care; the organization and management of detainees and staff; and the relations between staff and detainees.³²

18 The SPT noted that the NPM’s recommendations should be well founded and, in general, feasible in practice. They should be ‘relevantly focused, precise and non-complex, so as to avoid confusion in the dialogue about their implementation’.³³ As practical guidance to make recommendations as effective and useful as possible, the APT proposes a ‘double-smart model’ which suggests the application of the following criteria: specific, measurable, achievable, results-oriented, time-bound as well as solution-suggestive, mindful of prioritization, sequencing and risks, argued, root-cause responsive, targeted.³⁴

3.2.1 Reference to International Standards

19 According to Article 19(b) OP, NPMs shall, when making recommendations, take ‘into consideration the relevant norms of the United Nations’. Hence, while the OP was established to ensure compliance with the CAT’s provisions, the NPMs’ recommendations should ‘reflect, among other things, relevant international norms and practices’.³⁵

The list of relevant binding and non-binding international human rights law in Article 2(2) OP can be referred to here,³⁶ respective regional standards as developed by the CPT or the ECtHR being also seen as useful.

20 As the NPM is in continuous contact with the State party, it should also pay due attention to the recommendations made by the SPT, if they are made public or communicated to the NPM in accordance with Article 16 OP.³⁷

3.2.2 Relevant Authorities

21 According to Article 19(a) OP, the recommendations shall be made ‘to the relevant authorities’. The OP leaves it open to the NPM to determine which authorities are ‘relevant’ to any particular recommendation. The NPM’s work will be more effective when recommendations are made both to the management of the place of detention such as the directors/managers of the places of detention concerned’ and as well as to the supervisory authority, ie ‘governmental authorities’.³⁸ The director of the place visited can address practical solutions while system-wide issues require decisions ‘to be taken at the national level or amendments to legislation’.³⁹ Thus, in line with Article 22 OP, every recommendation should also be submitted, as also foreseen by the SPT in addressing the recommendations to the ‘governmental authorities’,⁴⁰ to the highest relevant respective authority (eg the Minister of Interior, Justice, Defence, or Health). The SPT noted that ‘[i]n particular cases it may be appropriate to recommend that authorities immediately put an end to certain practices and initiate a criminal investigation.’⁴¹

22 It is advisable that the legislative act establishing an NPM defines the process and the central authority. This discretion of the NPM should be provided for in the NPM’s implementing legislation.⁴²

3.2.3 Communication of Recommendations

3.2.3.1 Preliminary Recommendations

23 In the course of an immediate debriefing with the representatives of the place of detention at the end of a visit, preliminary observations and possible recommendations should be presented—particularly those that can be implemented immediately.⁴³ Such direct communication of recommendations in a debriefing with the representative of the place visited is even more important if the place is privately run where the link to the competent supervisory state authority is weak and the representative may otherwise be excluded from the knowledge on the problems.

⁴³ See below Art 20, § 54. The SPT welcomes it when an NPM strives for non-bureaucratic approaches, making recommendations relating to specific concerns to the authorities responsible for those places they visit; see SPT, ‘Report on the Visit for the Purpose of Providing Advisory Assistance to the National Preventive Mechanism of the Federal Republic of Germany, Report to State Party’ (2013) UN Doc CAT/OP/DEU/1, para 14; see also CAT/OP/DEU/2 (n 21) para 11.

24 A personal debriefing or formal written feedback in the form of a detailed letter or a preliminary report gives the director of the place of detention the opportunity to address any shortcomings before the state or supervisory authorities is/are informed.⁴⁴ Furthermore, the transparent inclusion of the visited institutions in the dialogue inhibits ‘monitoring fatigue’, which could negatively influence the cooperation and willingness to implement recommendations.⁴⁵

3.2.3.2 Visit Reports

25 While no provision in the OP commits the NPMs to issue visit reports,⁴⁶ the SPT clarified in its Guidelines that ‘[t]he NPM[sic] should produce Reports [sic] following their visits . . . and any other forms of Report [sic] which it deems necessary. When appropriate, Reports[sic] should contain recommendations addressed to the relevant authorities.’⁴⁷ In fact, for effectiveness of their visits, NPMs should issue a report on every visit and do so as promptly as possible.⁴⁸

26 For the NPM to fulfil its mandate effectively, its visit reports need to be of a certain quality. The SPT sets the following standards for visit reports in its Self-Assessment Tool:

Visit reports should focus on the most important issues, that is, the reporting of ill-treatment, gaps in policies, regulations and practices, and the appropriateness of conditions under which detainees are living, and should reflect any systematic lack of protection of the rights of detainees. Good practices should be noted and filed for systematic analysis. Cases of deliberate ill-treatment should be examined to identify gaps in the protection of persons deprived of their liberty.⁴⁹

As to the depth of information included in the report, the SPT noted that it should enable readers, including those who are not familiar with the institutions visited, to form a realistic picture of the situations. Thus reports should describe the places visited giving details of, for example, the dimensions of cells, the lighting, the toilet facilities, and the ventilation.⁵⁰

3.3 Submitting Proposals and Observations

27 Article 19(c) OP empowers NPMs to assess existing and proposed legislation and submit observations and proposals, ie draft legislation.⁵¹ This power further strengthens the broad preventive approach and is only limited by the relevance of legislation for the NPM’s mandate,⁵² ie the State party’s international obligations and other international standards relevant to the prevention of torture and ill-treatment, including the CAT, OP, and the Paris Principles.⁵³ This capacity of the NPM constitutes a key aspect of its mandate and represents an important function complementary to visits: problems identified during visits to places of detention may be the result of inadequate laws or regulations. The capacity to propose revisions to respond to gaps in legal protections and/or to propose legal safeguards constitutes an important tool for NPMs.⁵⁴

28 To facilitate this aspect of the NPM's mandate, the SPT sees an obligation on the side of the State party to inform the NPM of any draft legislation under consideration which is relevant to its mandate and give the NPM the possibility to make proposals or observations on existing or draft policy or legislation.⁵⁵

29 The NPM on its side should, first, develop an alert system to ensure to be informed on relevant legislation and draft laws.⁵⁶ Second, in order to fully discharge its mandate in accordance with Article 19(c) OP, the NPM should by its own initiative advocate for legislative changes and their implementation with parliamentarians and Government.⁵⁷ To that end, the NPM should, based on a comprehensive analysis of the problem detected, have a proactive strategy for setting priorities and should follow up on its comments and recommendations.⁵⁸

3.4 Further Activities

30 Article 19 OP provides for the power that shall be granted to the NPMs by the States parties 'at a minimum'. In its Self-Assessment Tool, the SPT has listed the mandate of the NPM to include also the following activities:

- Publicizing relevant information about its work, especially through education and by making use of a broad range of media⁵⁹
- Submitting proposals concerning relevant human rights action plans⁶⁰
- Performing systematic reviews of interrogation rules, instructions, methods, and practices and of arrangements for the detention and treatment of detained persons⁶¹
- Examining rules or instructions issued in regard to the duties and functions of law enforcement personnel, civil or military, medical personnel, public officials, and other relevant persons⁶²

⁵⁷ ibid. As concrete examples, the SPT brought forward that the NPMs should ensure that the relevant legislative framework encompasses an absolute prohibition of torture and a definition of torture in accordance with the provisions in Article 1 CAT, and that the penalties for infractions are commensurate with the gravity of the offence. Furthermore, the term 'place of detention' should be defined in national law, bearing in mind the principles set out in the OP and the protection of human rights. NPMs should also dedicate themselves to the establishment of 'a national register of allegations of torture, any investigation or criminal proceedings undertaken and the outcome thereof', as well as of 'an independent body with the capacity to assess allegations of torture and ill-treatment in accordance with the [so-called Istanbul Protocol]': see CAT/OP/1/Rev.1 (n 11) para 39; see also OHCHR, Istanbul Protocol: Manual on the Effective Investigation and Documentation of Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (United Nations Publication 2004).

Obligations of States Parties to Facilitate Visits by the National Preventive Mechanisms

In order to enable the national preventive mechanisms to fulfil their mandate, the States parties to the present Protocol undertake to grant them:

- (a) Access to all information concerning the number of persons deprived of their liberty in places of detention as defined in article 4, as well as the number of places and their location;
- (b) Access to all information referring to the treatment of those persons as well as their conditions of detention;
- (c) Access to all places of detention and their installations and facilities;
- (d) The opportunity to have private interviews with the persons deprived of their liberty without witnesses, either personally or with a translator if deemed necessary, as well as with any other person who the national preventive mechanism believes may supply relevant information;
- (e) The liberty to choose the places they want to visit and the persons they want to interview;
- (f) The right to have contacts with the Subcommittee on Prevention, to send it information and to meet with it.

1. Introduction

1 Article 20 mirrors Article 14 OP, which foresees almost identical obligations for States parties regarding the Subcommittee.¹ This reflects the desire of most States parties/delegations to grant the NPMs a mandate as broad as the Subcommittee's as compromise.² Indeed, it was the intention of the Mexican Draft of 2001 that the assessment of the situation of detainees on the basis of regular visits to all places of detention be the primary function of NPMs, whereas the Subcommittee was meant to advise, assist and supervise NPMs and only conduct country missions and visits to places of detention by itself when there was a particular need.³ However, the EU Draft, which was tabled in reaction to the Mexican Draft shortly thereafter, maintained the Subcommittee as the body primarily responsible for conducting regular missions and visits to places of detention, whereas NPMs were only foreseen if States parties wished to establish them.⁴

2 The final result is demonstrated by Article 20 OP: the OPCAT establishes similar duties for international and national OPCAT bodies, along with corresponding obligations for States parties and hence accords equal importance to international and national efforts to prevent torture and other ill-treatment.⁵

1. In order to assess the situation of persons deprived of their liberty and to make the relevant recommendations, national prevention mechanisms shall carry out visits to places where persons are deprived of their liberty; they shall have:
 - (a) Unrestricted access to all relevant information concerning the number of persons deprived of their liberty pursuant to an order of a public authority or at its instigation or with its consent or acquiescence, as well as the number of places and their location;
 - (b) Unrestricted access to all information relevant to treatment and conditions of detention;
 - (c) Unrestricted access to all places where persons are deprived of their liberty;
 - (d) Unrestricted access to all premises where persons are deprived of their liberty;
 - (e) Freedom to interview persons deprived of their liberty, without witnesses, personally or with the assistance of an interpreter, if required, as well as of any personnel deemed necessary;

- (f) Freedom to select the places they wish to visit;
 - (g) Unrestricted freedom to contact, inform and meet with the Sub-Committee.
2. Such visits may not be prohibited except in cases of absolute military necessity or serious disturbances in the place to be visited and then only as an exceptional and temporary measure. The organization, frequency and duration of such visits may not be restricted.
3. No person or organization may be penalized or otherwise harmed for having provided relevant information to a national mechanism.

Article 7

1. National mechanisms shall:
 - (a) Inform the competent authorities of their observations and make recommendations to them;
 - (b) Regularly inform the Subcommittee of their observations and recommendations.
 2. No personal data shall be made public without the prior consent of the person concerned, subject to liability.
- 4 *EU Draft (22 February 2001)*⁷

Article 15 (new)

For the purpose of this Protocol, a State Party wishing to establish a national mechanism undertakes to ensure that:

- (a) The national mechanism will be composed of independent experts fulfilling the requirements set out in Articles 4 paragraph 3 and 5 paragraph 2;
- (b) It has full powers to issue recommendations to the concerned authorities;
- (c) It has unrestricted access to all places where persons are deprived of their liberty under all situations, including in peacetime, times of public disorder or states of emergency and during war in accordance with international humanitarian law;
- (d) Unrestricted access to persons deprived of their liberty;
- (e) Full freedom to interview the persons deprived of their liberty without witnesses, with the assistance of interpreters, if required, as well as all relevant personnel or persons;
- (f) Unrestricted liberty to contact, inform and meet with the Sub-Committee with a view to implementing Article 9 paragraph 1 (d);
- (g) The reports on its visits shall be public.

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

5 During its ninth session from 12 to 23 February 2001, the Working Group discussed the alternative draft the delegation of Mexico had submitted with support of the GRULAC.

6 Most delegations considered that the mandate of national mechanisms should be as broad as possible and that they should apply universal standards for the protection of detainees. In order to be an effective method of preventing torture, such mechanisms should, according to most delegations, have full access to all persons deprived of liberty.⁸

7 At the tenth session of the Working Group from 14 to 25 January 2002, the concept of NPMs and questions related to their mandate were further elaborated.⁹ With regard to the functions of these mechanisms, the delegations of China, the United States of America, and Egypt proposed that national and regional bodies should take the leading role in visiting places of detention. The delegation of the United States of America, however, strongly opposed the concept of establishing mandatory visiting mechanisms with unrestricted authority to visit places of detention. They suggested instead a system of limited authority that would provide checks and balances and ensure accountability. In contrast, many other delegations found that the national mechanisms should have unrestricted access to all places where persons were deprived of their liberty as well as full freedom to interview persons held in those places, without witnesses.

8 In the proposal presented by the Chairperson-Rapporteur, the concept of NPMs was described in Part IV, where it was stated that States would be required to maintain, designate, or establish national mechanisms, based on the Paris Principles, to work in close cooperation with the Subcommittee.¹⁰ During the discussions on the proposal, the delegation of Japan stated that there were no reasonable grounds for the establishment of a mandatory national visiting mechanism that would have basically the same mandate as an international visiting mechanism.¹¹

3. Issues of Interpretation

9 Article 20 is almost identical to Article 14 OP. The various issues of interpretation related to ‘access to all information’ in Article 20(a) and (b) OP, ‘access to all places of detention and their installations and facilities’ in Article 20(c) OP, ‘the opportunity to have private interviews’ in Article 20(d) OP as well as ‘the liberty to choose the places’ to visit and ‘the persons’ to interview in Article 20(e) OP have been discussed above for the Subcommittee, and the relevant conclusions apply equally to the NPMs and the interpretation of Article 20 OP.¹²

10 Apart from this, there are a few important differences between the respective mandates that raise questions of interpretation. Furthermore, the SPT concretized certain issues for the NPMs and issued recommendations on the NPMs’ visiting methodology. The powers that the States parties grant their NPMs according to Article 20 OP shall enable them to ‘fulfil their mandate’. Hence, these powers are to be interpreted as guaranteeing the effective functioning of NPMs.¹³ All powers attributed to the NPM in Article 20 OP should be expressly provided by the implementing legislation.

3.1 Access to Information

11 For the effective functioning of its monitoring mandate, an NPM must be in the position to make effective use of its liberty of choice among the places of detention according to Article 20(e) OP. Effective use necessitates having the relevant information for decision-making. Hence, information from the State party is of great importance, in addition to information from other sources such as civil society, professional bodies, and NHRIs.¹⁴

12 Access to all information concerning the number of places and their location is highly relevant as only complete information on all places of detention enables an NPM to fulfil the entire scope of its mandate according to Article 4 OP. Hence, the State party should inform its NPM thoroughly on all places of detention and changes in due course.¹⁵

13 The State party is also obliged to provide its NPM access to all information referring to the treatment of those persons as well as their conditions of detention. This requires that State authorities and authorities in charge of places of detention keep respective records to facilitate prompt access by the NPM to accurate and full information relating to detainees and records on detainees, such as incident registers and medical records, in addition to personal files.¹⁶ Other relevant information includes records of arrest, complaints, the use of disciplinary sanctions, the use of restraint, medical treatment requested and received, time spent in detention; statistical information on gender, age, ethnic background, etc; and information on staff and personnel;¹⁷ as well as schedules (including records of time spent in cells, time spent exercising, time spent indoors versus outdoors, and time spent working), and suicide watch arrangements.¹⁸ The NPM should actively seek all relevant information in the framework of its visiting activities.¹⁹ The NPM visiting team should examine information relating to detainees that the responsible authorities have to keep due to their obligation under Article 20(b), such as incident registers and medical records, in addition to personal files.²⁰ According to the SPT's Assessment Tool, 'existing registries, examples of case records and activities and services for the detainees should be assessed, unless the visit is thematic only. If a visit is thematic, its coverage of the facilities can be only partial.'²¹ The SPT concretizes in its reports that NPM team members should

¹⁵ In one mission report, the SPT recommends the State party to 'develop a full list of the types of places where persons are deprived of their liberty', and urges the State party to 'ensure that the NPMs are given full and unlimited access to all relevant information ... to enable them to properly fulfil their mandate': SPT, 'Report on the Visit for the Purpose of Providing Advisory Assistance to the National Preventive Mechanism of the Republic of Malta, Report to State Party' (2016) UN Doc CAT/OP/MLT/1, paras 23 and 34.

‘inspect all facilities in the places of deprivation of liberty it visits, systematically examining records and files and cross-checking them with information from other sources. If records are unavailable, the NPM should recommend changes in existing practices that will enable them to become available.’²²

14 Regarding allegations and incidents of torture and ill-treatment, access of the NPM to a central confidential database could be useful to initiate urgent action where needed and set further necessary priorities in its visiting plan.²³

15 If necessary, the States parties need to enact exemption to allow NPMs access to, and use of, relevant information in accordance with the OP.²⁴

3.2 Access to All Places of Detention and Their Installations and Facilities

3.2.1 Unrestricted Access

16 Article 20(c) OP does not explicitly oblige the States parties to grant the NPM ‘unrestricted’ access, in contrast to Article 14(1)(c) OP for the SPT. However, a literal interpretation of Article 20(c) OP leads to the conclusion that, due to the absence of any limitation clause comparable to Article 14(2) OP to ‘temporarily prevent the carrying out’ of a visit, NPMs shall have access to all places of detention and their installations and facilities without restriction in space²⁵ and time.²⁶

²² CAT/OP/DEU/2 (n 19) para 64; see also SPT, ‘Report on the Visit for the Purpose of Providing Advisory Assistance to the National Preventive Mechanism of Honduras, Report for the National Preventive Mechanism’ (2013) UN Doc CAT/OP/HND/3, para 25.

²⁶ Such unrestricted access would correspond to the explicit provisions and intentions of the EU Draft. On the one hand, it was precisely this word ‘unrestricted’ which the Chairperson deleted in her final draft and which distinguishes Article 20(c) from the comparable provision of Article 14(1)(c). A comparative analysis of Articles 14(2) and 20(c) could, therefore, be interpreted in the sense that certain restrictions might be permitted. But, contrary to Article 14(2), the reason and extent of such restrictions are not defined, and even the Mexican Draft had only envisaged ‘cases of absolute military necessity or serious disturbances in the place to be visited as an exceptional and temporary measure’. On the other hand, however, Article 32 VCLT permits the use of the travaux préparatoires only when the textual approach either leaves the meaning of a treaty provision ambiguous or obscure, or leads to a manifestly absurd or unreasonable result. Article 20(c) OP is not particularly ambiguous or obscure, and an unrestricted right of access of NPMs to all places of detention cannot be regarded as an absurd or unreasonable result of interpretation. On the other hand, it might not be unreasonable for a Government, in the exceptional case of serious prison riots, to prevent an NPM temporarily from entering such a prison. In any case, even the travaux préparatoires, if at all accepted as a supplementary method of interpretation, clearly suggest that such restrictions could only be justified as a truly exceptional and temporary measure, as envisaged in the Mexican Draft. The grounds of public safety or natural disaster, as foreseen in Art 14(2) in relation to a visit of the Subcommittee, could certainly not be invoked as a reason for denying a NPM access to a detention facility.

17 Unrestricted access in space means according to the SPT that the State party ensures ‘full and unlimited access to these places.’²⁷ The SPT recommended that a State party ‘ensure and facilitate effective and unrestricted access’ of independent monitoring bodies to certain facilities falling under the OP.²⁸ In order to fulfil this obligation of access, the SPT recommends that it ‘be expressly included in the legislative basis for the NPM, and that the State maintain a dialogue with different stakeholders in the field to identify and clarify the exact meaning of the term “places of detention”, in full conformity with the OPCAT.’²⁹

18 Access without temporary restriction means that no circumstances permit an objection by the Government or the authorities to a visit by the NPM due to the intended time; it is entitled to access ‘at any time of day or night.’³⁰

3.2.2 Unannounced Visits

19 As Article 14(c) OP for the SPT, also Article 20(c) OP does not oblige the States parties to grant unannounced access. Although also no other provision of the OP explicitly speaks of ‘unannounced visits’ to be conducted by the NPM, the compromise on the two-pillar system must be understood in the sense that visits by both the national and international visiting body do not require any prior consent. The SPT has expressly confirmed that the right of NPMs to conduct unannounced visits is implied in its mandate.³¹ In this sense, the SPT recommended in numerous mission reports, emphasizing ‘the confidential nature of the NPM work as envisaged in the Optional Protocol’,³² that the NPM keep information about its visits confidential with a view to enabling unannounced visits to be undertaken.³³ In this vein, the SPT has called the system established by the OP a ‘system of unannounced visits to all places of detention by independent experts’,³⁴ confirmed the power of national or international experts ‘to inspect every place of detention at any time without prior announcement’,³⁵ and strongly appealed to all States to ratify the OP and establish NPMs with, among others characteristics, ‘the right to carry out unannounced visits’.³⁶

20 In fact, the essential preventive effect of the NPM can only be achieved if it can conduct unannounced visits. In this sense, the SPT stated in its Self-Assessment Tool that ‘[t]he major function of a national preventive mechanism in discharging its preventive role is to carry out visits, which may be unannounced, to places of detention.³⁷ Furthermore, it has noted in several reports the importance of unannounced visits by the NPM as such visits or short-notice visits, which ‘make it possible to obtain a clearer picture of the prevailing conditions in places of detention’,³⁸ ‘give a much more realistic idea of conditions in a place of deprivation of liberty’,³⁹ ‘assist [the NPM to] ascertain the real situation of persons deprived of their liberty’,⁴⁰ ‘are necessary to ensure that the NPM can form an accurate understanding of the experience of those deprived of liberty’,⁴¹ and ‘allow for greater insights into the real conditions prevailing in a centre of deprivation of liberty’.⁴²

21 It may be added that the NPM has the right to conduct all visits, including follow-up visits, unannounced.⁴³

3.2.3 Private Interviews

22 Article 20(d) OP guarantees that NPMs have the same right to conduct private interviews as the SPT does under Article 14(d) OP.⁴⁴ Private interviews of persons who have been deprived of their liberty are a central source of information on the treatment and conditions of detention. The SPT noted that ‘[w]ith due respect for the security regulations in force in any given institution ... it is possible to conduct interviews with detainees inside cells and without surveillance.’⁴⁵ However, all detainees ‘must be treated with humanity and their private space within the cells should be respected’.⁴⁶

23 Also with other persons who the NPM believes may supply relevant information, Article 20(d) provides for private interviews. Such valuable sources might be alleged victims who are no longer detained, family members of detainees, witnesses, lawyers, doctors, prison staff, NGO, and media representatives.⁴⁷

24 Unless there are substantive reasons for doing otherwise, the NPM should conduct individual and private interviews with persons deprived of their liberty and employees of the institution in question, including medical personnel.⁴⁸ If the size of the visiting team is limited, the SPT recommended that the members of the team give such interviews with detainees at least an equal priority with speaking to those in authority.⁴⁹ As to the aim of the interview, the SPT formulated clearly that interviews should be used ‘to take a closer look at structural aspects of the system of deprivation of liberty in order to collect

⁴⁴ The SPT noted in its Guidelines, CAT/OP/12/5 (n 31), para 25: ‘The State should ensure that the NPM is able to carry out visits in the manner and with the frequency that the NPM itself decides. This includes the ability to conduct private interviews with those deprived of liberty.’

information and thus be in a position to undertake a comprehensive, substantiated analysis of institutional, legal and public policy risk factors'.⁵⁰ The NPM should establish a policy setting out which types of information can be collected during group interviews and which types of information should be collected in private interviews only.⁵¹ As group interviews pose certain risks as reprisals and have the potential to rapidly get out of hand,⁵² the specific circumstances in the respective institution, the usefulness and relevance of such an interview should be evaluated.⁵³

25 Holding an interview in private means out of ear and sight of the authorities to ensure confidentiality, privacy, and to avoid reprisals. Moreover, to preserve the anonymity of the source of possibly sensitive or critical information obtained during a private interview, a number of private interviews should be conducted.⁵⁴ When reporting on systematic issues or crimes, attention must be taken to assess whether the sharing of information might inevitably lead to the disclosure of personal data or to the identification of a person who has not given express consent for his/her personal data to be revealed. In such cases 'the obligation of confidentiality prevails'.⁵⁵

26 At the beginning of the interview, the members of the NPM should introduce themselves by telling them their name, profession, and position in the NPM.⁵⁶ To facilitate communication and trust-building, the interviewer should explain the NPM's mandate, especially its preventive nature, and objectives.⁵⁷ The interviewer 'should also obtain the consent of the interviewee and make it clear that the interview is confidential, voluntary and can be interrupted at any time at the interviewee's request'.⁵⁸

27 The distribution of a leaflet by the NPM members to the detained persons is a useful tool recommended by the to inform about the NPM's mandate and working methods, the concept of informed consent, and contact information. It should also encourage persons to report any reprisal to the NPM.⁵⁹

28 It is of course important that the members of the NPM hold the interview in a professional manner keeping objective distance to staff and focusing on establishing a trustful relationship to the detainees by listening actively and showing interest.⁶⁰ Moreover, they need to be sensitive to the vulnerable situation of the person deprived of liberty, paying due regard to the central 'do no harm' principle. The Istanbul Protocol and monitoring guides of the OHCHR and civil society organizations such as APT provide detailed guidance on how to adequately conduct interviews.⁶¹

3.2.4 Liberty to Choose the Place

3.2.4.1 Prioritization

29 While Article 20(e) OP implies the NPMs' liberty to choose the places they want to visit, it has been already elaborated on Article 19 OP that the principles of effectiveness and prevention demand that, besides a minimum of frequency of visits, the NPM will also need to prioritize certain types of or individual places of detention. Thus, places of detention are not to be visited with mathematical regularity,⁶² but following criteria that make the NPM's work most effective. The criteria chosen should be transparent, clear, and published.⁶³

30 Such criteria should include 'the type and size of institutions, their security level and the nature of known human rights problems'.⁶⁴ A valid addition to these criteria was made in one mission report, namely 'the institutions' accessibility to other oversight mechanisms'.⁶⁵ Regarding the first criterion of type and size of institutions, risk is particularly high, for instance, in places used for the initial phase of detention where interrogations are carried out, in places with a fluctuation of persons deprived of liberty (eg police stations, detention centres for irregular migrants pending deportation, or pre-trial facilities),⁶⁶ as well as in other places with high concentrations of particularly vulnerable categories of detainees (eg detention centres for irregular migrants pending deportation).⁶⁷ Furthermore, next to the criterion of the security level of institutions, the SPT finds the nature of known human rights problems to be relevant for the choice of places of detention to visit.⁶⁸ Places with a record of problems (eg recent complaints, reports from other organizations or the media) should be considered visiting priorities.⁶⁹ Lack of information can also be of relevance via the criterion of accessibility to other oversight mechanisms: it seems sensible for NPMs to also concentrate on places of detention that would otherwise not be open to public scrutiny or external oversight (eg psychiatric institutions, social care homes, or centres for migrants).⁷⁰ detainees have to be treated with humanity and their private space within the cells should be respected'; CAT/OP/ARM/2 (n 43) para 51. In another report, a good practice was identified by the SPT where the NPM staff succeeded in 'establishing rapport with them by listening actively and asking specific questions ... The interviewers also conducted the interviews in such a way that the persons deprived of their liberty could feel at ease and speak spontaneously'; CAT/OP/ECU/2 (n 42) para 56.

31 While the NPM should prioritize the most problematic issues and institutions, it should fulfil its obligation to visit all places of detention in a minimum frequency.⁷¹ Further, additional flexibility and resources should be kept for follow-up and urgent visits.⁷²

3.2.4.2 Information Gathering on the Places of Detention

32 The prioritization of places of detention must be based on all relevant information available on places of detention.⁷³ For that purpose cooperation and exchange of information with civil society as well as other relevant actors is crucial. Particularly those who are in day-to-day contact with persons deprived of their liberty are a very valuable source of information who are in direct. This can be staff of NGOs supporting detained persons, organizations of relatives, social workers, or other monitoring mechanisms.⁷⁴

33 The NPM should 'keep an archive of all relevant information about places of detention and the treatment of persons held there'⁷⁵ and put in place an 'effective data management system'⁷⁶ to be able to establish a long-term strategy of its activities as well as a subsequent annual plan of work.⁷⁷

3.3 Cooperation between NPMs and the SPT

34 According to Article 20(f) OP, States parties endeavour to grant NPMs the 'right to have contacts with the Subcommittee on Prevention, to send it information and to meet with it'. This provision expands the obligation of States parties according to Article 12(c) OP to 'encourage and facilitate contacts between the Subcommittee on Prevention and the national preventive mechanisms'. This direct relationship between the OP bodies establishes the Protocol's complementary system of prevention,⁷⁸ the NPM complementing the work of the SPT at the national level to ensure the continuity of the dialogue with the national authorities.⁷⁹

⁷⁴ In this sense, the SPT noted that the NPM should ensure that 'information from all available sources, such as the administration and staff of the institution visited, detainees from all areas and units, other visitors, if appropriate, and outside actors, such as civil society and other monitoring mechanisms, is collected': see CAT/OP/1/Rev.1 (n 19) para 24; see also CAT/OP/HND/3 (n 22) para 20; CAT/OP/DEU/2 (n 19) para 31; CAT/OP/MDA/2 (n 32) para 25; CAT/OP/SEN/2 (n 33) para 35; CAT/OP/DEU/2 (n 19) para 56; CAT/OP/ARM/2 (n 43) para 41. The SPT concretized in a visit report that 'the day-to-day presence of NGOs and organizations of relatives in places of deprivation of liberty is a valuable source of information that the national preventive mechanism could take advantage of in order to plan its schedule of visits strategically and to determine the extent to which its earlier recommendations have been implemented. In order to enhance the effectiveness of its work, the national preventive mechanism should cooperate with NGOs and other civil society associations that offer assistance, support or services to persons deprived of their liberty. If this is done and if a detainee then asks staff members of the national preventive mechanism for help during one of its visits, they can provide the person with the appropriate information', in CAT/OP/ECU/2 (n 42) para 43.

⁷⁵ CAT/OP/1/Rev.1 (n 19) para 21. ⁷⁶ ibid, para 26; see also CAT/OP/SEN/2 (n 33) para 37.

⁷⁸ See above Preamble OP, § 30.

⁷⁹ See, eg, SPT, 'Report on the Visit to Benin' (2011) UN Doc CAT/OP/BEN/1, para 24; see also below Art 22 OP, § 14.

35 This provision foresees the NPMs' right to direct confidential contact with the SPT and not an obligation to send information or report to it. However, a refusal to cooperate with the SPT prevents the Subcommittee from exercising its duties in regard to NPMs under Article 11(b) OP and may inhibit its reception of valuable information on the situation in the country, especially the implementation of its recommendations.⁸⁰ In fact, according to the SPT's Guidelines, the NPM should 'actively seek to follow up on the implementation of any recommendations which the SPT has made in relation to the country in question, liaising with the SPT when doing so.'⁸¹

36 Additionally, the SPT encouraged in its mission reports the NPMs to transmit their annual reports,⁸² invited NPMs to keep it informed about the process underway in regard to their legislative basis and any other significant new developments,⁸³ and recommended that NPMs continue to develop their capacity through increasing cooperation with the SPT.⁸⁴

37 States parties, when establishing NPMs in accordance with Article 17 OP, should provide for an explicit obligation of NPMs to cooperate with the SPT and to provide it with relevant information.

3.4 Visit Methodology: Further Considerations

38 In accordance with the principle of effectiveness, the NPM should work in such a way as to conduct its visits to places of detention in the most efficient manner.⁸⁵ The following will present what the SPT sees as most effective conduct of an NPM to achieve the overriding purpose of its visits, namely to maximize its preventive impact.

3.4.1 Before the Visit

39 In its Self-Assessment Tool, the SPT noted that, on an ongoing basis, an NPM should develop guidelines for the following issues:⁸⁶

⁸⁰ The SPT stated in its Guidelines, CAT/OP/12/5 (n 31) para 40, that the NPM 'should seek to establish and maintain contact with the SPT, as provided for and for the purposes set out in the Optional Protocol.' In its Rules of Procedure, it did not create an obligation for NPMs to submit to it, upon its request, relevant information, but merely stated that it 'shall maintain direct, and if necessary confidential, contact with [the NPMs], which includes the right to receive information from and meet with them, in accordance with articles 11 and 20(f) of the Optional Protocol': SPT, 'Rules of Procedure' (2013) UN Doc CAT/OP/3, para 30(1), emphasis added.

⁸⁵ In this sense, see CAT/OP/MDA/2 (n 32) para 24; CAT/OP/DEU/2 (n 19) para 51.

⁸⁶ CAT/OP/1/Rev.1 (n 19) para 24; see also CAT/OP/HND/3 (n 22) para 20; CAT/OP/DEU/2 (n 19) para 31; CAT/OP/MDA/2 (n 32) para 25; CAT/OP/SEN/2 (n 33) para 35; CAT/OP/DEU/2 (n 19) para 56; CAT/OP/ARM/2 (n 43) para 41; CAT/OP/1/Rev.1 (n 19) para 29.

- visits to the various categories of places of detention, including instructions for selecting the theme of a visit
- conducting private interviews
- developing policies for dealing with vulnerable groups of detainees
- developing policies for ensuring that information from all available sources, such as the administration and staff of the institution visited, detainees from all areas and units, other visitors, if appropriate, and outside actors, such as civil society and other monitoring mechanisms, is collected.
- reporting individual cases of deliberate ill-treatment
- requesting inquiries
- maintaining the confidentiality of the detainee concerned and any other source of relevant information, and
- protecting such persons against reprisals

40 Besides following these guidelines, the NPM should, according to the SPT's Assessment Tool, consider developing a code of conduct for visiting teams, covering, among other things,

- addressing detainees and staff,
- observing cultural and any other relevant sensitivities,
- conducting individual or group interviews, including how and when to conduct such interviews,
- handling security and safety issues,
- ensuring confidentiality,
- managing internal debriefings in order to coordinate and cross-check data collected and prepare for the closing of the visit,
- ensuring that the visitors do not step outside or in any other way exceed the mandate of the mechanism during a visit, and
- participating in reporting and follow-up.⁸⁷

41 Furthermore, the SPT recommended that the NPM should 'develop a strategy for preventing reprisals and threats' against persons interviewed during visits and others who may provide sensitive or critical information before or after a visit, against members and staff of the mechanism.⁸⁸ Finally, the SPT recommended that the NPM develop protocols, in consultation with a security specialist.⁸⁹

42 As identifying common guidelines for interviews and shared methodology for visits to different places of detention is 'key to the NPM's efficiency', the SPT recommended that, 'in the medium term, the NPM make available operational guidelines and handbooks to all members and staff ... with a view to ensuring consistency of working methods and transferal of knowledge among all members of the NPM.'⁹⁰ The working methods⁹¹ should be regularly reviewed by the NPM, its members, and its staff.⁹²

43 After the general requirements regarding composition of the members and staff of the NPM,⁹³ the SPT noted on the concrete composition of the visiting team that it 'should take into account the necessary knowledge, including with respect to languages, groups with special needs and vulnerable groups, the experience and skills of members, gender balance and the adequate representation of ethnic and minority groups'.⁹⁴

divide the tasks to be completed by all its members before their arrival at the place to be visited, in order to avoid any duplication of work, allow efficient execution of the planned activities and to enable them to cover all necessary areas, and better use [possibly] limited resources. The NPM should divide tasks and have clear attribution of roles among the members of team. The division of tasks during visits should consider the professional qualification of experts and staff in order to maximize the result of such activity.⁹⁵

The SPT also mentioned that efficiency be increased if the members of the team 'choose specific issues to be addressed with particular attention depending on a case by case assessment of each place'.⁹⁶ Moreover, it may be useful that the NPM holds preparatory meetings to establish priorities and set up gender-balanced teams.⁹⁷

45 The duration of an NPM's visit must be adequate for the size, character, and complexity of the place concerned.⁹⁸ In the case of large facilities, this can mean a full visit taking several days.⁹⁹ In order for the NPM to not become predictable and obtain a full picture of the treatment in detention, visits should be carried out at different times, including during the night.¹⁰⁰

46 As to equipment, the SPT recommended that for the purpose of identification and the visibility of the institution the visiting team should, be 'clearly identified as the NPM, eg wearing badges or vests'¹⁰¹ and take a leaflet with information along for distribution to the authorities,¹⁰² the persons deprived of liberty, their family members, and staff of the visited institution.¹⁰³ To verify the actual conditions of the place of detention (eg size, light, temperature), measuring equipment should be taken along, such as torches, lamps, thermometers, and measuring tools for humidity and space measures, etc.¹⁰⁴

3.4.2 During the Visit

47 While particularly at the initial visit it may be important that the team members hold a meeting with the authorities to introduce themselves, the NPM mandate, and the objective of the visit,¹⁰⁵ it is advisable that the monitoring team starts inspecting the ⁹⁴ CAT/OP/1/Rev.1 (n 19) para 23; in its reports, the SPT was less demanding, stating that the composition of the visiting team should be such as 'to allow both general and specific issues to be covered and should include a health-care professional, preferably a doctor'; see CAT/OP/DEU/2 (n 19) para 52; see also CAT/OP/HND/3 (n 22) para 19; CAT/OP/ECU/2 (n 42) para 64.

⁹⁷ In this sense, see CAT/OP/ECU/2 (n 42) para 50.

⁹⁸ The SPT recommended in its mission report on Germany that the NPM 'ensures that the time it spends conducting a visit to a place of detention is commensurate to the size, character and complexity of the place concerned': see CAT/OP/DEU/2 (n 19) para 39.

⁹⁹ In this sense, see CAT/OP/SEN/2 (n 33) para 41.

¹⁰² CAT/OP/ARM/2 (n 43) paras 29 and 46. ¹⁰³ See further down, para 50 on leaflet.

¹⁰⁴ CAT/OP/MDA/2 (n 32) para 29; CAT/OP/DEU/2 (n 19) paras 61–62.

¹⁰⁵ In this sense, the SPT recommended, eg, in its mission report on Armenia that 'members of the NPM explain their mandate clearly to the authorities as well as the working methods used and indicate how interviews facility and interviewing detainees as soon as possible. In the initial conversation with the management, the NPM should also stress that reprisals are explicitly prohibited in the OP and will be focused on in the context of follow-up.¹⁰⁶

48 If there are security-related restrictions proposed by the staff of the place of detention, the NPM team members should consider them carefully.¹⁰⁷ However, what may be the security regulations in force in any given institution, it must be possible to conduct interviews with detainees inside cells and without surveillance.¹⁰⁸ If a member of the NPM team suffers harassment and/or violation of his/her personal integrity, according to the SPT the Government is obliged to 'promptly carry out a full, impartial and detailed investigation into the circumstances surrounding this incident, bring those responsible to justice and take all necessary measures to prevent such incidents to happen in the future'.¹⁰⁹

49 The aim of the NPM's visit is to obtain a full picture of the situation in the given place of detention. The SPT noted in its Analytical Assessment Tool for NPMs that 'practices and tools should be developed to cross-check, test and assess observations and to ensure that recommendations are based on rigorous analysis and are factually well grounded'.¹¹⁰ Triangulation of information, ie the method for fact-finding on visits to arrive at a view of the particular situation under scrutiny 'by thoroughly inspecting the facilities, examining the institution's records, and talking to inmates and staff',¹¹¹ is in the SPT's view, the only way to obtain a full picture of the situation in any given place of detention.¹¹²

50 According to the SPT's Assessment Tool, all facilities within the institution should be visited, unless the visit is thematic only—then, the coverage of the institution can be partial.¹¹³ During the general tour of the institution, sensitive areas to be inspected more thoroughly can be identified.¹¹⁴ Passive observation or deploying the visiting team in groups stationed at various points around the premises is seen by the SPT as useful technique for gathering information besides interviews.¹¹⁵

will be conducted. The SPT is of the opinion that an appropriate and complete presentation to the authorities, especially on the mandate and objective of the visit has a didactic effect on the authorities, and contributes to the visibility and credibility of the NPM. ¹¹¹ CAT/OP/HND/3 (n 22) para 26. In this sense, the SPT noted that relevant information by inmates would merit, if possible, 'a review of the records to corroborate the information and identify possible patterns of violations of the human rights of persons deprived of their liberty'; see CAT/OP/ECU/2 (n 42) para 62.

¹¹² SPT, 'The Approach of the Subcommittee on Prevention of Torture to the Concept of Prevention of Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment under the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment' (2010) UN Doc CAT/OP/12/6, para 5(f) and CAT/OP/HND/3 (n 22) para 26.

51 Regarding individual complaints made by detainees and attempted to resolve them,¹¹⁶ the SPT highlighted that the NPM should rather ‘advise detainees on how and to whom to address individual complaints and seek to ensure the effectiveness of complaints mechanisms as a means of prevention’.¹¹⁷ The SPT recommended that the NPM develop clear guidelines for reporting individual cases of deliberate ill-treatment¹¹⁸ and for requesting, with the consent of the interviewee in question, that investigations be opened.¹¹⁹ However, the information received by the complaint of the person deprived of liberty can be relevant as indicators of systemic or institutional shortcomings.

52 In the conversation with management and staff, the visiting team members should stress that reprisals are explicitly prohibited in the OP and will be focused on in the context of follow-up.¹²⁰

53 The NPM should hold an internal debriefing at the end of the visit and this should be included in the team’s code of conduct.¹²¹ As good practice, the SPT welcomed the practice of NPM staff of sharing the findings among the team and deciding on priority issues as a group before submitting their comments to the director of the institution concerned.¹²²

54 According to the SPT’s Assessment Tool, there should be a ‘policy that provides for an immediate debriefing with the representatives of the place of detention at the end of a visit’.¹²³ The SPT recommended ‘that systematic and constructive debriefings’ should be provided to the responsible persons for the facilities visited, presenting preliminary observations and recommendations, if any—particularly recommendations that can be implemented immediately.¹²⁴ The Subcommittee considered that during the final interview it is essential to be open with the official in charge with regard to the main problems identified, except in respect of individual cases where it is thought that the physical and psychological integrity of detainees would be compromised by the mere fact that the official in charge was directly involved (such situations should be referred to the authorities supervising the official in question).¹²⁵

Emphasis should be put on such feedback that calls for immediate action or is of a humanitarian nature. As a preventive measure, the issues of possible reprisal should be systematically mentioned.¹²⁶

¹¹⁷ The SPT also recalled that ‘the mandate of the NPM differs from that of other bodies working against torture and is characterized by its preventive approach which involves identifying patterns and detecting systemic risks of torture and ill-treatment’: see CAT/OP/DEU/2 (n 19) para 66; CAT/OP/MDA/2 (n 32) para 28; CAT/OP/ARM/2 (n 43) paras 52–53.

55 In the case of criticism and recommendations that are intended to be included in the visit report, good practice suggests that these concerns may be shared in the debriefing after the visit or in a written format, eg letter or preliminary report, to give the competent authority the possibility for comments and factual checking¹²⁷ for the sake of strengthening transparency, trust, and cooperation by more intense dialogue,¹²⁸ especially if the visit report will be published.

Article 21

Prohibition of Sanctions against any Source of Information of the NPM

1. No authority or official shall order, apply, permit or tolerate any sanction against any person or organization for having communicated to the national preventive mechanism any information, whether true or false, and no such person or organization shall be otherwise prejudiced in any way.
2. Confidential information collected by the national preventive mechanism shall be privileged. No personal data shall be published without the express consent of the person concerned.

1. Introduction

1 Article 21(1) mirrors Article 15 OP relating to the Subcommittee. It contains an important principle for the protection of detainees, family members, witnesses, lawyers, NGOs, and other relevant persons or organizations against any reprisals or victimization on the ground of having provided any information, true or false, to the NPM.¹ Such sources of information shall be immune against any civil or criminal liability.²

2 Article 21(2) contains rudimentary provisions about the confidentiality of information provided to the NPM. In the absence of a general duty of confidentiality on the part of NPMs, these provisions raise several questions of interpretation.

Article 15 (new)

For the purpose of this Protocol, a State Party wishing to establish a national preventive mechanism undertakes to ensure that:

(g) The reports on its visits shall be public.

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

5 During the ninth and tenth session of the Working Group, the relevant provisions were not subject to any discussions.⁵

3. Issues of Interpretation

3.1 Prohibition of Sanction

6 For the prohibition of sanctions against any source of information of the NPM in Article 21(1) OP, it may be referred to the questions of interpretation discussed in relation to the identical provision of Article 15 OP.⁶ Thus, only the SPT's elaborations on the issue specifically regarding NPMs will be discussed here.

7 The SPT concretized in its Guidelines:

The State should not order, apply, permit or tolerate any sanction, reprisal or other disability [sic] to be suffered by any person or organisation for having communicated with the NPM or for having provided the NPM with any information, irrespective of its accuracy, and no such person or organisation should be prejudiced in any way.⁷

The persons who fall under the protection of Article 21(1) are those who engage with the NPM or with whom the NPM engages 'in the fulfilment of its functions' under the OP.⁸

8 For the protection of Article 21(1) OP to be effective, the persons that could potentially benefit thereof must be informed of it. As a first step, the legal basis should include provisions on the issue of reprisals and other such actions against NPM members.⁹ Furthermore, the SPT recommended in its Assessment Tool that the NPMs develop a strategy for 'preventing reprisals and threats by detention centre staff, as well as by fellow detainees' against persons interviewed during a visit, and other persons who provide sensitive or critical information before or after a visit as well as NPM members and staff.¹⁰

The SPT has suggested elements for this strategy to the NPM,¹¹ seeking to ensure that in cases of alleged reprisal ‘a disciplinary or criminal investigation is initiated and that victims are protected and, when relevant, compensated’.¹²

3.2 Principle of Confidentiality

3.2.1 Protection of Confidential Information

9 Article 21(2) OP outlines the principle of confidentiality in relation to the work of NPMs. In its Compilation of Advice, the SPT voiced its belief that the obligation of confidentiality under the Protocol should be given the widest possible interpretation in order to reflect the spirit of the Convention.¹³ It is the preventive nature of the NPM’s work that demands for confidentiality not to be breached.¹⁴

10 Confidential information collected by the NPM shall be ‘privileged’. This means that, first, no authority of the State shall force the NPM to disclose the source of information provided to the NPM on the basis of confidentiality, and that, second, the State party shall protect the NPM and the source against pressure from third parties. In other words, this provision protects the NPM from undue pressure on its sources of information. This intention explains why confidentiality is regulated in the context of a provision aimed at prohibiting sanctions against any person for having communicated any information to the NPM.

11 The SPT has provided guidance on the sensitive situation that an NPM becomes aware of allegedly criminal activity, whether of torture, related crimes, or other categories of crime. The SPT stated that such activity may be reported, but unless there is express consent, personal data related to it shall be protected ... Thus, for example, where information relating to systematic issues or crimes is gathered, its existence can be reported in general terms. However, particular care must be taken to assess whether the sharing of information relating to a particular situation or particular crime might inevitably lead to the disclosure of personal data or to the identification of a person who has not given their express consent for their personal data to be revealed. In such cases the obligation of confidentiality prevails.¹⁵

12 Pursuant to the first sentence of Article 21(2) OP and the respect for the right to privacy of the source of information, the NPM has the duty to respect information that it receives confidentially from detainees and other sources of information. In this sense, the SPT stated in its Guidelines that the NPM ‘should ensure that any confidential information acquired in the course of its work is fully protected'.¹⁶ Therefore, if a detainee explicitly requests that the interview given to a delegation of an NPM remain confidential, then the NPM is bound by this request and shall not publish the contents of the interview, even if it does not contain protected personal data. Accordingly, the French as well as the Norwegian NPM refused to give testimony in court.¹⁷

13 The obligation extends to the confidential information received by the SPT.

14 The second sentence of Article 21(2) OP repeats the general principle deriving from the right to privacy and data protection: 'No personal data shall be published without the express consent of the person concerned.' The SPT views the sharing of such information with a third party as equal to the publication of personal data.¹⁸

15 As possible source of information under personal data protection, the SPT listed exemplarily 'persons deprived of their liberty, their families, lawyers, members of non-governmental organizations and State officials'.¹⁹

3.2.2 No Duty of Confidentiality: Publication of Reports

16 Apart from the prohibition from publishing personal data without the express consent of the person concerned, the Protocol does not contain any explicit duty of confidentiality on the part of the NPM. This is different for the Subcommittee on Prevention that is not only prohibited to publish personal data,²⁰ but shall be guided by the principle of confidentiality,²¹ meet in camera,²² maintain direct, and if necessary confidential, contact with the NPM,²³ communicate its recommendations and observations after a country mission confidentially to the State party, and, if relevant, to the NPM,²⁴ and is only authorized in exceptional cases to publish its mission reports, partly only on the basis of a decision by the Committee against Torture.²⁵

17 The question arises as to why the Protocol places such strict duties of confidentiality on the Subcommittee and no equivalent duty of confidentiality on the NPMs, as both bodies have the same mandate of carrying out preventive visits to places of detention with the aim to prevent torture and ill-treatment. How can the Subcommittee be required to communicate its confidential country mission report to the NPM if the latter is not bound by a duty of confidentiality?

18 The textual interpretation of Article 21(2) OP, in the context of other provisions of the Protocol and especially in comparison with the respective provisions relating to the Subcommittee, leads to the conclusion that the strict duty of confidentiality on the part of the Subcommittee is primarily based on the fact that the Subcommittee is an

¹⁹ CAT/C/57/4 (n 13) Annex, para 7. ²⁰ See above Art 16 OP, § 29.

²¹ See above Art 2 OP, § 27; in this sense, the SPT recalled in CAT/OP/ECU/2 (n 9) para 36 that the principle of confidentiality set forth in the OP 'applies only to the activities of the Subcommittee, not to the activities of NPMs'.

²² See above Art 10 OP, § 12.

international body whose monitoring functions are perceived as constituting an undue interference with State sovereignty.

19 The fact that this difference of treatment of the SPT and the NPMs is not the result of blunder during the drafting of the OP can be seen from the travaux préparatoires. The EU Draft of 2001, for example, contained far-reaching duties of confidentiality for the Subcommittee relating to its mission reports and at the same time provided explicitly that the NPM ‘reports on its visits shall be public’.²⁶ Even the Mexican Draft did not contain any explicit duties of confidentiality on the part of the NPMs.²⁷

20 For the SPT, the provision on protection of personal data was introduced for the case that the State party requests the publication of its mission report. For the NPM, the inclusion of the same provision and in addition of the provision on confidentiality only makes sense if the NPM reports can, in principle, be made public. Hence, NPMs are not only allowed to publish their annual reports in accordance with Article 23 OP, but also, with respect to confidentiality and protection of personal data,²⁸ to publish and disseminate reports on their visits to places of detention, including their recommendations to the relevant authorities in accordance with Article 19(b) OP.

21 Accordingly, the SPT recommended in its Assessment Tool that ‘[v]isit reports, including recommendations, should, in principle, be published. Exceptions may exist where the national preventive mechanism considers it inappropriate to do so or where there is a legal impediment . . . The mechanism may also publish thematic reports.’²⁹

22 As to the State party’s obligations, the SPT also recommended that, depending on the country situation, the State party ‘facilitate the publication of all reports produced by the NPMs’³⁰ or ‘should take steps to ensure that, as a rule, the reports of the national preventive mechanism are published, with recourse to confidentiality being the exception’.³¹

23 In general, publicity of the NPM’s reports is important, as it informs civil society about its work, the situation in places of detention, and hence enables cooperation and follow-up to the NPM’s findings and recommendations. Only in exceptional circumstances, not publishing a report and recommendations may be better, eg if a private dialogue with the relevant authorities make implementation probable.³² The SPT noted in its Assessment Tool that the NPM should, ‘based on its experience, develop a strategy for the use of its report, which should include the submission of the report to relevant official bodies and the Government as a basis for and dialogue, and possibly its publication and dissemination, for the purpose of alerting the wider society’.³³ The SPT concretized in a report that the strategy for making use of its visit reports should be ‘based on a serious consideration of the value of publishing all or part of such reports, as appropriate’.³⁴

²⁶ cf E/CN.4/2001/67 (n 3), Annex II, Arts 14 and 15(g); see also above, para 4.

²⁹ CAT/OP/1/Rev.1 (n 10) para 35.

³⁴ CAT/OP/ECU/2 (n 9) para 36.

To achieve this purpose, the SPT found in the situation that ‘the relevant authorities and institutions do not respond to the reports within a reasonable time frame and the reports are not published’³⁵ that the NPM’s preventive function ‘cannot be fulfilled and its visibility suffers’³⁶ and hence recommended that the publication of the NPM’s visit reports ‘should be a matter of course, and that reports should be deemed to be confidential in exceptional cases only’.³⁷ The SPT added the recommendation for ‘timely’ publication in the case of Germany, where ‘recommendations to the responsible authorities following the visit currently remain confidential until their publication in the Annual Report’.³⁸

3.2.3 Data Protection Legislation

24 It is important to have data protection and confidentiality legislation in place. Implementing legislation should permit an NPM to disclose or publish data about individuals when they give their express consent and does not put them at risk. Disclosure ‘must also be possible when the interviewee explicitly requests that the NPM refer his/her complaint to another institution, such as a prosecutor, ombudsman, professional association, or human rights tribunal’. An NPM should also have the unrestricted right to publish statistical or other information collated from personal data if this is truly rendered anonymous.³⁹ Wherever, however, legislation requires the NPM or its officials to report crimes and/or share information, the SPT highlighted that ‘the principle of confidentiality as provided for in [the] Optional Protocol, and as explained above, shall prevail’.⁴⁰

Obligation of States Parties to Examine the Recommendations of National Preventive Mechanisms

The competent authorities of the State party concerned shall examine the recommendations of the national preventive mechanism and enter into a dialogue with it on possible implementation measures.

1. Introduction

1 It derives from the principle of cooperation between the States parties, the Subcommittee, and NPMs that the recommendations by both visiting bodies have to be taken seriously by the authorities. This duty of States parties vis-à-vis the Subcommittee was laid down in Article 12(d) OP,¹ which formed the model for an identical provision in relation to the NPMs in Article 22 OP.

2 This provision is very important for follow up and implementation—meaning the impact—of NPM work.

Article 22

The competent authorities of the State party concerned shall examine the recommendations of the national preventive mechanism and enter into a dialogue with it on possible implementation measures.

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

5 No discussions are reported on this article in the reports of the ninth and tenth session of the Working Group.

3. Issues of Interpretation

6 Article 22 OP mirrors Article 12(d) OP and obliges States parties to ‘examine the recommendations of the national preventive mechanism and enter into a dialogue with it on possible implementation measures’. By stressing the principle of cooperation also for the NPMs, Article 22 OP ‘accords equal importance to international and national preventive efforts’.⁴

3.1 ‘Competent authorities’

7 The difference of Article 22 OP to Article 12(d) OP lies in the concretization of the persons under obligation: ‘the competent authorities of the state party concerned.’ These are the persons with the power to implement the respective recommendation. Hence, the authority that is ‘competent’ for a recommendation can be situated on different level in the hierarchy, ie from the administration of the visited institution up to the Ministers (of Interior, Justice, Defence, Health, etc) under whose authority the respective place of detention falls.⁵

8 The ‘competent’ authorities are identical to the ‘relevant’ authorities that the NPM addresses its recommendations to according to Article 19 OP, assuming that the NPM has correctly identified the respective authority. As already discussed,⁶ it also serves the effectiveness of the NPM’s work if the first authority that examines the recommendation and enters into dialogue with the NPM on its implementation is the hierarchically lowest one with the competence to correct the problems that the NPM identified. Additionally, a focal point in every relevant ministry can be useful to follow up on the implementation of the NPM’s recommendations and report to the mechanism in that regard.⁷ Many recommendations of the NPMs might need legislative measures for their full implementation, and thus the legislature may also be considered as competent authorities.

⁴ APT and IIDH, Optional Protocol to the UN Convention Against Torture: Implementation Manual (rev edn, APT and IIDH 2010) 100.

9 It may be suggested that implementing legislation gives the NPM the discretion to determine which authorities it deems appropriate to receive a certain recommendation. If the NPM makes a recommendation to an authority it erroneously finds to be 'relevant' according to Article 19 OP, this receiving authority should be obliged in good faith to refer the recommendation to the competent authority which would then have the duty to respond.⁸ The implementing law should also allow the NPM to 'set a defined period within which it expects a response and dialogue with the competent officials'.⁹

3.2 Examination of Recommendations

10 Article 22 OP only stipulates a duty to 'examine the recommendations' and to enter into a dialogue with the NPM on 'possible implementation measures'. This underlines that, like the recommendations of the Subcommittee, the recommendations of NPMs are non-binding under international law. Nevertheless, it follows from the objective and purpose of the OP, and the general principle of cooperation as well as from good faith engagement after ratification of the Protocol that States shall take the recommendations of both bodies seriously and are under a duty to implement them due to the obligation to take all possible and relevant measures to prevent torture and ill-treatment.¹⁰ According to the SPT the NPM legislation should also 'clearly state the obligation of competent authorities to examine the recommendations of the national preventive mechanism and to enter into a dialogue with it regarding the implementation of its recommendations'.¹¹

11 In one of its first visit reports, the SPT urged the respective federal Government and the various state governments to 'comply with the recommendations issued to date by the national preventive mechanism and with its future recommendations', adding that '[t]he State party has an international obligation to do so', as stipulated in Articles 22 and 23 OP.¹² The SPT noted in its Guidelines that the State should take proposals and observations received from the NPM 'into consideration' on legislation that is relevant to its mandate.¹³

12 The SPT noted early that it is one of the main objectives of the NPMs 'to enter into a dialogue with the competent authorities with a view to improving the situation of persons deprived of their liberty and proposing ways of implementing the recommendations',¹⁴

especially by means of its visit reports.¹⁵ In fact, the SPT envisages that the official in charge of the institutions will receive, as competent authority, the recommendations as an integral part of the visit report—this after possible preliminary recommendations in the course of an immediate debriefing at the end of a visit with the representative of the place of detention, or via formal written feedback in the form of a detailed letter or a preliminary report to the places of detention.¹⁶ Visit reports are to be used ‘as a platform for dialogue’¹⁷ and are also a key tool for any follow-up processes. As the competent authority considers the whole report when ‘examining’ the recommendations, its quality is highly relevant¹⁸ to increase the likelihood that the recommendations are considered and implemented.

3.3 Dialogue on Possible Implementation Measures

13 As with the recommendations of the Subcommittee, it follows from the objective and purpose of the OP and the general principle of cooperation that States shall make bona fide attempts to implement the NPM recommendations.¹⁹ Further, while Article 22 OP only refers to the recommendations of the NPM, the principle of complementarity implies that, as a body complementing the work of the SPT at the national level, the NPM ‘is in a frontline position to ensure the continuity of the dialogue with the national authorities on issues relating to prevention of ill-treatment’.²⁰

14 NPMs should not only consider but also follow-up the SPT recommendations and liaise with the SPT in the process.²¹ The mandate of an NPM includes ‘[f]ollowing up on the process of implementation of recommendations made by United Nations and regional bodies to the States parties with regard to torture and related issues, providing advice at the national level and providing the recommending bodies with information, as appropriate’.²² In that regard the SPT considered it to be an example of good practice where an NPM designed a matrix for use in following up on the recommendations set out in the Subcommittee’s earlier visit report to the State party concerned.²³ Moreover, the SPT encouraged an NPM to consider holding a national workshop to adopt a programme for the implementation of the recommendations made by the SPT as another means of bearing this responsibility.²⁴

¹⁸ See above Art 19 OP, § 18.

²³ CAT/OP/HND/3 (n 15) para 16.

15 As to the dialogue on implementation, the SPT has given some indications over time how it could be held. In this regard, the SPT has only occasionally itself voiced possible scenarios for the State party to implement its obligation to engage in a ‘meaningful dialogue’.²⁵ Instead, it has focused more on defining the NPMs’ envisaged role in this process, seeing it as an activity included in the mandate of the NPM to engage ‘in a meaningful process of dialogue’ concerning the implementation of its recommendations with, apart from other stakeholders, the State party responsible.²⁶ For a meaningful, ie effective, dialogue, mechanisms for follow-up are necessary.²⁷

16 The SPT has recommended to ‘put in place a follow-up strategy that is clear and impact-oriented and develop the practices and tools necessary to implement the strategy’.²⁸ Follow-up with the State authorities is only one part of an NPM’s follow-up strategy that should, according to the SPT, include to ‘regularly verify the implementation of recommendations, primarily through follow-up visits to problematic institutions, but also based on relevant information from, among others, human rights bodies, governmental institutions and civil society’.²⁹ For the here relevant part of follow-up with the State party, different elements are to be considered.

17 A database of recommendations is necessary in order to be able to measure the progress of implementation of the recommendations. In its Assessment Tool, the SPT recommended that the NPMs systematize their experiences, to ensure that important concrete and contextual observations arising from its visits to institutions and stemming from other reliable sources, its recommendations and the responses from the authorities are categorized, filed and systematically processed for use in dialogue with the authorities, in the ongoing planning of work and in the further development of its strategies.³⁰

18 The term ‘implementation’ provokes the question of how its achievement can be identified. When developing a policy or plan and considering its approach to the monitoring of implementation,³¹ an NPM may consider how it will measure implementation at the time of drafting recommendations and have a strategy in place to consider how it will present its assessment of the level of implementation.³² The decision as to whether or not the benchmarks have been reached will be based on a multidisciplinary approach, the experience of the NPM and knowledge of the context and engaging with various experts.³³

19 The SPT envisages the NPM to request the competent authorities to develop policies or action plans.³⁴ In fact, action plans are a practical tool to measure implementation, to strategically work towards the implementation of recommendations through a set of agreed measures as well as to support and evaluate the steps taken by the authorities.³⁵

20 The process to follow up the implementation of the action plan should, as envisaged by the SPT, involve both written and oral exchanges on the implementation of the recommendations.³⁶ The personal exchange with the authorities starts with the direct dialogue at a follow-up visit or subsequent visit with a follow-up element. This is again particularly useful in regard to privately administered places of detention, as they are not part of the NPM's dialogue with the State.³⁷ Personal exchange should also involve regular meetings, round-tables, or working groups, etc. The process and its format depend on the access to and relationship with the States authorities. While regular personal contact can build trust, resolve possible deadlocks in the dialogue with the authorities, enable the findings to be explained in more detail, and encourage the implementation of recommendations, meetings should be held in an effective and resource-efficient manner in order to ensure that the NPM maintains professional distance safeguarding its position as independent actor.³⁸ As an institutionalized format for high level exchange and follow-up to the NPMs' annual reports, the SPT urges States parties to introduce an 'institutional forum'.³⁹

21 An EU-wide study has identified and analysed the different ways how NPMs follow up and promote the implementation of recommendations. It has found that with most NPMs the measures move along the familiar paths, namely follow-up visits and written dialogue during the drafting of the reports. Formats for direct exchanges with the authorities are largely underdeveloped although some interesting practices were identified and exchanged among NPMs. Moreover the study found that most NPMs lack a strategic approach on how to follow up their recommendations and achieve lasting change. It thus suggested 'building blocks' of an effective follow-up strategy for NPMs and recommended that NPMs develop 'pathways of change' to increase the impact of their work.⁴⁰

22 No consequences are foreseen in the Optional Protocol if States parties refuse to cooperate with their NPM or to take steps to improve the situation in light of the NPM's recommendations. This is in contrast to the provisions relating to non-cooperation with the Subcommittee, which provide that such violation of the principle of cooperation lead to sanctions in accordance with Article 16(4), namely a public statement by the Committee against Torture or its decision to publish the entire mission report of the Subcommittee.⁴¹ However, unlike the SPT with its mission reports and recommendations, the NPM can—and should—publish their reports in any case.⁴²

23 Cooperating with NPMs in different countries, the SPT has found that, in cases where ombudsman's offices (NHRIs) have taken on the mandate of NPMs

it has been difficult for them to build the kind of constructive dialogue envisaged in the Optional Protocol because the authorities have been unable to distinguish clearly between the preventive and reactive roles of these bodies. Since the role of ombudsman's offices involves taking a critical look at State action, calling attention to problems when they arise and processing individual complaints, among other functions, the authorities are often reluctant to cooperate, especially where ombudsman's offices participate in judicial proceedings or are authorized to bring cases before a judge or prosecutor where there is evidence of criminal liability.⁴³

The SPT recommends that such an Ombudsman institution 'clarify the nature of the principle that guides its work, which is based on sustained cooperation and dialogue over the long term as a means of assisting the authorities to make any changes required to prevent torture and ill-treatment'.⁴⁴

Annual Reports of the National Preventive Mechanisms

The States parties to the present Protocol undertake to publish and disseminate the annual reports of the national preventive mechanisms.

1. Introduction

1 As with the Committee against Torture¹ and the Subcommittee on Prevention,² NPMs shall also prepare an annual report on their activities. While the annual reports of the Committee against Torture are submitted to the States parties of the Convention, and the annual reports of the Subcommittee on Prevention to the Committee against Torture, the final addressee of the NPMs' annual reports is not limited to a specific body or group of persons.

Article 23

The States Parties to the present Protocol undertake to publish and disseminate the annual reports of the national preventive mechanisms.

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

4 During its ninth session from 12 to 23 February 2001, the Working Group discussed the alternative draft the delegation of Mexico had submitted, with the support of the GRULAC.

5 With regard to the question of publicity, it was felt by most of the delegates that the national mechanisms should operate under the principle of publicity and that they should be able, at least, to publish annual reports. In this context, some delegations expressed the view that the question of publicity versus confidentiality that would arise from the publication of reports could be left to the national laws.⁵

6 At the tenth session of the Working Group from 14 to 25 January 2002,⁶ the issue of publicity was not elaborated any further.

3. Issues of Interpretation

7 Article 23 OP obliges the States parties to ‘publish and disseminate’ the NPMs’ annual reports. While the States parties’ obligation to ‘publish’ the report may be understood as simple information-giving exercise without much effort of outreach,⁷ the word ‘disseminate’ clarifies that the States parties should also inform the public at large. The SPT has clarified in its Guidelines that the State should publish and ‘widely disseminate’ the annual report of the NPM.⁸ The State should ‘also ensure that it is presented to, and discussed in, by the national legislative assembly, or Parliament’.⁹ Mention of this obligation should be made in the NPM law.¹⁰ Depending on the public character and media coverage of Parliamentary discussions, this format can help for public reach. For the discussion and follow-up to the NPMs’ annual reports, the SPT urged States parties to introduce an ‘institutional forum’.¹¹

Besides of being an essential tool for transparency, accountability and raising awareness of the work of the NPM, the annual reports can be used as part of the tools for dialogue

8 The SPT also noted vis-à-vis the State party that the NPM should transmit its annual reports to the SPT, also for publication on its website.¹² This transmission of the report is one way of dialogue and information-sharing between the NPM and the SPT in accordance with the principle of cooperation.

9 The OP does not prescribe the content of annual reports. The SPT elaborated in its Assessment Tool that annual reports should ‘include, in addition to recommendations for change, the outcome of the dialogue with authorities, ie, follow-up on recommendations mentioned in previous annual reports. The mechanism may also publish thematic reports.’¹³ It concretized on the reports’ content:

- (a) Accounts of current challenges to the protection of the rights of persons deprived of their liberty and to the effective execution of the mechanism’s mandate, and strategic short-term and longer term plans, including with respect to setting priorities;
- (b) Analysis of the most important findings and an account of recommendations and the responses of the authorities thereto;
- (c) Follow-up on issues outstanding from previously published reports;
- (d) Consideration of thematic issues;
- (e) Accounts of cooperation with other actors on the prevention of torture;

1. Introduction

1 Article 24 OP provides States parties with the opportunity to make a declaration to the effect that the competences of the SPT or of the respective NPM will be postponed for a maximum of three years. If need be, this period may be extended for another two years. This particular ‘opting-out declaration’ was introduced by the Chairperson-Rapporteur in 2002 as a compromise for those States, including the United States and Saudi Arabia, which opposed the general prohibition of reservations to the Protocol.¹ It resembles, to some extent, the possibility of ‘opting-out reservations’ in accordance with Article 28(1) CAT, where States parties have the possibility to declare at the time of signature or ratification that they do not recognize the competence of the CAT Committee provided for in Article 20 CAT on the inquiry procedure, or in accordance with Article 30(2) CAT, stipulating that States parties may declare that they do not consider themselves bound by Article 30(1) CAT (containing a specific dispute settlement procedure).²

2 Until November 2017, only seven States parties to the OP have made use of the possibility to postpone the implementation of their obligations under the Protocol.³

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

7 The inclusion of a temporary opting-out possibility in Article 24 constitutes an attempt by the Chairperson-Rapporteur to reach a compromise on the controversial question of reservations.⁸

8 At the tenth session of the Working Group from 14 to 25 January 2002, the Chairperson-Rapporteur presented her draft proposal, containing a declaration in Article 24 (Part V), which would give States parties the possibility of postponing their obligations either under Part III or under Part IV. The purpose of this provision was to facilitate the adoption of measures by States that would enable them to comply with their obligations under the Protocol. This Article, however, was open to negotiation, since it dealt with an issue that had not been discussed at the Working Group before.⁹

9 During the discussions on Article 24, the delegation of Saudi Arabia recalled that all the rules governing international instruments permitted reservations and that the Vienna regime on reservations was clear on this point. It therefore questioned the legal basis for the inadmissibility of reservations.¹⁰ The delegation of Cuba stated that Article 24 did not resolve many of the concerns expressed by several delegations.¹¹ Other delegations, such as the delegation of Poland, while expressing concern about Article 24, were still ready to support the Chairperson's proposal at large.¹²

10 At its fiftieth meeting on 22 April 2002, the Commission on Human Rights finally adopted the text of the OP submitted by the Chairperson-Rapporteur at the tenth session of the Working Group by twenty-nine votes to ten.¹³

3.1 Declaration to Postpone the Implementation of Obligations

11 The temporary 'opting-out declaration' under Article 24(1) OP enables States parties to postpone the 'implementation of their obligations' either under Part III (mandate of the Subcommittee on Prevention) or under Part IV (mandate of the NPM) of the Protocol. The words 'either . . . or' indicate that States have to choose. They are not allowed to 'opt-out' from both procedures. To postpone the implementation of the mandate of the SPT means that the SPT has no mandate vis-à-vis the State party concerned for the period indicated in the respective declaration. In particular, the SPT is prevented from carrying out a mission to the State party concerned, and the State party has no obligations vis-à-vis the SPT under Articles 12, 14, or 15 OP. In addition, the SPT, during this initial period, cannot implement its advisory and assisting function under Article 11(b) OP in relation to the State party concerned and its NPM. Nevertheless, the State party is required to establish or designate a NPM within one year after the entry into force of the Protocol without the respective advice of the SPT.

12 The second option is to postpone the implementation of the mandate of the NPM. This means that the State party concerned postpones its obligation under Article 17 OP to establish or designate a NPM within one year after the entry into force of the Protocol, for another period of up to three years, ie for a total of four years. Within this period, the State party may, however, avail itself of the possibility under Article 11(b)(i) OP of being assisted by the SPT in its efforts to establish a NPM. The SPT may, for example, conduct a mission to the State party concerned, visit several places of detention and organize a seminar, together with the Government and relevant NGOs, on the measures necessary for establishing an independent and effective NPM.¹⁴

13 According to Article 24(1) OP, the opting-out declaration may be made ‘upon ratification’. Strictly speaking, this provision prevents a State which has not signed the Protocol and becomes a party by way of accession,¹⁵ from making a respective declaration. The comparable provisions in Articles 28(1) and 30(2) CAT explicitly state that the respective reservations may be made ‘at the time of signature or ratification of this Convention or accession thereto’.¹⁶ Nevertheless, there are no strong reasons against also allowing declarations upon accession. But a State becoming a party to the Protocol by means of succession cannot use this opportunity to suspend the implementation of a part of the Protocol for a certain period.

14 In fact, the interpretation of Article 24(1) OP had proven to be quite controversial, as there existed a discrepancy between the various authentic texts of the Protocol. While the Arabic, Chinese, English, and French versions stipulated that such a declaration may be made ‘upon ratification’, the Russian and Spanish versions contained the phrase ‘once ratified’. Following Article 33 VCLT, the terms of a treaty are presumed to have the same meaning in each of its authentic texts. Consequently, after a precedent was set by Kazakhstan, that made a declaration of postponement with regard to the establishment of its NPM almost one and a half year after ratification,¹⁷ the question was referred to the UN Office of Legal Affairs, which ‘initiated a correction procedure to bring the Russian and Spanish versions of article 24 into line with the other four authentic texts’, ensuring that these versions mirrored the meaning of the phrase ‘at the time of the ratification’. The change retroactively entered into force on 29 April 2010.¹⁸

3.2 Validity of the Postponement

15 The postponement of the implementation of certain provisions of the Protocol for the State party concerned shall be valid for the period indicated in the respective declaration. Article 24(2) specifies a maximum of three years. The period starts to run as from the entry into force of the Protocol for the State party concerned, ie either on 22 June 2006, or on the thirtieth day after the deposit of its own instrument of ratification (or eventually accession).¹⁹ Until November 2017, only seven States parties to the OP have made use of the possibility to postpone the implementation of their obligations under the Protocol. While Kazakhstan, Montenegro, Romania, Hungary, Bosnia and Herzegovina, and Germany²⁰ declared to postpone their obligations under Part IV of the Protocol (related to the designation of the NPM), the Philippines declared

¹⁵ See below Art 27(3) OP.

¹⁶ See above Art 28, 3; Art 30 OP, 3.

¹⁷ Kazakhstan ratified the Protocol on 28 October 2008, invoking the Russian version of its text to make a declaration under Art 24 OP postponing the establishment of its NPM. The declaration was made on 8 February 2010.

¹⁹ See below Art 28 OP.

the postponement of the implementation of its obligations under Part III of the Optional Protocol, specifically Article 11 (1)(a) on the visitations by the SPT to places referred to in Article 4 and for them to make recommendations to States Parties concerning the protection of persons deprived of their liberty against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Already since 2008, relevant organizations active in the field of torture prevention encouraged the Philippian state authorities to demonstrate responsibility and approve the ratification instrument at the first given opportunity.²¹ In 2009, the CAT Committee strongly recommended that ‘the State party should take immediate steps to prevent acts of torture and ill-treatment throughout the country and to announce a policy of total elimination in respect of any ill-treatment or torture by State officials’.²² It was only in 2012, however, that the Philippines acceded to the OP. This step was highly welcomed by the international community, which then recommended to further strengthen the Philippines’ efforts to ‘[p]revent cases of torture in facilities of detention through the provision of legal safeguards for detainees and effective investigations into allegations of torture and the prosecution and sentencing of perpetrators’.²³

16 Article 24(2) provides also for the possibility of extending the period of three years for an additional two years. This means that the establishment of a NPM might be postponed for a total of six years after the entry into force of the Protocol. However, a decision of extension can only be made by the CAT Committee, after due representations have been made by the State party and after consultation with the SPT. A State party to the Protocol would have to advance very strong reasons why the SPT should not be allowed to carry out its mandate vis-à-vis that State for a total period of five years, in order to convince both the SPT and the CAT Committee that such an extension is justified. Until November 2017, this possibility had not been made use of. The competence of the SPT under Article 24(2) to consult with the CAT Committee about the possibility of an extension is not affected by the declaration under Article 24(1), which only postpones the implementation of its mandate under Part III, not Part V.

17 The extension under Article 24(2) OP might become relevant in relation to the establishment of a NPM in accordance with Article 17 OP.²⁴ If the SPT, in exercising its advisory and assisting functions under Article 11(b)(i) OP, arrives at the conclusion that the State party has taken serious efforts but still faces considerable difficulties in establishing a truly effective NPM within the first period of four years, it may recommend that the CAT Committee extend the period for another two years.

1. Introduction

1 Experience shows that the system of financing of treaty monitoring bodies by contributions of States parties, as provided for in Articles 17(7) and 18(5) CAT, simply does not work and leads to serious obstacles for the treaty bodies in performing their functions.¹ This is the reason why Australia in 1991 submitted a proposal for amending these provisions, together with the respective provisions of CERD. Both provisions were amended in accordance with the procedure envisaged in Article 29 CAT. However, these amendments never entered into force as the required ratification by two-thirds of the States parties was never achieved.² Nevertheless, the General Assembly, when endorsing these amendments in December 1992, as a provisional measure agreed to cover the expenses of the CAT and CERD Committees out of the general UN budget.³ This provisional measure seems to have become a permanent solution.

2 The activities of the SPT, in particular after having grown to twenty-five members conducting missions to an increasing number of States parties, entail considerable expenses that go well beyond those of other human rights treaty monitoring bodies. Keeping the negative experiences of the CAT Committee with a funding model by States parties in mind, it is not surprising that all relevant drafts for the OP provided for funding of the SPT out of the regular UN budget.⁴ Some delegations, above all the United States of America, nevertheless insisted that the costs of the SPT should be borne exclusively by the States parties to the Protocol.⁵ No compromise could be achieved, and the majority adopted the model of UN financing, supplemented by the creation of a Special Fund to help States parties financing the implementation of the Protocol on the domestic level.⁶

10 During the first session of the Working Group, held from 19 to 30 October 1992, Article 16 of the revised Costa Rica Draft of 1991 was discussed under 'Logistics and financial considerations'.¹⁴ The general approach of most delegations was that the implementation of the proposed system and the operations of the SPT should not be jeopardized by inadequate financing. There should be an assurance of sufficient financial and other resources, on a continuing basis, to meet the needs of the efficient operation of the system. Most representatives expressed the view that Article 16 needed further consideration, based on a financial evaluation of the projected costs of implementing the Protocol. Delegations requested the preparation of a detailed financial analysis of the costs associated with the operation of the proposed system of visits, to be provided to the Working Group in the course of its future deliberations.

11 Many delegations supported the principle that expenditures deriving from the implementation of the Protocol should be borne by the regular UN budget. Reference was made in this connection to the proposal made by the meeting of Chairpersons of the supervisory bodies that all treaty bodies be financed from the regular UN budget and that all new instruments should provide for the financing of new bodies from the regular budget. Further consideration would be needed, however, in light of the decision taken by the General Assembly at its forty-seventh session on the effective operation of the treaty bodies. If the General Assembly proposed changes to the CAT to allocate costs of the CAT Committee to the general budget, it was suggested that the same system should apply to the Protocol. The reliance on voluntary contributions, or on payments by States parties alone, would not provide the necessary assurance of resources to permit sound administration.

12 Some delegations nevertheless found that the idea that States parties should bear the expenditures should be retained for consideration. Others feared that if the entire costs were to be borne by States parties, this might inhibit many countries from ratifying the instrument.

13 Several speakers stressed the need for adequate financial resources as a prerequisite to the efficient implementation of the Protocol and expressed the fear that voluntary contributions would not be sufficient for this purpose. A number of delegations expressed the opinion that in a time of significant financial constraints, the establishment of this mechanism should not be at the expense of the effective functioning of other areas of the human rights treaty system.

14 At the fourth Working Group session from 30 October to 10 November 1995, it was the general approach of all delegations that the expenditures incurred in the implementation of the Protocol and the activities of the special fund should be dealt with in separate Articles.¹⁵

15 Most delegations supported the principle that expenditure deriving from the implementation of the Protocol should be borne by the regular UN budget. Reference was made to GA Resolution 47/111 of 16 December 1992, in which the Assembly endorsed respective amendments to two conventions, including CAT, providing for the financing of the CAT Committee from the regular budget.

16 The representative of Cuba suggested deleting the introductory part of Article 16, and the observer for Nigeria also stated that the contributions should be paid by the States parties themselves.

17 The delegation of the United States of America called on other delegations to take into account the financial situation of the United Nations and the resource situation of the Centre for Human Rights. It would not be advisable to impose a financial burden on the Centre unless it was assured that the Centre would receive additional resources for servicing that additional body, which would be quite expensive. It believed that the Working Group should place on record that if regular budget funding was decided upon, the Secretary-General should provide additional resources from within the existing regular UN budget to compensate the Centre of Human Rights for the additional expenses occasioned by the establishment of the SPT.

18 The majority of delegations, however, expressed the belief that the financial difficulties of the United Nations were temporary. It was generally felt that it was necessary to draft Article 16(2) along the lines of Article 18(3) CAT. Thus, a paragraph with such wording was added as paragraph 2.¹⁶

19 At the fifth plenary meeting on 9 November 1995, the Chairperson of the informal drafting group submitted the text of Article 16, stating that it was proposed that the article should contain two paragraphs, setting out that the expenditure incurred in the implementation of the Protocol should be borne by the United Nations. Paragraph 2 stipulated that the UN Secretary-General should provide the necessary staff and facilities for the effective performance of the SPT. The Working Group then agreed on this proposal.¹⁷

20 At the sixth session, held from 13 to 24 October 1997, the representatives of Cuba and Egypt once again stated that States parties should be responsible for the expenditures incurred by the implementation of the present Protocol.¹⁸ The observer for Amnesty International noted that human rights work was an integral part of the mainstream work of the United Nations, that special funding could be uncertain and payment difficult to ensure, and that independence would be best guaranteed by regular budget funding. She recalled the problem of funding of the CAT Committee which eventually resulted in a change of funding from States parties to the regular budget. At the fourth plenary meeting on 14 October 1997, paragraph 2 of Article 16 was adopted without amendments.¹⁹ At the sixth plenary meeting on 15 October 1997 the Chairperson of the drafting group decided to place a full stop after the words 'United Nations' and to delete the bracketed text. At the same meeting, paragraph 1 of Article 16 was adopted.²⁰

21 During the ninth session from 12 to 23 February 2001, while considering the alternative draft text proposed by Mexico with the support of GRULAC, some delegations raised concerns about the financial implications of creating national and international mechanisms. They expressed reluctance to accept that the international mechanism should be funded under the regular UN budget and asked to receive information from the Secretariat concerning what the budget cost of the proposed mechanisms might be.²¹

22 At the tenth session of the Working Group from 14 to 25 January 2002, the delegation of the United States of America suggested that it would not be appropriate to fund the international visiting mechanism from the regular UN budget, as that would mean that every member of the United Nations would contribute to the mechanism whether or not it was a party to the OP. Therefore, the costs should be borne by the States parties to the Protocol themselves. Furthermore, the delegation, supported by the delegation of Saudi Arabia, expressed concern about the financial implications of creating an international mechanism and the budgetary consequences of such a mechanism on other human rights mechanisms.²²

23 The delegations of Sweden, Denmark, and Finland were of the view that the international mechanism should be funded under the regular budget and recalled the provision to that effect contained in the draft presented by the European Union in 2001. This solution would also guarantee the independence and neutrality of the mechanism.²³

24 The delegation of the Netherlands underlined the importance of financing through the regular budget. The UN treaty system was part of the United Nations and as such all member States contributed (per ratio) to the system, irrespective of the treaties they had signed or ratified. It would also be unfair for States parties to put a price tag on a human rights treaty. That would mean that only rich States would be in a position to become parties to such treaties. Many people would be denied human rights because their governments could not afford to become a party.²⁴

25 According to the proposal presented by the Chairperson-Rapporteur, the SPT would be financed from the regular UN budget. The Chairperson was aware that certain delegations, including that of the United States of America, had very strong feelings about this issue. However, she recalled that this point had already been discussed and negotiated by the Working Group before.²⁵

26 At its fiftieth meeting on 22 April 2002, the Commission on Human Rights finally adopted the text of the OP submitted by the Chairperson-Rapporteur at the tenth session of the Working Group by twenty-nine votes to ten.²⁶

3.1 Budget of the SPT

27 Article 25(1) OP, according to which all costs of the SPT shall be borne out of the regular UN budget, is based on the philosophy that UN human rights treaties were not drafted for the benefit of a small group of States but rather in general served the promotion of international cooperation and other objectives of the UN, such as achieving international peace, security, and development,²⁷ which called for the closest possible links with the world organization. In addition, it proved to be the only practical method of ensuring the smooth functioning of UN treaty bodies and constitutes the standard model of UN human rights treaties.²⁸

²⁸ cf eg Art 17(8) CEDAW; Art 43(12) CRC; Art 72(8) CMW; Art 26(7) CED; Art 34(12) CRPD.

28 Article 25(1) is silent about the costs created by the additional work of the CAT Committee based on the Protocol. The Committee has only very limited functions under the Protocol. However, costs occur as it holds joint meetings with the SPT, discussing the various SPT reports, including its annual reports, it may decide about making a public statement on a particular country situation or publishing a country mission report of the SPT, extend the ‘opting-out declaration’ under Article 24 OP, and include in its own annual report a section on the implementation of the Protocol.²⁹ These additional costs also are and will be borne out of the general UN budget in accordance with GA Resolution 47/111 of December 1992.

29 Since the expenses of the SPT members are borne out of the regular UN budget, the Secretary-General must also provide the necessary staff and facilities for the effective performance of the functions of the SPT under the OP. The respective provision in Article 25(2) is in line with all other human rights treaties the implementation of which is financed by the UN.³⁰ In practice, the servicing of the SPT, as all other human rights treaty bodies, is carried out by the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights in Geneva.

30 In practice, the SPT has to face serious budgetary constraints ever since it started to be operational. When it began its work in 2007, no funding had been approved for it to carry out its mandate accordingly. Meanwhile, the SPT was supported by the High Commissioner for Human Rights, ‘who provided resources, including interim secretariat assistance, from extrabudgetary funds’.³¹ For the biennium 2008–2009, a regular budget of US$925,600.00 (being an average of slightly more than US$460,000 per year) had been approved for the SPT,³² meaning that on this basis it was not even able to carry out one regular mission to each of the then thirty-four States parties once every eight years.³³ The assumptions on which the SPT budget was based would have allowed for four regular missions lasting for ten days each per year (as well as for two additional short follow-up missions of three days each), involving two SPT members, two persons of the secretariat, and two external experts.³⁴ Especially the assumptions about expenditure for a regular mission in the SPT’s view appeared ‘to significantly underestimate the actual cost of a Subcommittee visit’.³⁵ Moreover, the SPT expressed its concern that there had been ‘no specific provision within the regular budget for the Subcommittee mandate to work in direct contact with national preventive mechanisms, since the existing budget lines [were] limited to sessions and visits’.³⁶ The OP itself expressly foresees and promotes cooperation between the SPT and NPMs, and in fact, quite a number of procedures and opportunities apart from sessions and country missions can be used in order to foster cooperation and communication between these bodies.³⁷

³¹ See SPT, ‘First Annual Report of the Subcommittee on Prevention of Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment’ (2008) UN Doc CAT/C/40/2, para 47.

³² On this basis, the budget would allow for only four regular visits, lasting ten days each per year and two short follow-up visits of three days each.

31 During its second year, the SPT had to limit its planned programme to three missions per year.³⁸ Thus, the SPT made detailed proposals for a revision of the original budget assumptions for the biennium 2010–2011. The proposal was based on the assumption that an average mission would require at least four SPT members.³⁹ Moreover, the costs for UN security officers accompanying the SPT delegations as well as costs for interpretation on missions should be seen as additional costs and should be included in all future budgetary provisions.⁴⁰ Finally, the proposal addressed the previous lack of a specific provision for the SPT's mandate to work in direct contact with the NPMs.⁴¹

3.2 Staff and Facilities of the SPT

32 Following the expansion in the number of SPT members from ten to twenty-five, the UN General Assembly recognized the need to grant the SPT more resources in order to fulfil its mandate in an adequate manner.⁴² However, the 'challenge of resources' remained an issue of concern for the SPT also in the following years, especially as no stable, core secretariat was in place 'to service its cycle of work'.⁴³ With regard to paragraph 26(d) of the General Assembly resolution 68/268,⁴⁴ the SPT strongly believed that in the course of 2015 and beyond it would benefit from the extra provision for capacity-building measures that the General Assembly called upon the Secretary-General to provide through the OHCHR.⁴⁵ In its ninth Annual Report, however, the SPT expressed its regret that this had not been the case.⁴⁶ Thus, it found it necessary to seek additional meeting time in order 'to ensure that its work is as effective as possible'.⁴⁷

33 Since the *Special Fund*⁴⁸ that had been set up in accordance with Article 26 OP was only meant to help finance the implementation of the SPT's recommendations after a mission, but not the conduct of its missions, one had to think about other means to acquire voluntary contributions for the expenses of the SPT and its staff. The SPT is, therefore, being financially and/or resource-wise supported by certain States parties and called upon States parties to continue to do so in order to enable the SPT to conduct its work and mandate 'more fully and efficaciously'.⁴⁹

Special Fund

1. A Special Fund shall be set up in accordance with the relevant procedures of the General Assembly, to be administered in accordance with the financial regulations and rules of the United Nations, to help finance the implementation of the recommendations made by the Subcommittee on Prevention after a visit to a State Party, as well as education programmes of the national preventive mechanisms.
2. This Special Fund may be financed through voluntary contributions made by Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organisations and other private or public entities.

1. Introduction

1 Article 25 OP only provides that the expenditure incurred by the SPT shall be borne by the United Nations. But the main responsibility of carrying out visits to places of detention, according to the two-pillar system of the Protocol, rests with the NPMs to be established in every State party. As with the SPT, the respective costs are fairly considerable. In addition, States parties have to carry out measures and programmes aimed at improving conditions of detention and preventing practices of torture and other forms of ill-treatment in accordance with the respective recommendations of the SPT under Articles 12(d) and 16(1) OP, and of the NPM under Articles 19(b) and 22 OP. Such programmes may include the renovation of prisons and other detention facilities, far-reaching reforms of the criminal justice system, or the training of police officers and prison guards. In order to help finance the implementation of these recommendations, as well as of educational programmes of the NPMs, the drafters of the Protocol decided to establish a Special Fund.

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

7 During the first session of the Working Group, held from 19 to 30 October 1992, one observer stated that the idea of establishing a special fund based on voluntary contributions was worthy of consideration and that his country would contribute substantially to such a fund, if established. Another delegation stated that it had no difficulty with the idea of the establishment of a special fund based on voluntary contributions for this purpose, but expressed some apprehension about the extra cost which might result from the appointment of the board of trustees.⁶

8 At its fourth session from 30 October to 10 November 1995, the Working Group decided to formulate issues relating to a special fund in a separate Article 16 bis.⁷ The observer for South Africa suggested the following text:

1. A Special Fund based on voluntary contributions shall be set up in order to help finance the implementation of the recommendations made by the Sub-Committee to a State Party in view of reinforcing/strengthening if necessary the protection of people deprived of their liberty in the sense of this Protocol.
2. This Fund shall be financed through voluntary contributions made by States and other institutions or bodies.
3. A Board of Trustees, made up of five persons, selected in their personal capacity by the Secretary-General upon proposals made by the States Parties, will be responsible for supervising the correct use of these funds and their management.⁸

9 The majority of delegations supported the idea of establishing such a fund. The observer for Spain, however, stated that there were already some funds within the Centre for Human Rights and that it might be wise to strengthen those funds first before establishing a new fund. The representatives of Brazil, Chile, El Salvador, and the United States of America found that the existence of other funds should not be considered as an obstacle to the establishment of the new fund. The delegations of Canada and Germany argued that certain criteria would need to be established and followed to ensure that the countries which really needed the money obtained it from the fund. The representative of the United Kingdom wished to keep open the option of the fund being operated either through an existing fund or, if not, then possibly through borrowing an existing board of trustees from an existing fund. The representative of Japan expressed the view that the fund should be financed by voluntary contributions made by the States parties to the Protocol and be administered by the UN Secretary-General in accordance with the applicable provisions of the financial regulations and rules of the United Nations.

10 After further discussions in the informal drafting group, its Chairperson submitted the results of the elaboration of this article. She said that the group proposed to include two paragraphs in Article 16 bis. Paragraph 1 provided for the establishment of a special fund to assist countries expressing a need for additional assistance for their ongoing efforts to improve the protection of persons deprived of their liberty. Paragraph 2 set out the sources from which the special fund might be financed.

11 The provisions, as revised by the drafting group, were adopted as Article 16 bis.⁹ However, certain States, eg the delegation of Canada, expressed concern about the expensive administration of the fund in question.¹⁰

12 The representative of the United States of America proposed submitting to the Commission on Human Rights the following recommendation on behalf of the Working Group:

1. The Working Group believes that the establishment of a special fund for activities provided for in this Protocol should be accomplished in the most economical way possible in order to maximize the amount of voluntary contributions to the fund available for programmes, rather than administration.
2. To that end the Working Group recommends that subsequent meetings of the Working Group continue to keep in mind that the special fund may be efficiently administered by the Board of Trustees of the Voluntary Fund for Technical Cooperation (VFTC) and that the Working Group also, at its meeting when it finalizes the draft Protocol and recommends it for adoption, consider transmitting this recommendation to the Centre for Human Rights for forwarding to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council.
3. With regard to Article 16 bis of the draft OP, the Working Group recommends that the Commission on Human Rights invite States Members of the United Nations to request assistance from the VFTC of the Centre for Human Rights for programmes designed to strengthen the protection of persons deprived of their liberty from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.¹¹

13 In addition, the US representative said that his delegation had consulted the Advisory Services and Technical Cooperation Branch on that issue and the Branch also agreed that the existing voluntary cooperation structure could handle the additional fund by setting up a separate account, so there would not be any mixing of funds, but it could be administered by the same Board of Trustees and there would be a large cost saving if that was done.¹²

14 The majority of delegations supported the United States of America's recommendation. In particular, the representative of France said that the provisions of Article 16 bis did not rule out the possible use of an already existing fund such as the VFTC to strengthen the protection of persons deprived of their liberty.¹³

15 At the sixth session, held from 13 to 24 October 1997, the Chairperson-Rapporteur again invited delegations to discuss Article 16 bis.¹⁴ The representative of the Netherlands proposed adding the phrase 'as well as through the regular budget of the United Nations' to the end of paragraph 2 of Article 16 bis. The delegation of South Africa pointed out that a special fund would help developing countries and would assist States to respond to the recommendations of the SPT. The funding of the SPT was a separate issue from the establishment of a special fund for assistance for the implementation of the recommendations of the SPT by States parties in need. The observers for Switzerland, Amnesty International, and the Association for the Prevention of Torture, as well as the representatives of Denmark, Italy, and the United Kingdom made comments supporting this view. At the fourth plenary meeting, Article 16 bis was adopted without amendments.¹⁵

16 In the proposal presented by the Chairperson-Rapporteur, the educational activities and programmes of NPMs were included within the scope of the Special Fund contained in Article 26 OP.¹⁶

17 At its fiftieth meeting on 22 April 2002, the Commission on Human Rights finally adopted the text of the OP submitted by the Chairperson-Rapporteur at the tenth session of the Working Group by twenty-nine votes to ten.¹⁷

3. Issues of Interpretation

18 The proposal to establish a Special Fund based on voluntary contributions of States, intergovernmental organizations, NGOs, private institutions, and individuals was already included in Article 16 of the revised Costa Rica Draft of 1991¹⁸ and was supported by most States during the drafting in the Working Group.¹⁹ While the activities of the SPT, including its country missions, are financed by the regular UN budget, the considerable costs necessary for a proper implementation of the provisions of the Protocol at the domestic level could be financed in poorer countries with the assistance of the Special Fund. Although the establishment of effective NPMs causes considerable expenses for States parties, the regular costs of NPMs, their members, staff and facilities, cannot be financed by the Special Fund. In this respect, Article 26(1) only refers to 'education programmes' of the NPMs. Why only this single aspect of the work of the NPMs was included in the text of Article 26 remains unclear. All previous drafts were fairly open and referred in general to the efforts of States parties to improve the protection of persons deprived of their liberty. But the Chairperson-Rapporteur, in her final draft of January 2002, included education programmes of the NPMs, which may lead to the conclusion that other activities of NPMs shall not be financed by the Fund, unless explicitly recommended by the SPT after a country mission in accordance with Article 11(b)(iv).

19 The main purpose of the Special Fund, which became operational in summer 2011, is ‘to help finance the implementation of the recommendations made by the Subcommittee on Prevention after a visit to a State party’. Earlier drafts had also required an ‘express request by a State party for assistance’²⁰ or at least ‘expressing the need for additional assistance’.²¹ The deletion of these words in the final draft of the Chairperson suggests that the initiative might also come from the SPT. In any case, the SPT should at least be requested by the Board of Trustees to give its opinion on the usefulness of providing funds to a particular State party. Since such funds shall only be provided after a country mission by the SPT, a certain involvement of the SPT seems to be guaranteed. In our opinion this would be necessary in order to ensure that the funds are in fact spent on a project aimed at implementing the respective recommendations of the SPT. The SPT might also consider a follow-up mission in accordance with Article 13(4) OP for the purpose of assessing whether or not the funds are in fact spent accordingly.²²

20 According to Article 11(a) OP, the SPT shall make recommendations on the basis of its country missions ‘concerning the protection of persons deprived of their liberty against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment’.²³ Possible projects to be financed by the Special Fund must, therefore, aim at improving conditions of detention, the protection of detainees against ill-treatment and/or the prevention of torture and other forms of ill-treatment during detention. This includes all programmes in the context of the reform of the criminal justice and prison system, for example the renovation of detention facilities, legislative reforms, training of judges, prosecutors, law enforcement officials and prison guards, review of interrogation methods, forensic examinations of detainees, anti-torture complaints and investigation mechanisms, anti-corruption programmes in the context of the administration of criminal justice, and all other measures aimed at the prevention of torture in accordance with the respective provisions of the CAT and other relevant UN and regional instruments.²⁴

21 According to Article 11(b)(iv) OP, the SPT shall also make ‘recommendations and observations to the States Parties with a view to strengthening the capacity and the mandate of the national preventive mechanisms for the prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment’. If the SPT, on the basis of its contacts with NPMs and its experiences during a country mission, arrives at the conclusion that the respective NPM lacks the required characteristics of independence and effectiveness, as required by Article 18 OP, or lacks the capacity and resources to carry out its mandate effectively, it may make a respective recommendation on the strengthening of the NPM to the State party concerned, the implementation of which may also be assisted by a project financed by the Special Fund.

22 Article 26(1) OP provides that the Special Fund shall be ‘administered in accordance with the financial regulations and rules of the United Nations’. The Financial

Regulations and Rules of the United Nations provide, in particular, that UN funds shall be administered by an independent Board of Trustees to be appointed by the General Assembly or by the States parties to the respective treaty.²⁵ Thus, the Fund is currently being managed by the OHCHR, its Grants Committee acting as an advisory body. Since the main purpose of the Special Fund is to help finance the implementation of the SPT's recommendations after its country missions, the SPT is consulted in the development and assessment of the projects to be financed by the Special Fund. Consequently, it identifies thematic priorities (by country) for the *annual call for applications*²⁶ and—with the objective of funding—the implementation of recommendations contained in its mission reports. The SPT's bureau is kept informed about the applications received and the grants awarded, and members of the SPT may generally be consulted on any issues arising from applications and asked to join relevant meetings.²⁷

23 According to Article 26(2) OP, the Special Fund receives voluntary contributions from governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, and other private or public entities. As at 31 December 2011, contributions to the Special Fund in the amount of $855,263.16 had been received from the Maldives, the Czech Republic, Spain, and the UK.²⁸ In 2012, it received contributions from the UK, the Czech Republic, Switzerland, and Italy.²⁹ In its eighth Annual Report, the SPT stated that it hoped 'that the Fund will continue to support projects that are essential for the effective prevention of torture and ill-treatment, and calls upon States to continue to support the Fund financially'.³⁰ Moreover, the SPT expressed that it believed 'that the work and visibility of the Fund would be enhanced were its administrative basis to be reviewed and a discrete Board of Trustees established to oversee its operation'.³¹ As in 2015 only one contribution was made to the Fund, the SPT established a working group 'to review with the secretariat of the Fund how the work and visibility of the Fund could be maintained and enhanced'.³² Moreover, the working group should study the Fund's administrative functions and explore the options for and possibilities of establishing an advisory mechanism to oversee its operation.³³ Consequently, the Secretary-General called on governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, and other private or public entities to contribute to the Special Fund, and to ensure sustained financial support to it.³⁴ As a considerable amount of money is required to finance the implementation of the various recommendations of the SPT, in the future, trans-national corporations and other business enterprises, above all members of the UN Global Compact, could also be encouraged, as part of their activities in the context of corporate social responsibility programmes, to provide contributions to the Special Fund.

24 Applications for funding may be submitted by State institutions of States parties to the OP visited by the SPT and that have agreed upon the publication of the SPT report, and the NPMs of the said States parties. Moreover, applications from NHRIs compliant with the Paris Principles as well as from NGOs are eligible if the proposed projects are to be implemented in cooperation with eligible States parties or NPMs.

25 Until the end of 2015, the Fund had supported a total of 28 projects with a total amount of $ 801,197.85 in eight States across three regions, including the training of more than 1,300 people in torture prevention techniques and methodology, in particular staff members of national preventive mechanisms, members of the judiciary, law enforcement and penitentiary officers, medical personnel, social workers and members of civil society organizations.³⁵

26 The projects supported by the Fund so far included legislative and policy changes (eg the adoption of a revised Code of Criminal Procedure in Benin, a Prison Act in Honduras, and a law prohibiting abusive body search for persons deprived of their liberty in Brazil), institutional changes (such as the development of a registry of detainees in Paraguay and an improved form for medical and legal examination of torture and ill-treatment in hospitals in the Maldives), as well as changes in peoples' lives (eg some detainees held without justification could have been released). The Fund's main focus, however, remains the support for NPMs.

FINAL PROVISIONS

Article 27

Signature, Ratification, and Accession

1. The present Protocol is open for signature by any State that has signed the Convention.
2. The present Protocol is subject to ratification by any State that has ratified or acceded to the Convention. Instruments of ratification shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.
3. The present Protocol shall be open to accession by any State that has ratified or acceded to the Convention.
4. Accession shall be effected by the deposit of an instrument of accession with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.
5. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall inform all States that have signed the present Protocol or acceded to it of the deposit of each instrument of ratification or accession.

1. Introduction

1 Article 27 OP stipulates that only States parties that have signed, ratified, or acceded to the CAT may likewise sign, ratify, or accede to the OP. This provision results from the idea that the already existing obligations under the CAT shall be further implemented and fulfilled by the States parties of that treaty.¹ The described procedure itself is common for UN and other international or multinational treaties.

2 The mere signature of the OP does not per se create an obligation to ratify the Protocol. However, in accordance with Article 18 VCLT, the signing of a multilateral treaty creates an obligation upon the signatory State to refrain from acts which would defeat the object and the purpose of the treaty in question, in this case the OP. Therefore, signing the Protocol expresses the willingness to become legally bound by its obligations in the near or at least medium term.

3 Ratification—according to Article 2(1)(b) VCLT—means the international act whereby a State establishes its definite consent to be bound by a treaty. Pursuant to Article 7 VCLT, this is usually done by the Head of the State, being its official representative.

¹ cf APT and IIDH, Optional Protocol to the UN Convention Against Torture: Implementation Manual (rev edn, APT and IIDH 2010) 110.

The act of ratification is performed by a deposit of a corresponding instrument with the UN Secretary-General.

4 The States in question may also become parties to the OP by way of accession. This procedure replaces signature and ratification and is likewise effected by deposit of an instrument of accession with the Secretary-General. By acceding to a treaty that has already been signed by other States, a State that is not yet a signatory to the treaty agrees to be bound by the provisions codified in the treaty in question. The legal effects of accession are the same as of ratification.

5 Pursuant to Article 27(5), the Secretary-General shall inform all signatory States of the present Protocol and all States that have acceded to it of every subsequent ratification or accession.

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

9 In the first session of the Working Group in 1992, the discussion on signature, ratification, and accession was limited to the question of whether the Protocol should be open to all States or otherwise limited to States that were already parties to the CAT. Whereas some delegations argued that the signature, ratification of, or accession to the OP was legally limited to States parties to the CAT, others considered the possibility of setting up an instrument that was not necessarily related to the Convention. A number of representatives stressed the need for States to have made the substantive commitments contained in the Convention prior to becoming parties to the Protocol, as the latter, in their view, sought to implement the aims of the Convention.⁵

10 In the fourth session of the Working Group in 1995, the Swedish observer, supported by the Netherlands and Switzerland, proposed not to link the Subcommittee provided for in the OP too closely to the Committee against Torture. Thus, the Protocol could also be opened to ratification or accession by States that were not parties to the CAT but to the CCPR, which also contained the prohibition of torture.⁶ Mexico spoke against this proposal. Regarding the format, the Japanese representative suggested modelling the Article on the four paragraphs of Article 8 of the First Optional Protocol to the CCPR while keeping paragraph 3 of the original Costa Rica draft on the Secretary-General's involvement.⁷ Accordingly, a revised text was submitted, which after further elaboration by the drafting group was presented to the Working Group for consideration.⁸

11 In 1997, the observer for Sweden reiterated her Government's proposal to open the OP to States that had not ratified or acceded to the CAT. She repeated the argument that the prohibition of torture was also contained in other international instruments and, therefore, the Subcommittee's activities in promoting implementation of this prohibition were not limited to States parties to the CAT. Furthermore, opening the OP to States not party to the CAT could also have the effect of facilitating ratification of or accession to the Convention in a second step.⁹ Although unusual, such provision would be, in the view of Sweden, legally possible. Regarding this proposal, a number of delegations discussed the advisability of requesting an opinion from the Office of the Legal Counsel.¹⁰ Observers of NGOs present at the Working Group raised concerns about opening the Protocol to all States and argued that promotion of universal ratification of the Convention should be given priority.¹¹ Eventually, the Swedish observer withdrew the proposal and the Working Group at its sixth session adopted the text as submitted by the drafting group in 1995.¹²

12 Alternative drafts of the Protocol provided by Mexico,¹³ the European Union,¹⁴ and the *United States*¹⁵ in later sessions contained similar or identical provisions on the issue of signature, ratification, or accession and were not discussed separately.

3. Issues of Interpretation

13 Article 27 OP is based almost literally on Article 8 of the first Optional Protocol to the CCPR.¹⁶ The only controversial issue during the drafting in the Working Group was whether the OP should be open to signature, ratification, and accession to all States (as proposed by Sweden) or only to States which had signed, ratified, or acceded to the CAT as the main treaty, which is the usual requirement for optional protocols. Most States, as well as representatives of NGOs, spoke against the Swedish proposal, which was later withdrawn.¹⁷ Apart from legal concerns, the opponents of the Swedish proposal argued that such a procedure might undermine the promotion of universal ratification of the CAT. This would have turned the OP into a free-standing treaty rather than a mere Protocol to the Convention.

14 According to Article 27(1) OP, the only requirement for signing the OP is prior signature of the Convention. This means that States that are signatories but not yet parties to the CAT are also invited to sign the Protocol. As a result, States parties to the CCPR, which are in fact bound by the prohibition of torture in Article 7 CCPR in a legally stronger manner than mere signatories of the CAT, are not invited to sign the Protocol.

15 Ratification of the Protocol is only possible for States parties to the CAT. It does not make a difference whether the State concerned became party to the CAT by way of signature and ratification, or by way of accession. In addition to being a party to the CAT, a

¹⁶ During the drafting of Article 27, Japan suggested following primarily the model of Article 8 of the first OP to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (CCPR). State wishing to ratify the OP must first have signed the Protocol. This latter requirement does not apply to accession.

16 Although not explicitly mentioned in Article 27 OP, States may also sign, ratify, or accede to the Protocol by means of succession.¹⁸ In fact, Serbia and Montenegro had signed the Protocol on 25 September 2003. After the secession of Montenegro on 3 June 2006, Serbia decided to ratify the Protocol on 26 September 2006, whereas Montenegro, by a notification of 23 October 2006, became a signatory State by means of succession.

17 The OP was adopted by the UN General Assembly on 18 December 2002 by a majority of 127 States in favour, four against (Nigeria, Marshall Islands, Palau, and the United States), and forty-two abstentions, including Australia, China, India, Japan, the Russian Federation, and other countries from Asia, Africa, and the Arab and Caribbean regions.¹⁹ It was opened for signature on 4 February 2003. The first country to sign the Protocol on 4 February 2003 was Costa Rica, the country which had submitted the first draft for an OP in 1980, which had prepared a revised draft in 1991 as the main basis for the discussions in the Working Group, and which led the discussions in the Working Group, in particular through its former Minister of Justice, Elizabeth Odio Benito, as Chairperson-Rapporteur. Costa Rica was followed by Denmark, Sweden, and the United Kingdom, which all signed in 2003 on 26 June, the International Day for Victims of Torture. Malta was the first country to ratify the Protocol on 24 September 2003, followed by Albania's accession on 1 October 2003, and ratification by the United Kingdom on 10 December 2003.

18 As of 12 December 2018, a total of 102 States had signed the OP (Montenegro by succession). Of the eighty-eight States parties, sixty had signed and ratified the Protocol, and twenty-five had become parties by means of accession.²⁰ Of the eighty-eight States parties, thirty-eight belong to the European Group, fifteen to the Latin American and the Caribbean Group, twenty-one to the African Group, eleven to the Asia-Pacific Group, and none to the North American Group.

1. Introduction

1 Article 28 OP describes the procedure of the entry into force of the Protocol in line with Article 27 CAT. Entry into force means that the provisions laid down in the Protocol become legally binding on all States parties that have ratified or acceded to it.

2 The required conditions for the entry into force of the OP were met on 23 May 2006, when Bolivia and Honduras ratified it and thus brought the total number of ratifications to twenty. Accordingly, and in line with Article 28(1) OP, the Protocol entered into force under international law thirty days later, ie on 22 June 2006. As of 12 December 2018, the OP had eighty-eight States parties.¹

7 In the course of the initial drafting considerations, the delegations had dissenting opinions on the number of instruments of ratification or accession required for the Protocol's entry into force. Although an expeditious entry into force was favoured by many delegations, it was argued that the proposed number of five or ten States was not enough to provide for universal participation. Moreover, some representatives claimed that the initial number of ratifications or accessions would have an impact on the number of members of the Subcommittee which in turn would influence the efficiency of the Subcommittee. Others held the opinion that ten instruments of ratification or accession were sufficient and that an early entry into force of the Protocol would attract further ratifications or accessions. One speaker favoured an even lower number than ten ratifications.⁶

8 In the Working Group of 1995, the members of the Working Group could not reach agreement and hence decided to postpone the decision on the number of ratifications or accessions required for the entry into force again.⁷ In this regard, Mexico also raised concerns over the financial implications this decision could have: if the Subcommittee was to be dependent on contributions by States parties rather than being financed by the regular UN budget, and the first ten States to the Protocol were not wealthy, then this might have negative impacts on the functioning of the body.⁸ Other issues raised in regard to this provision entailed a proposal by Chile to bring the period of time between deposit and entry into force in line with the CAT, ie the thirtieth day after the date of deposit rather than after three months as proposed in the Costa Rica draft, which was agreed upon by the Working Group.⁹ This proposal was agreed upon after the suggestion by delegate of Japan to name the UN Secretary-General as depositary.¹⁰

9 Two years later, in 1997, still no agreement was reached on the number of required ratifications or accessions. While initially Argentina, Cuba, the Czech Republic, the Dominican Republic, Finland, Italy, the Netherlands, Spain, Sweden, the Syrian Arab Republic, and Switzerland, supported by the observer of Amnesty International, were in favour of a low number as ten, Algeria, Australia, China, Denmark, Mexico, the United States, and later also Cuba preferred a number of twenty ratifications or more. Several States, such as Austria, Italy, and Switzerland, indicated in the course of the discussions that they were flexible as to the number.¹¹

10 Although a considerable number of States still preferred a low number of ratifications necessary for entry into force of the OP in the seventh session of the Working Group, many of them indicated willingness to support as a compromise, but also as an absolute maximum, the requirement of twenty ratifications or accessions.¹² On the other hand, the representatives of Australia and the United States, who had argued for a higher number than twenty, agreed to this compromise.¹³ Thus, the number of ratifications or accessions required for the entry into force of the Protocol was set with twenty and the provision was adopted by the Working Group.¹⁴

11 Alternative drafts of the Protocol provided by Mexico,¹⁵ the European Union,¹⁶ and the *United States*¹⁷ in later sessions contained identical provisions on the question of entry into force and were not discussed separately.

3. Issues of Interpretation

12 While Article 18 of the revised Costa Rica Draft of 1991 was based on Article 9 of the first OP to the CCPR (ten ratifications or accessions required and entry into force three months thereafter), the final text of Article 28 OP is in line with Article 27 CAT (twenty ratifications or accessions required, entry into force thirty days thereafter).¹⁸ The only controversial issue during the drafting process in the Working Group was the number of States parties required for the international entry into force of the Protocol. The number of twenty States parties is fairly high compared to similar procedural optional protocols, such as Article 9 of the First OP to the CCPR, Article 16 of the OP to the CEDAW, and Article 13 of the OP to the CRPD, which only require ten ratifications or accessions.¹⁹

13 However, in contrast to these treaties, the OP to the CAT provides not only for a new procedure, such as the OPs to the CCPR, CEDAW, and CRPD, but also for the establishment of a new treaty body to implement this procedure. Since only States parties to the OP have the right of nominating candidates for membership in the Subcommittee on the Prevention of Torture in accordance with Article 6 OP, a requirement of ten ratifications or accessions would have meant in fact that each of the ten States parties first ratifying the OP would have had one expert on the Subcommittee. The comparatively high number of twenty ratifications or accessions in fact did not, as was feared during the drafting process by some delegations, delay the entry into force of the Protocol, as there were only three-and-a-half years between the adoption of the Protocol on 18 December 2002²⁰ and its entry into force on 22 June 2006.

14 With the entry into force on 22 June 2006, the Protocol became binding for the first twenty States parties in its entirety, as no State party had made a declaration under Article 24 OP postponing the implementation of its obligations in relation to either the Subcommittee or the NPM.²¹ The date of 22 June was the starting point for a number of deadlines. Within the first month thereafter, the Secretary-General had to address a letter to all States parties inviting them to submit their nominations for Subcommittee candidates in accordance with Article 6 OP until 22 October 2006.²² The initial election of the first ten Subcommittee members had to be conducted by a first meeting of States parties, according to Article 7(1)(b) OP, no later than 23 December 2006, and was in fact held on 18 December 2006.²³ Furthermore, the first twenty States parties were under an obligation, pursuant to Article 17(1) OP, to establish, designate, or maintain one or several NPMs one year at the latest after the entry into force of the Protocol, ie by 23 June 2007.²⁴

15 For each State ratifying, acceding or succeeding to the Protocol after 22 June 2006, its provisions become, pursuant to Article 28(2) OP, legally binding after the thirtieth day following the deposit of its instrument of ratification, accession, or succession.

Validity in Federal States

1. Introduction

1 The text uses the same wording as Article 50 CCPR and Article 10 of the first OP to the CCPR.¹ This provision, which might be called an ‘anti-federal clause’,² clearly indicates that the Protocol and its provisions shall be binding for the whole territory of each State party, irrespective of its actual given (political) structure. This interpretation is in line with Article 29 VCLT, referring to the ‘[t]erritorial scope of treaties’ and stipulating that: ‘Unless a different intention appears from the treaty or is otherwise established, a treaty is binding upon each party in respect of its entire territory.’

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

4 Although the Costa Rica Draft did not contain or propose any ‘federal State clause’, this issue had already been raised during the first session of the Working Group in 1992.⁵ In the course of the fourth Working Group session in 1995, the delegation of China finally suggested adding a new article to the OP relating to the application of the Protocol in federal States.⁶ The Working Group adopted Article 18 bis (now Article 29) at its sixth session on 15 October 1997 without any further amendments.⁷

5 Alternative drafts of the Protocol provided by Mexico,⁸ the European Union,⁹ and the *United States*¹⁰ in later sessions contained identical provisions on the issue of federal States and were not discussed separately.

3. Issues of Interpretation

6 The ‘anti-federal clause’ of Article 29 OP was inserted into the Protocol on the initiative of China and corresponds literally to Article 50 CCPR and Article 10 of its first OP. During the drafting of the CCPR and CESCPR, certain States, including the United States, Australia, Denmark, and India, had proposed the insertion of a ‘federal clause’ to the effect that for matters falling within the responsibility of constituent states, provinces, or cantons, the international obligation of the federal Government would be limited to transmitting the provisions to the responsible authorities with a recommendation that the necessary steps be taken.¹¹ The opponents of a ‘federal clause’, above all the Soviet Union, argued that this would conflict with the principle of universality and establish an unequal status between federal and unitary States. Their counter-motion of inserting an ‘anti-federal clause’ ultimately prevailed, although the same effect would have been achieved without an explicit rule. According to Article 29 VCLT, a treaty is binding upon each party for its entire territory, unless a 'federal clause' or 'colonial clause' restricts its applicability to constituent states or dependent territories.

7 Accordingly, a federal structure cannot be used as an excuse for failing to fully implement obligations under the Protocol, meaning that federal and centralized States should be equally bound by the present Protocol's provisions to allow for preventive visits to all places of detention by both the Subcommittee and NPMs. Thus, the federal governments remain responsible for the proper fulfilment and respect for their obligations under the Protocol, even if their regional governments fail to do so.¹² However, decentralized States encounter certain difficulties in fully and effectively implementing international human rights treaties. Therefore, in order to overcome such challenges, a general framework for the implementation of the OP has to be considered with regard to federal or decentralized States.

8 First of all, it is necessary to assess whether the federal Government has enough constitutional authority to pass the corresponding implementing legislation. Subsequently, an adequate process of ratification or implementation must be ensured, either by referring to an existing process or by establishing an ad hoc negotiation process. Accordingly, it must be assessed whether legislative changes are necessary in order to ensure that the Subcommittee on Prevention possesses the powers required in the Protocol.

9 Possible models for NPMs in decentralized States are (a) a unified national body, enacted and appointed by the federal Government only or by the federal and regional governments together, or (b) multiple bodies acting on a regional basis for the territory for which the regional Government is responsible.¹³

10 The latter approach is quite controversial for several reasons. Although this approach has its advantages for States which are geographically large and feature a divided constitutional authority, additional efforts and resources are necessary in order to ensure the system's consistency in terms of recommendations and findings as well as its effectiveness and efficiency with regard to the communication between the NPMs and the Subcommittee. A possible solution for this problem can be found in the designation or creation of an administratively unified preventive mechanism, which could still comprise a large number of members and geographically widespread offices, reflecting the decentralized structure of the State.¹⁴

11 It is up to the States concerned to develop a well-functioning national system of prevention. The overall aim in centralized as well as in decentralized States shall be to ensure the coverage of all places where persons may be deprived of their liberty,¹⁵ to guarantee the expertise and powers required by the Protocol and to obtain effective and consistent results.¹⁶

Prohibition of Reservations

No reservations shall be made to the present Protocol.

1. Introduction	997
2. Travaux Préparatoires	998
2.1 Chronology of Draft Texts	998
2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions	998
3. Issues of Interpretation	1000

1. Introduction

1 Since both the CAT and its Protocol contain primarily procedural obligations, the question whether reservations should be permitted turned out to be highly controversial during the drafting of both instruments. In principle, the drafters had three options: either to remain silent on this issue, to adopt a provision explicitly allowing for (at least certain types of) reservations or to adopt a provision explicitly prohibiting any reservations. If a human rights treaty is silent, reservations are permissible, according to Article 19(c) VCLT, only in so far as they are not ‘incompatible with the object and purpose of the treaty’. This option has been chosen, for example, by the drafters of the two Covenants, which led to a highly controversial General Comment of the Human Rights Committee on issues relating to reservations under the CCPR and its two OPs.¹ Most UN human rights treaties contain provisions explicitly permitting reservations made in accordance with the VCLT.²

2 After long and heated discussions, the drafters of the OP agreed on a provision which explicitly prohibits reservations. This is in line with Article 19(a) VCLT, which stipulates that States may formulate reservations ‘unless the reservation is prohibited by the treaty’. In a final attempt to reach a consensus on this controversial issue, in January 2002 the Chairperson-Rapporteur introduced the possibility of a temporary ‘opting-out declaration’

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

7 Sir Nigel S Rodley, the then UN Special Rapporteur on Torture, addressed the issue of reservations in his comments to the Working Group in 2001 and stated that no reservations should be permissible with regard to the OP: 'It is so hard to conceive of a reservation to an instrument of this nature that would not have such an adverse effect that a general exclusion of reservations would appear appropriate.'⁸

8 Already in the first session of the Working Group the question whether any reservations should be admissible or if the Protocol should contain a clause that excluded

this possibility triggered a heated discussion. On the one hand, it was argued that the Protocol did not contain provisions of substantive law and that therefore reservations should be inadmissible. Otherwise, it was brought forward, the effectiveness of the national preventive mechanism could be seriously hampered. Furthermore, the Protocol already envisaged a so-called 'negotiated reservation' allowing States to suspend a visit of the Subcommittee under certain circumstances.⁹ On the other hand, States advocating the possibility of making reservations stated that excluding reservations might inhibit States from becoming parties to the Protocol as this situation might make its implementation difficult for them. Moreover, allowing reservations would not be dangerous since the VCLT declared any reservation that is inconsistent with the object and purpose of the respective treaty to be inadmissible. Certain permissible reservations were discussed as a possible consensus.¹⁰

9 In the course of the fourth session of the Working Group in 1996, the discussion on reservations was taken up again. Certain States, such as Canada, Chile, France, the Netherlands, the Russian Federation, South Africa, Sweden, and Switzerland, supported by Amnesty International, clearly argued for excluding any reservations. On the other side, the Japanese delegate proposed to delete a provision with such content. Otherwise, it was proposed to add that only reservations incompatible with the object and purpose of the Protocol should not be permitted. This proposal was explicitly contested by the representative of Sweden with a reference to the VCLT, which declared such reservations inadmissible in any case. The delegates from Algeria, Mexico, and the United States suggested that reservations addressing procedural issues should be allowed and the US delegation made the proposal to add to the provision that reservations 'incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention and the Protocol' should not be admissible.¹¹

10 In the 1997 meeting, the two groups with contrary positions consolidated: on the one hand, Argentina, Austria, Canada, the Czech Republic, Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, and the Russian Federation, supported again by Amnesty International, reiterated that States parties should not be entitled to make reservations since such reservations could render the preventive mechanism useless. On the other hand, Algeria, Brazil, China, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Mexico, the Syrian Arab Republic, and the United States expressed opposition to a complete exclusion of reservations. Observers of the APT and the International Commission of Jurists stated that they preferred no reservations at all but could accept a provision that excluded reservations only to the core articles of the Protocol as a compromise. The representative of South Africa, although preferring no reservations, also indicated willingness to accept reservations in the interest of reaching agreement.¹²

11 In the Working Group of 1999, the opponents of a possibility for reservations emphasized once again that it was not logical to permit reservations since the Protocol only contained institutional and procedural provisions, while supporters of reservations countered that the Protocol also contained substantive provisions imposing obligations on States parties which in turn, should be entitled to reservations. Alternatively, they proposed to make an explicit reference in the Protocol to those Articles where a reservation was not permitted.¹³

12 In the ninth session of the Working Group in 2001, where some delegations cited as an argument for allowing reservations recent practice in the two OPs to the CRC, still no consensus was found.¹⁴

13 In the final session of the Working Group, the Chairperson-Rapporteur presented a draft OP, which contained a provision excluding all reservations. Although some delegations explicitly contested this provision—the representative of the United States called it an ‘unwise departure from current standard-setting trends’¹⁵ and the Russian Federation perceived it as ‘a matter of grave concern’¹⁶—the proposal of the Chairman-Rapporteur was eventually adopted with a vote on 24 January 2002.¹⁷

3. Issues of Interpretation

14 The prohibition of any reservation (with the exception of the temporary ‘opting out-declaration’ in Article 24 OP) in Article 30 OP is based on Article 21 ECPT and Article 18(3) of the revised Costa Rica Draft of 1991.¹⁸ Although the admissibility of a provision explicitly prohibiting reservations was questioned by some delegates in the Working Group,¹⁹ there can be no doubt that Article 30 OP is in line with Article 19(a) VCLT, which permits reservations to a treaty ‘unless the reservation is prohibited by the treaty’. The main reason for the prohibition of reservations is that the Protocol only contains institutional and procedural provisions and that reservations excluding the application of some of these provisions might be incompatible with the object and purpose of the Protocol. The general prohibition of reservations can also be found in other treaties of a procedural nature, such as Article 17 of the OP to CEDAW and Article 120 of the ICC Statute.

15 One should, however, keep in mind that many compromises had been achieved during the drafting process of the OP in order to accommodate the concerns of States which opposed too far-reaching powers of the Subcommittee and the NPMs. These compromises include the possibility of a temporary ‘opting-out-declaration’ under Article 24 OP,²⁰ and of the ‘negotiated reservation’ in Article 14(2) OP allowing States parties to object to a visit by the Subcommittee to a particular place of detention under exceptional circumstances.²¹

Relation to Regional Systems of Preventive Visits to Places of Detention

The provisions of the present Protocol shall not affect the obligations of States Parties under any regional convention instituting a system of visits to places of detention. The Subcommittee on Prevention and the bodies established under such regional conventions are encouraged to consult and cooperate with a view to avoiding duplication and promoting effectively the objectives of the present Protocol.

1. Introduction

1 This provision reflects the principle of cooperation, which is at the heart of the OP's preventive approach.¹ It aims to ensure not only that the work of other monitoring bodies in the field of torture prevention shall not be undermined by the Subcommittee on Prevention,² but also that the experiences gained so far by regional mechanisms shall be shared with the Subcommittee in order to promote the objectives of the OP. Unnecessary duplication, however, shall be avoided in order not to waste valuable and limited resources.

Article 9

1. If, on the basis of a regional convention, a system of visits to places of detention similar to the one of the present Protocol is in force for a State Party, the Subcommittee shall only in exceptional cases, when required by important circumstances, send its own mission to such a State Party. It may, however, consult with the organs established under such regional conventions with a view to coordinating activities including the possibility of having one of its members participate in missions carried out under the regional conventions as an observer. Such an observer shall report to the Subcommittee. This report shall be strictly confidential and shall not be made public.

2. The present Protocol does not affect the provisions of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of victims of war and their Additional Protocols of 8 June 1977 by which the Protecting Powers and the International Committee of the Red Cross visit places of detention, or the right of any State Party to authorize the International Committee to visit places of detention in situations not covered by international humanitarian law.

Article 19

1. The provisions of the present Protocol shall not affect the obligations of States parties under any regional convention based on a system of visits to places of detention. The Sub-Committee and the bodies established on the basis of such regional mechanisms shall consult and cooperate in order to promote effectively the objectives of the present Protocol and avoid any duplication of work.

Article 10

1. The provisions of the present Protocol shall not affect the obligations of States Parties under any regional convention based on a system of visits to places of detention. The Sub-Committee on Prevention and the bodies established on the basis of such regional mechanisms shall consult and cooperate in order to promote effectively the objectives of the present Protocol and avoid any duplication of work.

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

5 Although the revised Costa Rica Draft of 1991 did not contain a clause similar to that which was finally adopted as Article 31 OP, the issue of the relationship between the preventive mechanism envisaged under the Protocol and other regional mechanisms, such as the CPT, was the subject of intense negotiations within the Working Group. The discussions took place in the framework of Article 9 of the Costa Rica Draft, which contained a provision covering cases where, based on a regional convention, a system of visits to places of detention similar to that of the Protocol was in force for a State party. The draft envisaged that in such cases the Subcommittee should only in exceptional cases send its own mission to the State party. However, the Article provided for consultations between the Subcommittee and the regional mechanism as well as for the possibility of dispatching a member of the Subcommittee as an observer to a mission carried out by the regional mechanism.

6 In the first session of the Working Group, the Chairperson-Rapporteur invited the States' representatives to give due consideration to this issue.⁶ Most delegations considered a balanced relationship between the Subcommittee and regional bodies vital for the credibility of the new mechanism. Hence, the introduction of appropriate measures of coordination in order to avoid competition and duplication and to enhance complementarity was required.⁷ The Working Group also took note of the reservations expressed by the Chairperson of the CPT about the proposed dispatch of a member of the Subcommittee as an observer to a mission of the regional mechanism.⁸ The Working Group agreed that any arrangement should respect regional mechanisms that were working effectively, provide a certain degree of integration between the regional and the international systems without prejudicing their essential characteristics and requirements, and avoid any subordination of either system to the other. A possible solution was seen in the principle of complementarity of function of these bodies and in the principle of reciprocal cooperation between them. A number of delegations noted that the existence of a regional mechanism for certain States should not serve as an exemption from international scrutiny by the Subcommittee under the Protocol.⁹

7 The relationship between regional bodies and the Subcommittee, which was declared a priority issue in the first session of the Working Group, was discussed in greater detail during the second and third sessions. It was stressed that duplication between these bodies should be avoided and complementarity enhanced. Since the scope of the Protocol was universal, no region should be excluded even if it was covered by a regional system. Some delegates found Article 9 of the Costa Rica draft sufficient while others argued that the relationship between different systems had to be made clearer in order to avoid overlapping. Again, the principle of reciprocal cooperation was seen as a possible solution. A proposal was made that States that had ratified both a regional convention as well as the Protocol should agree that their respective visit reports drawn up by the regional body be automatically forwarded to the Subcommittee on a confidential basis.¹⁰

8 After a number of amendments the Working Group adopted Article 9 as the outcome of the beginning of the first reading on 21 October 1994.¹¹ Paragraph 2, which encouraged the Subcommittee to cooperate with different organs and institutions, including regional mechanisms, was followed by paragraph 3, which ascertained the universal scope of the Protocol by placing the decision to visit States parties that are also parties to regional conventions on the Subcommittee. However, cooperation between the Subcommittee and the regional mechanism was envisaged and States were encouraged to submit to the Subcommittee visit reports drawn up by the regional body.¹²

9 A number of editorial changes were made to paragraph 3 of Article 9 in the sixth session of the Working Group in 1997 and it was adopted as new paragraph 3 of Article 11 as outcome of the second reading.¹³ However, when Mexico, with the support of GRULAC, introduced a new draft,¹⁴ its Article 18(2) only contained a general clause on cooperation with international and regional bodies, leaving out detailed arrangements governing this cooperation. In addition to earlier drafts, a provision was inserted which clarified that the provisions of the Protocol shall not affect the obligations of States parties under any regional convention instituting a system of visits to places of detention. Again, the Subcommittee and regional mechanisms were encouraged to consult and cooperate with a view to avoiding duplication and promoting effectively the objectives of the Protocol. Also the proposal by the *United States*¹⁵ followed this undisputed approach, which was taken up by the Chairperson-Rapporteur in the tenth session of the Working Group¹⁶ and finally adopted as Article 31 OP.

3. Issues of Interpretation

3.1 Relevant Regional Systems of Visits to Places of Detention

10 The relevant regional bodies are primarily the CPT under the European Convention against Torture,¹⁷ as well as the Special Rapporteur on Prisons and Other Conditions of Detention under the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights¹⁸ and the Special Rapporteur on the Rights of Persons Deprived of Freedom under the American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man.¹⁹

11 Much value can be identified in the system that has been initiated by the Protocol. First of all, the Protocol introduced a preventive system with a two-pillar approach, combining efforts on the international as well as on the national level. Second, the Subcommittee on Prevention has a global mandate to visit places of detention worldwide and in any country or territory under a State party's jurisdiction. Consequently, it has gained much experience in the international field and has contributed enormously to the overall and common goal of an effective prevention of torture and other forms of ill-treatment.

3.2 Avoiding Duplication

12 As the CPT was already active by the time the OPCAT entered into force, this could mean that the SPT steps back from conducting missions to countries that are visited by the CPT. Hence, while the phrase ‘avoiding duplication’ clearly does not oblige the SPT to do so, this was indeed the practice of the SPT in the first years—with the exception of a visit to Sweden in its first year of operation (2007) which was determined on the basis of drawing lots. Only after visiting the Ukraine in 2011 did the SPT start to undertake visits to Council of Europe countries more frequently each year.

13 Although the drafting process of the Protocol has already shown that the Subcommittee on Prevention—in its mandate—is based primarily on the experiences of the CPT, there are some major differences between these two bodies as far as their functioning is concerned. Whilst the CPT’s mandate is geared to a particular region, the mandate of the Subcommittee is potentially global. Due to this global reach, it is challenging for the Subcommittee to ensure that every region worldwide is sufficiently represented in its annual programme of missions. This is compounded by the fact that the international body consists of only twenty experts and that the length and duration of its missions and visits is different from those conducted by the CPT. Furthermore, the CPT has the mandate to conduct so-called ad hoc visits in addition to its periodic visits, whereas the Subcommittee can propose to carry out a follow-up visit to the State party concerned, but does not have the mandate to act on an ad hoc basis.²⁰

14 Duplication can be understood as an overlap of visits. This has only been an issue in the case of ad hoc visits by the CPT. However, also avoiding to ‘getting in each other’s way’ should be an aim that can be reached by avoiding visits taking place in too close a proximity to each other.²¹ Such planning should avoid disturbing the possibly lengthy process of dialogue arising out of a visit.²²

15 As to consultation and cooperation foreseen by Article 31 OP between the Subcommittee and the regional treaty bodies, it is of the utmost importance that all treaty monitoring bodies aim at establishing a system of good cooperation and dialogue, including the sharing of information, a framework for mutual consultations, and the possibility of joint projects, as well as an adjustment of criteria for joint visits to States parties.²³ Between the CPT and the SPT, cooperation exists by informal exchange between

²² ibid 30: ‘On average, a CPT visit report is transmitted about eight or nine months after the visit takes place, and a response is requested within six months. Thus the state is likely to be most engaged substantively about a year after the actual visit has taken place. Although the SPT tends to transmit its reports four or five months after a visit, the period of response is similar’ (31).

²³ In its first mission report, the SPT notes that it has studied the recommendations made by the CPT carefully and, as not all these recommendations were reflected in the legislation considered by the SPT, the SPT issues recommendations similar to those made by the CPT. In another mission report, the SPT reminds the State party of and reinforces the CPT’s recommendations. Furthermore, when recommending that the State party request the publication of the SPT’s report in accordance with Article 16(2) OP, it also recommended that the State party requests the publication of the CPT’s report: see SPT, ‘Report on the Visit of the Subcommittee on Prevention of Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment to Sweden’ (2008) UN Doc CAT/OP/SWE/1, para 121; SPT, ‘Report on the Visit of the Subcommittee on Prevention of Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment to Ukraine’ (2016) UN Doc CAT/OP/UKR/1, para 96.

the secretariats of the two committees as well as between their members. Information sharing is impeded by the fact that the deliberations of each Committee are confidential and due to the timings of decision-making the relevant information may just not yet be there to share.²⁴ The coordination between the SPT and the CPT has been apparent in some SPT reports.²⁵

STEPHANIE KRISPER

²⁴ Bicknell and Evans (n 21) 31, para 23: ‘Thus whilst the decision making of the SPT takes place in June of the preceding year, that of the CPT now takes places earlier and is made public in time for it to be taken into consideration. Obviously, the CPT will not be aware of the SPT’s as yet undecided plans. This reverses the situation before 2014, when the decision-making of the SPT was made in ignorance of the CPT’s plans, though it must be said that there is a degree of predictability to the CPT’s cycle of regular visits. The CPT’s ad hoc visits are of course entirely unpredictable and cannot be factored into any planning process. It seems unlikely that the CPT takes much account of the SPT’s visiting programme when considering whether to undertake an ad hoc visit, but given their differing natures and backgrounds, that is reasonable.’

Relation to the International Committee of the Red Cross

The provisions of the present Protocol shall not affect the obligations of States Parties to the four Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto of 8 June 1977, nor the opportunity available to any State Party to authorize the International Committee of the Red Cross to visit places of detention in situations not covered by international humanitarian law.

1. Introduction

1 In times of international armed conflict, the ICRC is authorized by the Geneva Conventions to visit all places of detention where prisoners of war, detained civilians, and other protected persons are or may be.¹ Since torture is absolutely prohibited under the Geneva Conventions and constitutes a grave breach of international humanitarian law, the ICRC also monitors the implementation of the prohibition of torture during its visits to places of detention and thereby significantly contributes to its prevention. In times of non-international armed conflict and in peace times, the ICRC is not empowered by the Geneva Conventions to visit places of detention, but States may authorize it on the basis of ad hoc agreements. The ICRC is based on the principles of neutrality, independence, impartiality, cooperation, and strict confidentiality, and, therefore, never publicly reports on its findings and recommendations. The ICRC and its experiences prompted the Swiss banker and expert on humanitarian law Jean-Jacques Gautier to develop a system of preventive visits to places of detention by a human rights treaty monitoring body of the United Nations.²

2 Since international human rights law also applies in times of armed conflict, the question of the relationship between the Protocol and the Geneva Conventions arose. The original Costa Rica Draft and Article 17(3) ECPT are based on the principle that a visit by the ICRC should be given preference to visits by a human rights monitoring body which, therefore, shall refrain from visiting places of detention which are visited by the ICRC.³ Article 32 OP is, however, based on the opposite principle, namely that both types of visits are complementary and demand cooperation between the Subcommittee and the ICRC.

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

6 From the first session of the Working Group, the relationship between the Subcommittee and the ICRC was given due consideration. Throughout the ten years of negotiations, the ICRC was represented by an observer, who explained to the Working Group on several occasions that the Protecting Powers and the ICRC were governed by different objectives than the Subcommittee. Therefore, these mechanisms should not interfere with each other. He was of the opinion that informal means of consultation between the ICRC and the Subcommittee should be allowed to develop in practice a maximum of complementarity. A number of States' delegations supported this view, arguing that detailed arrangements of cooperation in the Protocol might prove detrimental to flexibility.⁷

7 In the fifth session of the Working Group in 1996, this issue was discussed with the then UN Special Rapporteur on Torture, Sir Nigel Rodley, who expressed concern that the work of the ICRC could be seriously compromised if the Subcommittee were not provided with certain essential elements, such as the clear right to visit any State party, also on an ad hoc basis; to have access to any place of detention; to meet privately with persons deprived of their liberty and other rights.⁸

8 At the sixth session, the Working Group adopted the text of Article 9(4) OP. Alternative drafts of the Protocol provided by Mexico,⁹ the European Union,¹⁰ and the *United States*¹¹ in later sessions contained identical provisions on the question of the relationship with the ICRC and were not discussed separately.

3. Issues of Interpretation

9 Article 1(2) of the original Costa Rica Draft of 1980 provided that any place of detention which representatives or delegates of a Protecting Power or of the ICRC are entitled to visit and actually do visit pursuant to the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols shall be excluded from the competence of the visiting body to be established under the OP.¹² This principle of mutual exclusiveness and preference of the ICRC found its way in slightly different words into Article 17(3) ECPT. The CPT is thereby prevented from visiting places of detention which the ICRC effectively visits 'on a regular basis by virtue of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols of 8 June 1977 thereto'. This prohibition for the CPT from visiting a State only applies to international armed conflicts, because visits during internal armed conflicts or in peace time are not based on the Geneva Conventions, but on ad hoc agreements with the States concerned.¹³

10 The CPT has visited places of detention that were also visited by the ICRC based on ad hoc agreements, for example in Albania, Azerbaijan, the Russian Federation (Chechen Republic), and the Ukraine.¹⁴ These parallel or even overlapping visits have not led to any discernible problems of competition or mutual interference with each other's competences, but rather to greater protection for persons deprived of their liberty.¹⁵ In practice, the level of cooperation between the ICRC and the CPT seems to have been quite fruitful for both bodies, which maintain frequent informal contacts in order to coordinate their activities, subject of course to the principle of confidentiality that binds both bodies. The same holds true for the cooperation and coordination between the Special Rapporteur on Torture and both the CPT and the ICRC. There is no reason to believe that the situation would be different in times of international armed conflict, which means in retrospect that the provision of Article 17(3) ECPT was overly cautious.

11 Article 32 OP therefore, follows the opposite philosophy, namely that visits by both bodies are complementary in international and non-international armed conflicts and that both bodies should cooperate and coordinate their activities accordingly. Article 9 of the revised Costa Rica Draft of 1991 had changed from mutual exclusiveness to cooperation.¹⁶ This principle was no longer seriously challenged during the discussions in the Working Group,¹⁷ and discussion among the delegations focused on how the provision on cooperation should be regulated in detail.

12 The outcome is very flexible with regard to the ways and means of cooperation between the Subcommittee, NPMs, and the ICRC. Article 32 simply guarantees that neither the obligations of States parties under the Geneva Conventions to permit visits of the ICRC during international armed conflicts, nor their right to authorize visits of the ICRC in situations of non-international armed conflict and in peace time shall be affected by becoming parties to the Protocol. In other words, the Subcommittee or an NPM shall not have preference over visits by the ICRC, which can also be authorized to visit places of detention parallel to visits by the respective NPM and the Subcommittee.

Denunciation

1. Any State Party may denounce the present Protocol at any time by written notification addressed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall thereafter inform the other States Parties to the present Protocol and the Convention. Denunciation shall take effect one year after the date of receipt of the notification by the Secretary-General.
2. Such a denunciation shall not have the effect of releasing the State Party from its obligations under the present Protocol in regard to any act or situation that may occur prior to the date on which the denunciation becomes effective, or to the actions that the Subcommittee on Prevention has decided or may decide to take with respect to the State Party concerned, nor shall denunciation prejudice in any way the continued consideration of any matter already under consideration by the Subcommittee on Prevention prior to the date on which the denunciation becomes effective.
3. Following the date on which the denunciation of the State Party becomes effective, the Subcommittee on Prevention shall not commence consideration of any new matter regarding that State.

1. Introduction

1 Pursuant to Article 33, a State party may denounce the OP at any time by written notification to the Secretary-General, being the sole requirement for withdrawal. The possibility and procedure of denunciation is quite common with regard to international treaties, at least as to their optional elements. However, a State party may not tackle its obligations under the present Protocol until the expiration of one year calculated from the date of receipt of the notification by the Secretary-General. Furthermore, and in order to hinder States parties from denouncing the Protocol for the purpose of suppressing any grievances, the act of denunciation does not function retroactively.

2 The provision at hand is based on Article 31 CAT, which—unlike the CCPR¹—contains an explicit provision on denunciation. The ECPT also contains a comparable provision for the European system in its Article 22, especially as regards the date on which the denunciation becomes effective.

Article 16

Any State Party may denounce the present Protocol at any time by written notification addressed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall inform the other States Parties and the Committee. Denunciation shall take effect one year after the date of receipt of the notification. Denunciation shall not affect the execution of measures authorised prior to it.

Article 19

Any State Party may denounce the present Protocol at any time by written notification addressed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall thereafter inform the other States Parties, the Committee against Torture and the Subcommittee. Denunciation shall take effect one year after the date of receipt of the notification by the Secretary-General.

Article 19

1. Any State Party may denounce the present Protocol at any time by written notification addressed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall thereafter inform the other States Parties to the present Protocol and the Convention. Denunciation shall take effect one year after the date of receipt of the notification by the Secretary-General.

2. Such a denunciation shall not have the effect of releasing the State Party from its obligations under this Protocol in regard to any act or situation which occurs prior to the date at which the denunciation becomes effective, or to the actions that the Sub-Committee [the Committee against Torture] has decided or may decide to adopt with respect to the State Party concerned, nor shall denunciation prejudice in any way the continued consideration of any matter which is already under consideration by the Sub-Committee [the Committee against Torture] prior to the date at which denunciation becomes effective.

1. Any State Party may denounce the present Protocol at any time by written notification addressed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall thereafter inform the other States Parties to the present Protocol and the Convention. Denunciation shall take effect one year after the date of receipt of the notification by the Secretary-General.

2. Such a denunciation shall not have the effect of releasing the State Party from its obligations under the present Protocol in regard to any act or situation which occurs prior to the date at which the denunciation becomes effective, or to the actions that the Subcommittee has decided or may decide to adopt with respect to the State Party concerned, nor shall denunciation prejudice in any way the continued consideration of any matter which is already under consideration by the Subcommittee prior to the date at which denunciation becomes effective.

3. Following the date at which the denunciation of the State Party becomes effective, the Subcommittee shall not commence consideration of any new matter regarding that State.

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

7 The issue of denunciation was only briefly considered during the first session of the Working Group in 1992, when one delegation questioned the need to inform the CAT Committee of such a denunciation as contained in the Costa Rica Draft which formed the basis for discussions.⁶

8 In 1995, the representatives of Australia, Chile, and the Netherlands supported the retention of a clause dealing with the effect of a denunciation with regard to any act or situation occurring prior to it into the provision. Similar clauses could also be found in Article 31(2) CAT and Article 12 of the first OP to the CCPR. According to this clause, a denunciation should not have the effect of releasing a State party from its obligations under the Protocol in relation to any act or omission which occurred prior to the date at which the denunciation becomes effective, nor should the denunciation prejudice the continued consideration of any matter before the SPT.⁷

9 In 1997, the outcome of the first reading was modified in so far as a reference to the CAT Committee in paragraph 2 of the Article, dealing with the effects of a denunciation, was deleted. Furthermore, Mexico reintroduced a third paragraph preventing the SPT commencing considerations of any new matter after the date at which the denunciation becomes effective. The text of the provision was then adopted by the Working Group.⁸

⁸ Report of the Working Group on the Draft Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (1997) UN Doc E/CN.4/1998/42, paras 115ff.

10 Alternative drafts of the Protocol provided by *Mexico*⁹ and the *European Union*¹⁰ in later sessions contained identical provisions on the question of denunciation and were not discussed separately. The draft by the United States,¹¹ which provided for the possibility of denunciation, remained silent on the effects of such denunciation.

3. Issues of Interpretation

11 Article 33 OP is based on the detailed provisions of Article 31 CAT. On the various questions of interpretation related to the denunciation clause, the reader is referred to the respective comments on Article 31 CAT.¹² In the following, we will only focus on the differences between both provisions.

12 By inserting the words ‘at any time’ in paragraph 1, Article 33 OP only confirms the interpretation applied to Article 31 CAT, namely that States parties are free to denounce the Protocol even immediately after having deposited the respective instruments of ratification or accession.

13 Article 33(2) OP confirms that the State party concerned remains fully bound by the provisions of the Protocol for the one-year period between the notification of the respective denunciation and its entry into force. But the formulation also refers to any ‘situation’ that may occur during this period as well as to ‘the actions that the SPT has decided or may decide to take with respect to the State Party concerned’. The word ‘situation’ may be interpreted as referring, for example, to a serious deterioration of prison conditions caused by riots or similar events which the State party has to address as if it had not denounced the Protocol. It might also refer to a situation in which a comprehensive prison or police reform project has just started, with the financial assistance of the Special Fund in Article 26, aimed at implementing a specific recommendation of the SPT. The actions which the SPT may decide to take within this one-year period are, above all, to carry out a regular or a follow-up mission to the country concerned, to maintain contacts with the NPM in the country and to provide the NPM with training, advice, and technical assistance in the evaluation of the needs and means necessary to improve the conditions of detention in the country and to strengthen the protection of detainees against torture and ill-treatment.¹³

14 As with respect to Article 31 CAT, any reasonable interpretation of Article 33(2) and (3) OP must strike a fair balance between the legitimate concern of the SPT not to be prevented from finalizing pending procedures and activities and the legitimate concern of the respective State party that this one-year period will not be misused by the SPT to arbitrarily initiate, continue, and perhaps delay certain proceedings and activities as a reaction to its notification of denunciation.¹⁴ This means that the SPT may, of course continue its preparations for a country mission and even start a new country mission at the beginning of the one-year period, and finalize its report and recommendations also after the one-year period. The same holds true for any training, advice, and assistance activities in relation to the NPM. But the SPT should not start the initiative for a new country mission or a new training programme with the NPM ten months after the notification of denunciation in order to be able to carry out as many activities as possible even after the one year period, although strictly speaking, this would not be prevented by Article 33(3) OP.

15 The denunciation of the OP only has the legal effect that the SPT shall not commence new activities after the date of its entry into force, but it has no similar automatic effect on the NPM. If the State party also wishes to discontinue the functioning of the NPM, it would have to take the required legislative and other action. Such measures should, however, only be commenced after the entry into force of the denunciation, ie after the one-year period foreseen in Article 33(1) OP.

Amendments

1. Any State Party to the present Protocol may propose an amendment and file it with the Secretary-General of the United Nations. The Secretary-General shall thereupon communicate the proposed amendment to the States Parties to the present Protocol with a request that they notify him whether they favour a conference of States Parties for the purpose of considering and voting upon the proposal. In the event that within four months from the date of such communication at least one third of the States Parties favour such a conference, the Secretary-General shall convene the conference under the auspices of the United Nations. Any amendment adopted by a majority of two thirds of the States Parties present and voting at the conference shall be submitted by the Secretary-General of the United Nations to all States Parties for acceptance.
2. An amendment adopted in accordance with paragraph 1 of the present article shall come into force when it has been accepted by a two-thirds majority of the States Parties to the present Protocol in accordance with their respective constitutional processes.
3. When amendments come into force, they shall be binding on those States Parties that have accepted them, other States Parties still being bound by the provisions of the present Protocol and any earlier amendment that they have accepted.

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

4 In the first session of the Working Group in 1992, it was noted that the Costa Rica Draft of 1991, on which the Working Group based its discussions, did not contain a provision for amendments of the Protocol.⁴ A proposal by the drafting group presented at the fourth session in 1995, which combined elements of Article 11 of the first OP to the CCPR as well as of Article 29 CAT, was adopted by the Working Group as draft Article 19 bis.⁵

5 The discussion was opened again in the course of the second reading of draft Article 19 bis in 1997, when the representative of Mexico noted that the Article was inconsistent with the wording of the Convention. Accordingly, the Working Group decided to adopt only paragraph 3 of Article 19 bis and postponed the adoption of paragraphs 1 and 2.⁶

6 A lengthy discussion on the issue of amendments followed in 1998, where a number of questions were raised by the delegates, such as whether an amendment should be approved by a two-thirds majority or by all States parties, whether an approval of the General Assembly was needed for an amendment, or whether the matter was exclusively for the States parties to decide. The representative of the Netherlands made the proposal to delete the whole provision, since Article 40 VCLT was applicable in any case. This proposal did not find support among the participants. Taking into consideration all arguments, the Chairperson of the drafting group presented a revised provision on amendments, which was adopted by the Working Group after the second reading as new Article 22.⁷

7 Alternative drafts of the Protocol provided by Mexico,⁸ the European Union,⁹ and the *United States*¹⁰ in later sessions contained identical provisions on the question of amendments and were not discussed separately.

3. Issues of Interpretation

8 In contrast to Article 51(2) CCPR, the words ‘within four months from the date of such communication’ have been inserted in paragraph 1 of Article 34 OP. Further, the requirement of approval by the UN General Assembly, contained also in Article 51(2) CCPR, has been left out.

9 Article 34 OP is almost identical to the wording and substance of Article 29 CAT. The only substantial difference to Article 29(1) CAT, which merely requires a simple majority, is that the number of States parties required for the adoption of the amendment under Article 34(1) OP was raised from a simple majority to a two-thirds majority of the States parties present and voting. This was the reaction to the proposal of the delegate of the Netherlands to delete this article in order to make the provisions of the VCLT directly applicable.¹¹ However, this higher requirement does not solve the problem. It would either be necessary to raise the requirement of acceptance of the amendment in Article 34(2) from a two-thirds majority to all States parties,¹² or to accept that a procedural amendment could also become binding on all States parties after acceptance by only two-thirds of the States parties. The first option is applied, for example, to all procedural Protocols to the ECHR;¹³ the second option was applied by the States parties to the CRC when in 1995 they decided to raise the number of members of the Committee on the Rights of the Child from ten to eighteen by simply ignoring the respective provision of Article 50(3) CRC.¹⁴

10 On the various questions of interpretation and the non-practicality of a procedural amendment, which shall only be binding on the States parties that have accepted it, the reader is referred to the remarks on Article 29 CAT.¹⁵

Members of the Subcommittee on Prevention and of the national preventive mechanisms shall be accorded such privileges and immunities as are necessary for the independent exercise of their functions. Members of the Subcommittee on Prevention shall be accorded the privileges and immunities specified in section 22 of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations of 13 February 1946, subject to the provisions of section 23 of that Convention.

1. Introduction

1 Article 35 OP stipulates that the members of the Subcommittee on Prevention as well as of the NPMs shall be granted the necessary privileges and immunities in order to exercise their monitoring functions independently.

2 With regard to the members of the Subcommittee, special reference is made to the General Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations of 13 February 1946.¹ Article VI, Section 22 of the General Convention is to ensure that ‘experts ... performing missions for the United Nations shall be accorded such privileges and immunities as are necessary for the independent exercise of their functions during the period of their missions, including the time spent on journeys in connection with their missions’. The existing provision, which conforms with the majority of comparable human rights instruments,² aims at ensuring that in carrying out their functions, the members of the Subcommittee are given, for example, immunity from personal arrest or detention, immunity from legal process related to the performance of their missions, and inviolability for all their papers and documents, as well as immunities and facilities regarding their personal baggage.

3 No special reference is made to international standards regarding NPMs. However, according to Article 35 OP, its members shall be granted privileges and immunities that are necessary for the independent exercise of their functions. Consequently, similar facilities to the ones mentioned above shall be granted to the members of the national visiting bodies under the respective domestic laws in order to be able to carry out their mandates effectively.

of the United Nations of 13 February 1946, subject to the provisions of section 23 of that Convention.

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

7 Although it was not disputed in the Working Group that a provision on privileges and immunities for members of the Subcommittee should in principle be inserted in the Protocol, a delegate stated that he held a different view on privileges and immunities of experts, interpreters, and other members of a delegation visiting a country. Another speaker observed that such privileges and immunities should only be granted during the course of a mission.⁶

8 The issue was discussed again in 1995, when the representative of Japan asked for clarification as to to whom the privileges and immunities should be extended. Furthermore, she proposed to add 'during the period of their mission' to the draft provision. The Chinese representative reiterated that he had reservations regarding privileges and immunities for those others than members of the Subcommittee. The delegate of Sweden, supported by the United States, proposed to seek a legal opinion of the UN Legal Counsel whether a reference to existing provisions under the United Nations regarding privileges and immunities of 'experts on mission' was sufficient, rather than finding new wording. In this regard, Sweden considered it important to retain the reference to the UN Convention on Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations of 13 February 1946. The matter was postponed for further consideration at the second reading.⁷

9 During the sixth session and following further discussions, the United States provided the participants of the Working Group with a new proposal, accompanied by relevant existing regulations on privileges and immunities as well as an explanation of their scope, when they apply, and to whom they apply. Again, China declared that experts on mission should not enjoy the same privileges and immunities as members of the Subcommittee. The Chinese representative proposed that members of missions should be divided into three categories with varying degrees of privileges and immunities. Members of the Subcommittee should be granted the same privileges and immunities as delegations of UN Member States; experts should enjoy only such privileges and immunities necessary for their concrete needs; and interpreters, who might be nationals of the country visited, should have only limited privileges and immunities. Also, she was in favour of adding a waiver of privileges and immunities in the text of the provision. Other speakers explicitly opposed the idea of making a division between members of a delegation. A second proposal of the United States, which was based on Section 22 of the 1946 Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations and Article 6 of the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel, was supported by a number of States. The representative of Cuba wished to insert a reference to Section 23 of the 1946 Convention on Privileges and Immunities, which states that such privileges and immunities are not granted for the personal benefit of the individuals but in the interests of the United Nations, and which gives the Secretary-General the right to waive the immunity of an expert. After the drafting group had taken into consideration the comments, the provision was adopted by the Working Group. The representative of

China explicitly made a reservation on this issue, declaring that she regretted that her proposal to make a distinction between members of the Subcommittee and others had not been taken up in the adopted text.⁸

10 Alternative drafts of the Protocol provided by *Mexico*⁹ and the *European Union*¹⁰ in later sessions contained identical provisions on the question of privileges and immunities and were not discussed separately. Also, the proposal of the *United States*¹¹ to grant the members of the Subcommittee the same privileges and immunities as held by the members of the Committee under Article 23 CAT, did not give rise to further negotiations.

3. Issues of Interpretation

11 Article 35 OP is based on comparable provisions in Article 23 CAT and other UN human rights treaties,¹² but is more explicit in referring to sections 22 and 23 of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations of 13 February 1946. These two sections are part of Article VI of the Convention, which relates exclusively to experts on missions for the United Nations.

12 In the Working Group, several delegates proposed that such privileges and immunities should only be granted to members of the Subcommittee during the period of their country missions.¹³ This proposal was not adopted. Rather, Section 22 of the Convention specifies that experts shall be accorded such privileges and immunities as are necessary for the independent exercise of their functions ‘during the period of their missions’. This formulation applies to experts who are appointed for a particular fact-finding mission or other mission. The word ‘mission’ therefore does not refer to the country missions conducted by the Subcommittee, but must rather be interpreted as applying to the entire period for which an expert serves as member of the Subcommittee. However, most of the privileges and immunities spelled out in Section 22, such as immunity from personal arrest and from seizure of personal baggage, are primarily relevant when members of the Subcommittee are on a country mission.

13 According to Article 13(3) OP, the members of the Subcommittee may be accompanied during their country missions by other experts, such as forensic experts; they shall be selected from a roster of experts established at the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights.¹⁴ During the drafting of Article 35 OP, China and other States stressed that the privileges and immunities shall only be accorded to members of the Subcommittee.¹⁵ The final text of Article 35 OP thus does not include any reference to the experts mentioned in Article 13(3) OP. Nevertheless, all experts selected from the roster of experts at the Office of the High Commissioner must receive a contract from the United Nations and will, therefore, be considered for this particular country mission as ‘experts on missions’ of the United Nations entitled to the same privileges and immunities as members of the Subcommittee by virtue of directly applying Sections 22 and 23 of the Convention. Whether or not interpreters and other members of the delegation enjoy similar privileges and immunities depends on their respective contracts with the United Nations.

14 On the initiative of the representative of Cuba, a special reference was made in Article 35 OP to Section 23 of the Convention. This provision stipulates that the privileges and immunities granted to experts on mission are only functional immunities, which are not granted 'for the personal benefit of the individuals themselves'. Consequently, the Secretary-General shall have the right and the duty to waive the immunity of any member of the Subcommittee in a case where immunity would impede the course of justice and can be waived without prejudice to the interests of the United Nations. For example, if a member of the Subcommittee is charged for a crime committed during a country mission which is not directly related to his or her mandate, the Secretary-General may decide to waive the respective immunity contained in Section 22(b) of the Convention. If, however, a member is charged because of criticizing the Government of the country visited in relation to the conditions of detention observed, his or her immunity shall not be waived. Difficult questions of interpretation arise in relation to a member of the Subcommittee participating in court proceedings as a witness, amicus curiae, or in any other function because of his or her UN function. The Secretary-General in such a case may also have to consider waiving immunities in relation to the right and duty of confidentiality, such as the inviolability of all documents or the right to use codes, etc.

15 Article 35 OP also contains a reference to privileges and immunities of members of the NPMs 'as are necessary for the independent exercise of their functions'. The extent of the privileges and immunities afforded to SPT member should serve as a model in these regards.¹⁶ In any case, they should enable the NPM to independently and effectively carry out preventive and unannounced visits to all places of detention, and to conduct private interviews with detainees. The SPT elaborated that routine body searches and pat-downs contravene the spirit of the OPCAT,¹⁷ and that application of or exemption from searches shall be carried out in the same manner as for other authorities with similar or equal privileges and immunities to those granted to NPM members and ought to include freedom from such searches.¹⁸ Protection should include immunity from personal arrest, detention, and seizure of personal baggage; immunity from seizure or surveillance of papers and documents; immunity from legal actions in respect to words, spoken or written, or acts performed in the course of their NPM duties; and no interference with communications relating to the exercise of NPM functions.¹⁹

16 While Article 35 OP speaks of 'members' of the NPM, a systematic interpretation in accordance with the ordinary meaning of the terms in the context and in the light of the object and purpose of the OP²⁰ expands the protective scope of this provision to NPM personnel as understood by Article 18(1) OP.²¹ While the protection of NPM members is indisputably important, the NPM can only independently and effectively carry out its work of preventive and unannounced visits, private interviews with detainees, and issuance of recommendations if all personnel involved in this substantive work enjoy the privileges and immunities provided by Article 35 OP.

17 In this sense, the SPT states in its Guidelines that '[t]he State should ensure that both the members of the NPM and its staff enjoy such privileges and immunities as are necessary for the independent exercise of their functions.'²² In its advice on body searches and pat-downs, it noted that, while it is accepted that essential basic security measures are to be complied with for the benefit of all concerned, it is equally important that 'those working' for the NPM are not in any way restricted in their work and that they do not feel that they might be subject to any form of pressure.²³ Hence, '[m]embers of the mechanism and its staff' should enjoy the protection of Article 35 OP.²⁴

18 External experts are also part of NPM personnel and thereby must meet the same requirements of independence according to Article 18(1) OP and be afforded the same privileges and guarantees against reprisals as NPM members.²⁵ In this context, the SPT states that the NPM's legal framework should 'outline privileges and immunities of NPM members and those who contribute to the NPM, including experts and civil society'.²⁶

19 Changes to laws or regulations could be necessary in addition to the NPM law providing for privileges and immunities. For example, NPM personnel are to be excluded from the rule that communications with pre-trial detainees should be monitored by prison personnel.

Obligations of Members of the Subcommittee during Country Missions

When visiting a State Party, the members of the Subcommittee on Prevention shall, without prejudice to the provisions and purposes of the present Protocol and such privileges and immunities as they may enjoy:

- (a) Respect the laws and regulations of the visited State;
- (b) Refrain from any action or activity incompatible with the impartial and international nature of their duties.

1. Introduction

1 Article 2 OP specifies that the SPT shall be guided by the purposes and principles of the UN and observe the principles of confidentiality, impartiality, non-selectivity, universality, and objectivity.¹ Nevertheless, when discussing the duties of States parties in relation to the SPT's country missions and visits of places of detention under Articles 12 and 14 OP, several delegations insisted that during such missions the members of the SPT should also be bound by the relevant domestic laws and regulations.² After lengthy and highly controversial discussions,³ the Working Group agreed to insert a special provision directly related to the privileges and immunities of SPT members under Article 35 OP.⁴

In the conduct of missions, all members shall without prejudice to the provisions and purposes of the present Protocol and such privileges and immunities as they may enjoy:

- (b) Refrain from any action or activity incompatible with the impartial and international nature of their duties.

2.2 Analysis of Working Group Discussions

3 The question of a reference to national law in the Protocol proved to be much contested. The discussion on this issue mainly took place in the context of Article 14 OP dealing with the obligations of States parties vis-à-vis the SPT. In the third session of the Working Group, some speakers brought forward the argument that members of the SPT should be obliged to respect national laws while visiting a country. Others considered a reference to national laws counterproductive and raised concerns that these laws could be invoked by States as a means of restricting the delegation's access to places of detention. Furthermore, the insertion of a reference to 'professional ethics' was proposed. One delegation suggested limiting the reference to national rules relating to privacy, data protection, and principles of medical ethics.⁶

4 At its sixth session in 1997, a considerable number of States participating in the Working Group expressed concern about a reference to national law in the context of the SPT's rights. They argued that the primary aim of the Protocol was to maintain international standards, which lay outside the domestic sphere. On the other hand, some delegations, such as China, Cuba, and Egypt, insisted that the respect of national laws was a necessary counterweight to the obligations put on the States parties, such as the granting of unrestricted access to all places of detention. The representative of the ICRC explained that although national laws were respected during visits of the ICRC, the States would remove certain restrictions in order to allow an effective fulfilment of the mandate.⁷ At the same session, the representative of Uruguay noted that she preferred no reference to national law in the Protocol. However, if it was deemed necessary to include such a reference, she would prefer not to link it to the provision on the obligations of States towards the SPT but rather to the provision on privileges and immunities.⁸ The Chairperson of the drafting group reported later that the drafting group had agreed on inserting an article on national law after the provision on privileges and immunities, which was based on Article 6 of the Convention on the Safety of UN and Associated Personnel of 9 December 1994. She explained that many delegations had made a link between the introduction of this provision and the provision on the specific liberties that were to be granted to the SPT. Thus, their approval was dependent on a positive satisfactory outcome of the latter provision.⁹

5 In the following session, the issue of a reference to national laws beyond what was already contained in draft Article 22 was brought up on several occasions. In particular, in the seventh session of the Working Group a major part of the negotiations was dedicated to the issue of domestic law. It was common understanding that all visits of the SPT should be conducted in the framework of the national legislation of the host country. However, this legislation should be consistent with international law, the UN Charter and other international obligations of this State. Some delegates emphasized that national laws should not be used to obstruct the fulfilment of a mission and that a balance between the rights and duties of the host State and those of the SPT should be established. Nevertheless, some participants felt that national legislation was essential to complement and implement the provisions of the Protocol and that a clear reference to national laws had to be made. Otherwise, they argued, the SPT might be seen as a 'supranational' body that enjoyed 'compétence de sa compétence', or even had the right to interpret national laws unilaterally. Furthermore, national legislation could never contradict the provisions of the Protocol because it had to be consistent with its provisions as part of each State party's international obligations. Another argument for the insertion of such a reference was that this was necessary to safeguard the SPT's integrity, as the non-observance of domestic regulations might put its members at risk.¹⁰

6 At the same session, the Chairperson of the drafting group presented two paragraphs dealing with the issue of national legislation, which in her view could be best placed into the Article with the liberties and rights of the SPT in the context of a mission. While some representatives felt that the proposal could form a basis for further discussions, others insisted that such a reference was not necessary. In the following discussion, the delegations of Cuba, China, Germany, and Egypt brought forward other proposals on this question. The delegations of Algeria, China, Cuba, Egypt, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, and the Syrian Arab Republic commonly observed that for the aforementioned reasons a reference to domestic law in the context of visits of the SPT was fundamental. Also in this regard, the representative of the United States made a detailed statement at the end of the seventh session, explaining that the Fourth Amendment of the US Constitution guaranteed its citizens that public officials could not have access to private homes without a court decision or else under very narrow circumstances. These national provisions were also applicable to the SPT, which, if it had 'excessive powers', could conduct visits virtually everywhere if it were of the opinion that a person might be detained with State acquiescence.

7 Also in the eighth session of the Working Group, no consensus could be found. While some States noted that they could only accept the provision on the rights of the SPT if a paragraph or even separate Article on domestic legislation was inserted, others refused to accept such a reference as this would undermine the objectives of the Protocol.¹¹ Eventually, the text proposed by the Chairperson-Rapporteur in the last meeting of the Working Group only referred to national laws in Article 36, which had already been agreed upon during the sixth session.

3. Issues of Interpretation

8 The obligations under Article 36 are directly related to the privileges and immunities accorded to members of the SPT. While such privileges and immunities apply to the entire period of serving as UN experts on the SPT, ie also in their home countries and third countries, the duties under Article 36 only apply to country missions in accordance with Articles 11 to 16 OP. In fact, the issue of SPT members having to respect domestic laws and regulations came up during the discussions on Article 12 OP.¹²

9 That members of the SPT, as stipulated in Article 36(b) OP, shall refrain from any action or activity incompatible with the impartial and international nature of their duties is self-evident and follows from their duty under Article 2 to be guided by the UN Charter and the principles of impartiality and objectivity.¹³

10 More controversial, however, is their obligation under Article 36(a) OP to ‘[r]espect the laws and regulations of the visited State’. Again, it is self-evident that the SPT shall not commit crimes in contravention of domestic criminal law and shall respect particular religious or traditional rules and customs of the country concerned. Their privileges and immunities are only of a functional nature and are not granted for the ‘personal benefits’ of the SPT members.¹⁴

11 A strict interpretation of Article 36(a) OP might, however, also lead to the result that the members of the SPT, during a country mission, must respect all provisions of prison rules, codes of criminal procedure, and similar laws to the same extent as the public in general. For example, all countries in the world have enacted specific legal provisions restricting access to places of detention by providing visiting hours for family members and other persons permitted to visit detainees, and even legal counsel may be prevented from conducting private interviews with their clients while in pre-trial detention. In military facilities, the taking of photographs is usually restricted or prohibited for the purpose of protecting military secrets, but at the same time it is part of the professional conduct of forensic examination of detainees that the forensic expert takes photos of the signs alleged to have been inflicted by torture. The same holds true for electronic equipment and other tools which the members of the delegation need to bring into a detention facility in order to carry out their work in a professional manner.

12 A reasonable interpretation of all relevant provisions of the Protocol, including the respective obligations of States parties to grant the SPT unrestricted access to all places of detention, their installations and facilities, as well as all relevant documents, to grant the delegation the factual opportunity to have private interviews with detainees, and to respect all privileges and immunities as UN experts on mission, as well as the obligations of the SPT members to comply with the principles of confidentiality, impartiality, objectivity, and professional conduct respectful of the general laws, traditions, and rules of the country to be visited, must strike a fair balance between legitimate interests of the States parties as well as the legitimate interests of the SPT to carry out its mandate of visiting places of detention in a professional manner in accordance with its mandate as laid down in the Protocol.¹⁵ Guided by the overall principle of cooperation between States parties and the SPT under Article 2(4) OP,¹⁶ States parties shall refrain from all actions aimed at obstructing the professional work of the SPT and, in particular, must not misuse prison laws and regulations as a pretext for unduly restricting the freedom of the SPT to visit all places of detention and to communicate freely with all persons it wants to interview. At the same time, the SPT members must not misuse their specific rights, privileges, and immunities under this Protocol for their personal benefit and shall act respectfully towards all persons they interact with, above all detainees, witnesses, and staff of places of detention. Most importantly, they shall always respect the privacy of all interview partners, their right to confidentiality and data protection, as well as their right, on the basis of the principle of informed consent, to refuse to speak with the delegation or to provide certain information to the delegation.

13 The rights, privileges, and immunities of the members of the SPT are similar to other bodies visiting places of detention and conducting private interviews with detainees, above all the CPT and the Special Rapporteur on Torture (SRT).¹⁷ During the preparations for his visit to the Russian Federation in autumn 2006, the SRT was informed by the Government of Russia that certain elements of his terms of reference for carrying out visits to detention facilities would contravene Russian Federation law, particularly with respect to carrying out unannounced visits, and holding private interviews with detainees. Since these issues could not be resolved prior to the visit, he had to announce that he was not in a position to proceed as planned and the visit had to be postponed.¹⁸ Generally, the rights to carry out unannounced visits and to conduct private interviews with detainees are fundamental to any international and national body concerned with the investigation or prevention of torture and ill-treatment, and States should refrain from obstructing the work of such mechanisms by invoking national legislation in this regard. Missions carried out by any of the relevant mechanisms under such restrictions, such as restricted access to detainees, would serve to undermine the credibility and objectivity of their findings as well as their impartiality and independence.¹⁹

5 Article 37 OP is in conformity with the common procedure for UN Conventions, stating that ‘the Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts are equally authentic’.³ The six mentioned languages therefore equally control the interpretation of the Protocol’s text. Should a difference in meaning be discovered by a text comparison, the true meaning of the OP is to be ascertained by applying the rules of interpretation laid down in the VCLT.⁴

As elaborated above,⁵ the different language versions of Article 24 have raised some issues in terms of coherence and interpretation of the OPCAT, which were officially clarified by amendments to the original texts.

6 In conformity with Article 102(1) of the UN Charter and Article 80 VCLT, Article 37 OP, which is identical to Article 33 CAT, in fact designates the UN Secretary-General as depository of the OP.⁶

Texts relating to the Convention Against Torture

APPENDIX A.1

Convention Against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment

Adopted and opened for signature, ratification and accession by General Assembly Resolution
39/46 of 10 December 1984

Entered into force on 26 June 1987, in accordance with Article 27 (1)

PREAMBLE

The States Parties to this Convention,

Considering that, in accordance with the principles proclaimed in the Charter of the United Nations, recognition of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world,

Recognizing that those rights derive from the inherent dignity of the human person,

Considering the obligation of States under the Charter, in particular Article 55, to promote universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Having regard to article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and article 7 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, both of which provide that no one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Having regard also to the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, adopted by the General Assembly on 9 December 1975,

Desiring to make more effective the struggle against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment throughout the world,

Have agreed as follows:

PART I

ARTICLE 1

1. For the purposes of this Convention, the term 'torture' means any act by which severe pain or suffering, whether physical or mental, is intentionally inflicted on a person for such purposes as obtaining from him or a third person information or a confession, punishing him for an act he or a third person has committed or is suspected of having committed, or intimidating or coercing him or a third person, or for any reason based on discrimination of any kind, when such pain or suffering is inflicted by or at the instigation of or with the consent or acquiescence of a public official or other person acting in an official capacity. It does not include pain or suffering arising only from, inherent in or incidental to lawful sanctions.

2. This article is without prejudice to any international instrument or national legislation which does or may contain provisions of wider application.

ARTICLE 2

1. Each State Party shall take effective legislative, administrative, judicial or other measures to prevent acts of torture in any territory under its jurisdiction.
2. No exceptional circumstances whatsoever, whether a state of war or a threat of war, internal political in stability or any other public emergency, may be invoked as a justification of torture.
3. An order from a superior officer or a public authority may not be invoked as a justification of torture.

ARTICLE 3

1. No State Party shall expel, return ('refouler') or extradite a person to another State where there are substantial grounds for believing that he would be in danger of being subjected to torture.
2. For the purpose of determining whether there are such grounds, the competent authorities shall take into account all relevant considerations including, where applicable, the existence in the State concerned of a consistent pattern of gross, flagrant or mass violations of human rights.

ARTICLE 4

1. Each State Party shall ensure that all acts of torture are offences under its criminal law. The same shall apply to an attempt to commit torture and to an act by any person which constitutes complicity or participation in torture.
2. Each State Party shall make these offences punishable by appropriate penalties which take into account their grave nature.

ARTICLE 5

1. Each State Party shall take such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over the offences referred to in article 4 in the following cases:
 - (a) When the offences are committed in any territory under its jurisdiction or on board a ship or aircraft registered in that State;
 - (b) When the alleged offender is a national of that State;
 - (c) When the victim is a national of that State if that State considers it appropriate.
2. Each State Party shall likewise take such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over such offences in cases where the alleged offender is present in any territory under its jurisdiction and it does not extradite him pursuant to article 8 to any of the States mentioned in paragraph 1 of this article.
3. This Convention does not exclude any criminal jurisdiction exercised in accordance with internal law.

ARTICLE 6

1. Upon being satisfied, after an examination of information available to it, that the circumstances so warrant, any State Party in whose territory a person alleged to have committed any offence referred to in article 4 is present shall take him into custody or take other legal measures to ensure his presence. The custody and other legal measures shall be as provided in the law of that State but may be continued only for such time as is necessary to enable any criminal or extradition proceedings to be instituted.
2. Such State shall immediately make a preliminary inquiry into the facts.

3. Any person in custody pursuant to paragraph I of this article shall be assisted in communicating immediately with the nearest appropriate representative of the State of which he is a national, or, if he is a stateless person, with the representative of the State where he usually resides.
4. When a State, pursuant to this article, has taken a person into custody, it shall immediately notify the States referred to in article 5, paragraph 1, of the fact that such person is in custody and of the circumstances which warrant his detention. The State which makes the preliminary inquiry contemplated in paragraph 2 of this article shall promptly report its findings to the said States and shall indicate whether it intends to exercise jurisdiction.

1. The State Party in the territory under whose jurisdiction a person alleged to have committed any offence referred to in article 4 is found shall in the cases contemplated in article 5, if it does not extradite him, submit the case to its competent authorities for the purpose of prosecution.
2. These authorities shall take their decision in the same manner as in the case of any ordinary offence of a serious nature under the law of that State. In the cases referred to in article 5, paragraph 2, the standards of evidence required for prosecution and conviction shall in no way be less stringent than those which apply in the cases referred to in article 5, paragraph 1.
3. Any person regarding whom proceedings are brought in connection with any of the offences referred to in article 4 shall be guaranteed fair treatment at all stages of the proceedings.

ARTICLE 8

1. The offences referred to in article 4 shall be deemed to be included as extraditable offences in any extradition treaty existing between States Parties. States Parties undertake to include such offences as extraditable offences in every extradition treaty to be concluded between them.
2. If a State Party which makes extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty receives a request for extradition from another State Party with which it has no extradition treaty, it may consider this Convention as the legal basis for extradition in respect of such offences. Extradition shall be subject to the other conditions provided by the law of the requested State.
3. States Parties which do not make extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty shall recognize such offences as extraditable offences between themselves subject to the conditions provided by the law of the requested State.
4. Such offences shall be treated, for the purpose of extradition between States Parties, as if they had been committed not only in the place in which they occurred but also in the territories of the States required to establish their jurisdiction in accordance with article 5, paragraph 1.

ARTICLE 9

1. States Parties shall afford one another the greatest measure of assistance in connection with criminal proceedings brought in respect of any of the offences referred to in article 4, including the supply of all evidence at their disposal necessary for the proceedings.
2. States Parties shall carry out their obligations under paragraph I of this article in conformity with any treaties on mutual judicial assistance that may exist between them.

ARTICLE 10

1. Each State Party shall ensure that education and information regarding the prohibition against torture are fully included in the training of law enforcement personnel, civil or military, medical personnel, public officials and other persons who may be involved in the custody, interrogation or treatment of any individual subjected to any form of arrest, detention or imprisonment.
2. Each State Party shall include this prohibition in the rules or instructions issued in regard to the duties and functions of any such person.

ARTICLE 11

Each State Party shall keep under systematic review interrogation rules, instructions, methods and practices as well as arrangements for the custody and treatment of persons subjected to any form of arrest, detention or imprisonment in any territory under its jurisdiction, with a view to preventing any cases of torture.

ARTICLE 12

Each State Party shall ensure that its competent authorities proceed to a prompt and impartial investigation, wherever there is reasonable ground to believe that an act of torture has been committed in any territory under its jurisdiction.

ARTICLE 13

Each State Party shall ensure that any individual who alleges he has been subjected to torture in any territory under its jurisdiction has the right to complain to, and to have his case promptly and impartially examined by, its competent authorities. Steps shall be taken to ensure that the complainant and witnesses are protected against all ill-treatment or intimidation as a consequence of his complaint or any evidence given.

ARTICLE 14

1. Each State Party shall ensure in its legal system that the victim of an act of torture obtains redress and has an enforceable right to fair and adequate compensation, including the means for as full rehabilitation as possible. In the event of the death of the victim as a result of an act of torture, his dependants shall be entitled to compensation.
2. Nothing in this article shall affect any right of the victim or other persons to compensation which may exist under national law.

ARTICLE 15

Each State Party shall ensure that any statement which is established to have been made as a result of torture shall not be invoked as evidence in any proceedings, except against a person accused of torture as evidence that the statement was made.

ARTICLE 16

1. Each State Party shall undertake to prevent in any territory under its jurisdiction other acts of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment which do not amount to torture as defined in article I, when such acts are committed by or at the instigation of or with the consent or acquiescence of a public official or other person acting in an official capacity. In particular, the obligations contained in articles 10, 11, 12 and 13 shall apply with the substitution for references to torture of references to other forms of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.
2. The provisions of this Convention are without prejudice to the provisions of any other international instrument or national law which prohibits cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment or which relates to extradition or expulsion.

PART II

1. There shall be established a Committee against Torture (hereinafter referred to as the Committee) which shall carry out the functions hereinafter provided. The Committee shall consist of ten experts of high moral standing and recognized competence in the field of human rights, who shall serve in their personal capacity. The experts shall be elected by the States Parties, consideration being given to equitable geographical distribution and to the usefulness of the participation of some persons having legal experience.

2. The members of the Committee shall be elected by secret ballot from a list of persons nominated by States Parties. Each State Party may nominate one person from among its own nationals. States Parties shall bear in mind the usefulness of nominating persons who are also members of the Human Rights Committee established under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and who are willing to serve on the Committee against Torture.
3. Elections of the members of the Committee shall be held at biennial meetings of States Parties convened by the Secretary-General of the United Nations. At those meetings, for which two thirds of the States Parties shall constitute a quorum, the persons elected to the Committee shall be those who obtain the largest number of votes and an absolute majority of the votes of the representatives of States Parties present and voting.
4. The initial election shall be held no later than six months after the date of the entry into force of this Convention. At least four months before the date of each election, the Secretary-General of the United Nations shall address a letter to the States Parties inviting them to submit their nominations within three months. The Secretary-General shall prepare a list in alphabetical order of all persons thus nominated, indicating the States Parties which have nominated them, and shall submit it to the States Parties.
5. The members of the Committee shall be elected for a term of four years. They shall be eligible for re-election if renominated. However, the term of five of the members elected at the first election shall expire at the end of two years; immediately after the first election the names of these five members shall be chosen by lot by the chairman of the meeting referred to in paragraph 3 of this article.
6. If a member of the Committee dies or resigns or for any other cause can no longer perform his Committee duties, the State Party which nominated him shall appoint another expert from among its nationals to serve for the remainder of his term, subject to the approval of the majority of the States Parties. The approval shall be considered given unless half or more of the States Parties respond negatively within six weeks after having been informed by the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the proposed appointment.
7. States Parties shall be responsible for the expenses of the members of the Committee while they are in performance of Committee duties. (amendment (see General Assembly resolution 47/111 of 16 December 1992); status of ratification)

ARTICLE 18

1. The Committee shall elect its officers for a term of two years. They may be re-elected.
2. The Committee shall establish its own rules of procedure, but these rules shall provide, inter alia, that:
 - (a) Six members shall constitute a quorum;
 - (b) Decisions of the Committee shall be made by a majority vote of the members present.
3. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall provide the necessary staff and facilities for the effective performance of the functions of the Committee under this Convention.
4. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall convene the initial meeting of the Committee. After its initial meeting, the Committee shall meet at such times as shall be provided in its rules of procedure.
5. The States Parties shall be responsible for expenses incurred in connection with the holding of meetings of the States Parties and of the Committee, including reimbursement to the United Nations for any expenses, such as the cost of staff and facilities, incurred by the United Nations pursuant to paragraph 3 of this article. (amendment (see General Assembly Resolution 47/111 of 16 December 1992); status of ratification)

ARTICLE 19

1. The States Parties shall submit to the Committee, through the Secretary-General of the United Nations, reports on the measures they have taken to give effect to their undertakings under this Convention, within one year after the entry into force of the Convention for the State Party concerned. Thereafter the States Parties shall submit supplementary reports every four years on any new measures taken and such other reports as the Committee may request.
2. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall transmit the reports to all States Parties.
3. Each report shall be considered by the Committee which may make such general comments on the report as it may consider appropriate and shall forward these to the State Party concerned. That State Party may respond with any observations it chooses to the Committee.
4. The Committee may, at its discretion, decide to include any comments made by it in accordance with paragraph 3 of this article, together with the observations thereon received from the State Party concerned, in its annual report made in accordance with article 24. If so requested by the State Party concerned, the Committee may also include a copy of the report submitted under paragraph 1 of this article

1. If the Committee receives reliable information which appears to it to contain well-founded indications that torture is being systematically practised in the territory of a State Party, the Committee shall invite that State Party to co-operate in the examination of the information and to this end to submit observations with regard to the information concerned.
2. Taking into account any observations which may have been submitted by the State Party concerned, as well as any other relevant information available to it, the Committee may, if it decides that this is warranted, designate one or more of its members to make a confidential inquiry and to report to the Committee urgently.
3. If an inquiry is made in accordance with paragraph 2 of this article, the Committee shall seek the co-operation of the State Party concerned. In agreement with that State Party, such an inquiry may include a visit to its territory.
4. After examining the findings of its member or members submitted in accordance with paragraph 2 of this article, the Commission shall transmit these findings to the State Party concerned together with any comments or suggestions which seem appropriate in view of the situation.
5. All the proceedings of the Committee referred to in paragraphs 1 to 4 of this article shall be confidential, and at all stages of the proceedings the co-operation of the State Party shall be sought. After such proceedings have been completed with regard to an inquiry made in accordance with paragraph 2, the Committee may, after consultations with the State Party concerned, decide to include a summary account of the results of the proceedings in its annual report made in accordance with article 24.

1. A State Party to this Convention may at any time declare under this article that it recognizes the competence of the Committee to receive and consider communications to the effect that a State Party claims that another State Party is not fulfilling its obligations under this Convention. Such communications may be received and considered according to the procedures laid down in this article only if submitted by a State Party which has made a declaration recognizing in regard to itself the competence of the Committee. No communication shall be dealt with by the Committee under this article if it concerns a State Party which has not made such a declaration. Communications received under this article shall be dealt with in accordance with the following procedure;

- (a) If a State Party considers that another State Party is not giving effect to the provisions of this Convention, it may, by written communication, bring the matter to the attention of that State Party. Within three months after the receipt of the communication the receiving State shall afford the State which sent the communication an explanation or any other statement in writing clarifying the matter, which should include, to the extent possible and pertinent, reference to domestic procedures and remedies taken, pending or available in the matter;
- (b) If the matter is not adjusted to the satisfaction of both States Parties concerned within six months after the receipt by the receiving State of the initial communication, either State shall have the right to refer the matter to the Committee, by notice given to the Committee and to the other State;
- (c) The Committee shall deal with a matter referred to it under this article only after it has ascertained that all domestic remedies have been invoked and exhausted in the matter, in conformity with the generally recognized principles of international law. This shall not be the rule where the application of the remedies is unreasonably prolonged or is unlikely to bring effective relief to the person who is the victim of the violation of this Convention;
- (d) The Committee shall hold closed meetings when examining communications under this article;
- (e) Subject to the provisions of subparagraph (c), the Committee shall make available its good offices to the States Parties concerned with a view to a friendly solution of the matter on the basis of respect for the obligations provided for in this Convention. For this purpose, the Committee may, when appropriate, set up an ad hoc conciliation commission;
- (f) In any matter referred to it under this article, the Committee may call upon the States Parties concerned, referred to in subparagraph (b), to supply any relevant information;
- (g) The States Parties concerned, referred to in subparagraph (b), shall have the right to be represented when the matter is being considered by the Committee and to make submissions orally and/or in writing;
- (h) The Committee shall, within twelve months after the date of receipt of notice under subparagraph (b), submit a report:
 - (i) If a solution within the terms of subparagraph (e) is reached, the Committee shall confine its report to a brief statement of the facts and of the solution reached;
 - (ii) If a solution within the terms of subparagraph (e) is not reached, the Committee shall confine its report to a brief statement of the facts; the written submissions and record of the oral submissions made by the States Parties concerned shall be attached to the report.

In every matter, the report shall be communicated to the States Parties concerned.

2. The provisions of this article shall come into force when five States Parties to this Convention have made declarations under paragraph 1 of this article. Such declarations shall be deposited by the States Parties with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall transmit copies thereof to the other States Parties. A declaration may be withdrawn at any time by notification to the Secretary-General. Such a withdrawal shall not prejudice the consideration of any matter which is the subject of a communication already transmitted under this article; no further communication by any State Party shall be received under this article after the notification of withdrawal of the declaration has been received by the Secretary-General, unless the State Party concerned has made a new declaration.

ARTICLE 22

1. A State Party to this Convention may at any time declare under this article that it recognizes the competence of the Committee to receive and consider communications from or on behalf of individuals subject to its jurisdiction who claim to be victims of a violation by a State Party

- of the provisions of the Convention. No communication shall be received by the Committee if it concerns a State Party which has not made such a declaration.
2. The Committee shall consider inadmissible any communication under this article which is anonymous or which it considers to be an abuse of the right of submission of such communications or to be incompatible with the provisions of this Convention.
 3. Subject to the provisions of paragraph 2, the Committee shall bring any communications submitted to it under this article to the attention of the State Party to this Convention which has made a declaration under paragraph I and is alleged to be violating any provisions of the Convention. Within six months, the receiving State shall submit to the Committee written explanations or statements clarifying the matter and the remedy, if any, that may have been taken by that State.
 4. The Committee shall consider communications received under this article in the light of all information made available to it by or on behalf of the individual and by the State Party concerned.
 5. The Committee shall not consider any communications from an individual under this article unless it has ascertained that:
 - (a) The same matter has not been, and is not being, examined under another procedure of international investigation or settlement;
 - (b) The individual has exhausted all available domestic remedies; this shall not be the rule where the application of the remedies is unreasonably prolonged or is unlikely to bring effective relief to the person who is the victim of the violation of this Convention.
 6. The Committee shall hold closed meetings when examining communications under this article.
 7. The Committee shall forward its views to the State Party concerned and to the individual.
 8. The provisions of this article shall come into force when five States Parties to this Convention have made declarations under paragraph 1 of this article. Such declarations shall be deposited by the States Parties with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall transmit copies thereof to the other States Parties. A declaration may be withdrawn at any time by notification to the Secretary-General. Such a withdrawal shall not prejudice the consideration of any matter which is the subject of a communication already transmitted under this article; no further communication by or on behalf of an individual shall be received under this article after the notification of withdrawal of the declaration has been received by the Secretary General, unless the State Party has made a new declaration.

ARTICLE 23

The members of the Committee and of the ad hoc conciliation commissions which may be appointed under article 21, paragraph I (e), shall be entitled to the facilities, privileges and immunities of experts on mission for the United Nations as laid down in the relevant sections of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations.

ARTICLE 24

The Committee shall submit an annual report on its activities under this Convention to the States Parties and to the General Assembly of the United Nations.

PART III

ARTICLE 25

1. This Convention is open for signature by all States.

2. This Convention is subject to ratification. Instruments of ratification shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

ARTICLE 26

This Convention is open to accession by all States. Accession shall be effected by the deposit of an instrument of accession with the Secretary General of the United Nations.

ARTICLE 27

1. This Convention shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after the date of the deposit with the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the twentieth instrument of ratification or accession.
2. For each State ratifying this Convention or acceding to it after the deposit of the twentieth instrument of ratification or accession, the Convention shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after the date of the deposit of its own instrument of ratification or accession.

ARTICLE 28

1. Each State may, at the time of signature or ratification of this Convention or accession thereto, declare that it does not recognize the competence of the Committee provided for in article 20.
2. Any State Party having made a reservation in accordance with paragraph I of this article may, at any time, withdraw this reservation by notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

ARTICLE 29

1. Any State Party to this Convention may propose an amendment and file it with the Secretary-General of the United Nations. The Secretary General shall thereupon communicate the proposed amendment to the States Parties with a request that they notify him whether they favour a conference of States Parties for the purpose of considering and voting upon the proposal. In the event that within four months from the date of such communication at least one third of the States Parties favours such a conference, the Secretary General shall convene the conference under the auspices of the United Nations. Any amendment adopted by a majority of the States Parties present and voting at the conference shall be submitted by the Secretary-General to all the States Parties for acceptance.
2. An amendment adopted in accordance with paragraph I of this article shall enter into force when two thirds of the States Parties to this Convention have notified the Secretary-General of the United Nations that they have accepted it in accordance with their respective constitutional processes.
3. When amendments enter into force, they shall be binding on those States Parties which have accepted them, other States Parties still being bound by the provisions of this Convention and any earlier amendments which they have accepted.

ARTICLE 30

1. Any dispute between two or more States Parties concerning the interpretation or application of this Convention which cannot be settled through negotiation shall, at the request of one of them, be submitted to arbitration. If within six months from the date of the request for arbitration the Parties are unable to agree on the organization of the arbitration, any one of those Parties may refer the dispute to the International Court of Justice by request in conformity with the Statute of the Court.
2. Each State may, at the time of signature or ratification of this Convention or accession thereto, declare that it does not consider itself bound by paragraph I of this article. The other States Parties shall not be bound by paragraph I of this article with respect to any State Party having made such a reservation.

3. Any State Party having made a reservation in accordance with paragraph 2 of this article may at any time withdraw this reservation by notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

ARTICLE 31

1. A State Party may denounce this Convention by written notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations. Denunciation becomes effective one year after the date of receipt of the notification by the Secretary-General.
2. Such a denunciation shall not have the effect of releasing the State Party from its obligations under this Convention in regard to any act or omission which occurs prior to the date at which the denunciation becomes effective, nor shall denunciation prejudice in any way the continued consideration of any matter which is already under consideration by the Committee prior to the date at which the denunciation becomes effective.
3. Following the date at which the denunciation of a State Party becomes effective, the Committee shall not commence consideration of any new matter regarding that State.

ARTICLE 32

The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall inform all States Members of the United Nations and all States which have signed this Convention or acceded to it of the following:

- (a) Signatures, ratifications and accessions under articles 25 and 26;
- (b) The date of entry into force of this Convention under article 27 and the date of the entry into force of any amendments under article 29;
- (c) Denunciations under article 31.

ARTICLE 33

1. This Convention, of which the Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.
2. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall transmit certified copies of this Convention to all States.

APPENDIX A.2
Selected Draft Convention Texts

DECLARATION ON THE PROTECTION OF ALL PERSONS FROM BEING SUBJECTED TO TORTURE AND OTHER
CRUEL, INHUMAN OR DEGRADING TREATMENT OR PUNISHMENT (DECLARATION)

(9 DECEMBER 1975)¹

The General Assembly,

Considering that, in accordance with the principles proclaimed in the Charter of the United Nations, recognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world,

Considering that these rights derive from inherent dignity of the human person,

Considering also the obligation of States under the Charter, in particular Article 55, to promote universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Having regard to Article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and Article 7 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, both of which provide that no one may be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Adopts the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the text of which is annexed to the present resolution, as a guideline for all States and other entities exercising effective power.

ANNEX

ARTICLE 1

1. For the purpose of this Declaration, torture means any act by which severe pain or suffering, whether physical or mental, is intentionally inflicted by or at the instigation of a public official on a person for such purposes as obtaining from him or a third person information or confession, punishing him for an act he has committed or is suspected of having committed, or intimidating him or other persons. It does not include pain or suffering arising only from, inherent in or incidental to, lawful sanctions to the extent consistent with the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners.
2. Torture constitutes an aggravated and deliberate form of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

ARTICLE 2

Any act of torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment is an offence to human dignity and shall be condemned as a denial of the purposes of the Charter of the United Nations and as a violation of the human rights and fundamental freedoms proclaimed in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

No state may permit or tolerate torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. Exceptional circumstances such as state of war or a threat of war, internal political instability or any other public emergency may not be invoked as a justification of torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

ARTICLE 4

Each state party shall, in accordance with the provisions of this declaration, take effective measures to prevent torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment from being practised within its jurisdiction.

ARTICLE 5

The training of law enforcement personnel and of other public officials who may be responsible for persons deprived of their liberty shall ensure that full account is taken of the prohibition against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. This prohibition shall also, where appropriate, be included in such general rules or instructions as are issued in regard to the duties and functions of anyone who may be involved in the custody or treatment of such persons.

ARTICLE 6

Each State Party shall keep under systematic review interrogation methods and practices as well as arrangements for the custody and treatment of persons deprived of their liberty in its territory, with a view to preventing any cases of torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

ARTICLE 7

Each State Party shall ensure that all acts of torture as defined in Article 1 are offences under its criminal law. The same shall apply in regard to acts which constitute participation in, complicity in, incitement to or an attempt to commit torture.

ARTICLE 8

Any person who alleges that he has been subjected to torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment by or at the instigation of a public official shall have the right to complain to, and to have his case impartially examined by, the competent authorities of the State concerned.

ARTICLE 9

Wherever there is reasonable ground to believe that an act of torture as defined in Article 1 has been committed, the competent authorities of the State concerned shall promptly proceed to an impartial investigation even if there has been no formal complaint.

ARTICLE 10

If an investigation under Article 8 or Article 9 establishes that an act of torture as defined in Article 1 appears to have been committed, criminal proceedings shall be instituted against the alleged offender or offenders in accordance with national law. If an allegation of other forms of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment is considered to be well founded, the alleged offender or offenders shall be subject to criminal, disciplinary or other appropriate proceedings.

ARTICLE 11

Where it is proved that an act of torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment has been committed by or at the instigation of a public official, the victim shall be afforded redress and compensation in accordance with national law.

ARTICLE 12

Any statement which is established to have been made as a result of torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment may not be invoked as evidence against the person concerned or against any other person in any proceedings.

DRAFT CONVENTION FOR THE PREVENTION AND SUPPRESSION OF TORTURE, SUBMITTED BY THE INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF PENAL LAW
(IAPL DRAFT)

(15 JANUARY 1978)²

The Parties to this Convention hereby agree as hereinafter provided:

ARTICLE I

(Torture as an international crime)

Torture is a crime under international law.

ARTICLE II

(Definition of torture)

For the purposes of this Convention, torture is any conduct by which severe pain or suffering, whether physical or mental, is intentionally inflicted on a person by or at the instigation of a public official or for which a public official is responsible under Article III, in order:

- (a) to obtain from that person or another person information or a statement or confession; or
- (b) to intimidate, discredit or humiliate that person or another person; or
- (c) to inflict punishment on that person or another person, save where such conduct is in proper execution of a lawful sanction not constituting cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

ARTICLE III

(Responsibility)

A person is responsible for committing or instigating torture when that person:

- (a) personally engages in or participates in such conduct; or
- (b) assists, incites, solicits, commands or considers with others to commit torture; or

² E/CN.4/NGO/213.

- (c) being a public official, fails to take appropriate measures to prevent or suppress torture when such person has knowledge or reasonable belief that torture has been or is being committed and has the authority or is in a position to take such measures.

ARTICLE IV(National measures for the prevention and suppression of torture)

The Contracting Parties undertake to adopt legislative, judicial, administrative and other measures necessary to give effect to this convention to prevent and suppress torture, and in particular, to ensure that:

- (a) any act of torture is punishable under its laws as a grave crime;
- (b) their public officials do not practice or permit any form of torture;
- (c) all complaints of torture or any circumstances which give reasonable grounds to believe that torture has been committed shall be investigated speedily and effectively and that complainants shall not be exposed to any sanction by reason of their complaints, unless they have been shown to have been made falsely and maliciously.
- (d) persons believed to be responsible for acts of torture are prosecuted and when found guilty, punished and disciplined in accordance with their laws;
- (e) any victim of torture is afforded adequate and proper redress and compensation;
- (f) no person is expelled or extradited to a State where there are reasonable grounds to believe that that person may be in danger of being tortured; and
- (g) the text of this convention is widely disseminated and its contents made known to all persons arrested and detained.

ARTICLE V(Superior orders)

The fact that a person was acting in obedience to superior orders shall not be a defence to a charge of torture.

ARTICLE VI(Non-derogation)

Torture can in no circumstances be justified or excused by a state or threat of war or armed conflict, a state of siege, emergency or other exceptional circumstances, or by any necessity or any urgency of obtaining information, or by any other reason.

ARTICLE VII(Evidentiary effect)

Any oral or written statement or confession obtained by means of torture or any other evidence derived therefrom shall have no legal effect whatever and shall not be invoked in any judicial or administrative proceedings, except against a person accused of obtaining it by torture.

ARTICLE VIII(Period of limitation)

No prosecution or punishment of torture shall be barred by the application of a period of limitation of lesser duration than that applicable to the most serious offence in the laws of the Contracting Parties.

ARTICLE IX

(Jurisdiction)

1. Jurisdiction for the prosecution and punishment of the international crime of torture shall vest in the following order in:
 - (a) the contracting Party in whose territory the act occurred;
 - (b) any contracting Party of which the accused is a national;
 - (c) any Contracting Party of which the victim is a national;
 - (d) any Contracting Party within whose territory the accused may be found.
2. Nothing in this Article shall be construed as affecting the jurisdiction of any competent international criminal court.

ARTICLE X

(Extradition)

1. Where a Contracting Party receives a request for extradition from a Contracting Party having prior or concurrent jurisdiction, it shall grant extradition of persons accused of torture in accordance with its laws and treaties in force and subject to the provisions of this Convention.
2. In the absence of a treaty of extradition with a requesting Contracting Party, the Contracting Parties undertake to extradite on the basis of this Convention.
3. Contracting Parties which do not make extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty shall recognize torture as an extraditable offence.

ARTICLE XI

(Co-operation)

The Contracting Parties shall afford one another the greatest measure of judicial and other co-operation in connexion with criminal proceedings brought in implementation of this Convention.

ARTICLE XII

(Torture not a Political Offence)

For the purposes of this Convention, torture shall not be deemed a political offence.

ARTICLE XIII

(International measure of implementation)

1. The Contracting Parties undertake to submit to the Human Rights Committee established under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights periodic reports on the legislative, judicial, administrative and other measures they have adopted to implement this Convention.
2. The first report of a Contracting Party shall be submitted within one (1) year of the entry into force of the Convention and thereafter a report shall be submitted every two (2) years.
3. The Chairman of the Human Rights Committee shall, after consulting the other members of the Committee, appoint a Special Committee on the Prevention of Torture, consisting of five (5) members of the Human Rights Committee who are also nationals of the Contracting Parties to this Convention to consider reports submitted by Contracting Parties in accordance with this Article.
4. If, among the members of the Human Rights Committee, there are no nationals of Contracting Parties to this Convention or if there are fewer than five such nationals, the Secretary-General of the United Nations shall, after consulting all Contracting Parties to this Convention, designate a national of the Contracting Party of nationals of the Contracting Parties which are not members of the Human Rights Committee to take part in the work of the Special Committee established in accordance with paragraph 3 of this Article, until such time as sufficient nationals of the Contracting Parties to this Convention are elected to the Human Rights Committee.

5. The Special Committee on the Prevention of Torture shall meet not less than once a year for a period of not more than five days, either before the opening or after the closing of sessions of the Human Rights Committee and shall issue an annual report of its findings.

ARTICLE XIV

(Settlement of disputes)

Any dispute by Contracting Parties arising out of the interpretation, application or implementation of this Convention which has not been settled by negotiation, arbitration or referral to an independent and impartial body shall, at the request of any party to the dispute, be brought before the International Court of Justice.

ARTICLE XV

(Signature and accessions)

1. This Convention is open for signature by all States
2. Any State which does not sign this Convention before its entry into force may accede to it thereafter.

ARTICLE XVI

(Reservations)

No reservations may be made to Article VI of this Convention. The pertinent provisions of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties shall apply with respect to any other reservations.

ARTICLE XVII

(Depositing instruments of ratification)

This Convention is subject to ratification. Instruments of ratification shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

ARTICLE XVIII

(Accession)

Accession shall be effected by the deposit of an instrument of accession with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

ARTICLE XIX

(Entry into Force)

1. This Convention shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after the deposit of the tenth instrument of ratification or accession.
2. For each State ratifying this Convention or acceding to it after the deposit of the tenth instrument of ratification or accession, the Convention shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after the date of the deposit of its own instrument of ratification or accession.

ARTICLE XX

(Revision)

1. A request for the revision of this Convention may be made at any time by any Contracting Party by means of a notification in writing addressed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.
2. The General Assembly by the United Nations shall decide upon the steps, if any, to be taken in respect to such a request.

ARTICLE XXI

(Notification)

The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall inform all States of the following particulars:

- (1) Signatures, ratifications, accessions and reservations under Articles XV-XVIII of this Convention;
- (2) The date of entry into force of the present Convention;
- (3) Notification under Article XX of the present Convention.

ARTICLE XXII

(Official languages)

This Convention, of which the Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited in the archives of the United Nations.

ARTICLE XXIII

(Transmittal)

The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall transmit certified copies of this Convention to all Contracting Parties.

DRAFT INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION
AGAINST TORTURE AND OTHER CRUEL, INHUMAN OR DEGRADING TREATMENT OR PUNISHMENT
(ORIGINAL SWEDISH DRAFT)
(18 JANUARY 1978)³
(Preamble to be elaborated)

ARTICLE 1

1. For the purpose of the present Convention, torture means any act by which severe pain or suffering, whether physical or mental, is intentionally inflicted by or at the instigation of a public official on a person for such purposes as obtaining from him or a third person information or confession, punishing him for an act he has committed or is suspected of having committed, or intimidating him or other persons. It does not include pain or suffering arising only from, inherent in or incidental to, lawful sanctions to the extent consistent with the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners.
2. Torture constitutes an aggravated and deliberate form of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

³ E/CN.4/1285.

ARTICLE 2

1. Each State Party undertakes to ensure that torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment does not take place within its jurisdiction. Under no circumstances shall any State Party permit or tolerate torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.
2. No exceptional circumstances whatsoever, whether a state of war or a threat of war, internal political instability or any other public emergency, may be invoked as a justification of torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.
3. An order from a superior officer or a public authority may not be invoked as a justification of torture or other cruel inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

ARTICLE 3

Each state party shall, in accordance with the provisions of the present convention, take legislative, administrative, judicial and other measures to prevent torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment from being practised within its jurisdiction.

ARTICLE 4

No State Party may expel or extradite a person to a State where there are reasonable grounds to believe that he may be in danger of being subjected to torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

ARTICLE 5

1. Each State party shall ensure that education and information regarding the prohibition against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment are fully included in the curricula of the training of law enforcement personnel and of other public officials as well as medical personnel who may be responsible for persons deprived of their liberty.
2. Each State party shall include this prohibition in the general rules or instructions issued in regard to the duties and functions of anyone who may be involved in the custody or treatment of persons deprived of their liberty.

ARTICLE 6

Each State Party shall keep under systematic review interrogation methods and practices as well as arrangements for the custody and treatment of persons deprived of their liberty in its territory, with a view to preventing any cases of torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

ARTICLE 7

1. Each State Party shall ensure that all acts of torture as defined in Article 1 are offences under its criminal law. The same shall apply in regard to acts which constitute participation in, complicity in, incitement to or an attempt to commit torture.
2. Each State Party undertakes to make the offences referred to in paragraph 1 of this Article punishable by severe penalties.

ARTICLE 8

1. Each State Party shall take such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over the offences referred to in Article 7 in the following cases:
 - (a) when the offences are committed in the territory of that State or on board a ship or aircraft registered in that State;

- (b) when the alleged offender is a national of that State;
 - (c) when the victim is a national of that State.
2. Each State Party shall likewise take such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over such offences in cases where the alleged offender is present in its territory and it does not extradite him pursuant to Article 14 to any of the States mentioned in paragraph 1 of this Article.
 3. This Convention does not exclude any criminal jurisdiction exercised in accordance with internal law.

ARTICLE 9

Each State Party shall guarantee to any individual who alleges to have been subjected within its jurisdiction to torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment by or at the instigation of its public officials, the right to complain to and to have his case impartially examined by its competent authorities without threat of further torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

ARTICLE 10

Each State Party shall ensure that, even if there has been no formal complaint, its competent authorities proceed to an impartial, speedy and effective investigation, wherever there is reasonable ground to believe that an act of torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment has been committed within its jurisdiction.

ARTICLE 11

1. Each State Party shall, except in the cases referred to in Article 14, ensure that criminal proceedings are instituted in accordance with its national law against an alleged offender who is present in its territory, if its competent authorities establish that an act of torture as defined in Article 1 appears to have been committed and if that State Party has jurisdiction over the offence in accordance with Article 8.
2. Each State Party shall ensure that an alleged offender is subject to criminal, disciplinary or other appropriate proceedings, when an allegation of other forms of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment within its jurisdiction is considered to be well founded.

ARTICLE 12

Each State Party shall guarantee an enforceable right to compensation to the victim of an act of torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment committed by or at the instigation of its public officials. In the event of the death of the victim, his relatives or other successors shall be entitled to enforce this right to compensation.

ARTICLE 13

Each State Party shall ensure that any statement which is established to have been made as a result of torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment shall not be invoked as evidence against the person concerned or against any other person in any proceedings.

ARTICLE 14

Instead of instituting criminal proceedings in accordance with paragraph 1 of Article 11, a State Party may, if requested, extradite the alleged offender to another State Party, which has jurisdiction over the offence in accordance with Article 8.

ARTICLE 15

1. States Parties shall afford one another the greatest measure of assistance in connection with proceedings referred to in Article 11, including the supply of all evidence at their disposal necessary for the proceedings.
2. The provisions of paragraph 1 of this Article shall not affect obligations concerning mutual judicial assistance embodied in any other treaty.

ARTICLE 16

States Parties undertake to submit to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, when so requested by the Human Rights Committee established in accordance with Article 28 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (hereafter referred to in the present Convention as the Human Rights Committee), reports or other information on measure taken to suppress and punish torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. Such reports or information shall be considered by the Human Rights Committee in accordance with the procedures set out in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and in the Rules of Procedure of the Human Rights Committee.

ARTICLE 17

If the Human Rights Committee receives information that torture is being systematically practice in a certain State Party, the Committee may designate one or more of its members to carry out an inquiry and to report to the Committee urgently. The inquiry may include a visit to the State concerned, provided that the Government of that State gives its consent.

ARTICLE 18

1. A State Party may at any time declare under this Article that it recognizes the competence of the Human Rights Committee to receive and consider communications to the effect that a State Party claims that another States Party is not fulfilling its obligations under the present Convention. Communications under this Article may be received and considered only if submitted by a State Party which has made a declaration recognizing in regard to itself the competence of the Human Rights Committee. No communication shall be received by the Human Rights Committee if it concerns a State Party which has not made such a declaration.
2. Communications received under this Article shall be dealt with in accordance with the procedure provided for in Article 41 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and in the Rules of Procedure of the Human Rights Committee.

ARTICLE 19

If a matter referred to the Human Rights Committee in accordance with Article 18 is not resolved to the satisfaction of the States Parties concerned, the Committee may, with the prior consent of the States Parties concerned, appoint an ad hoc Conciliation Commission. The procedures governing this Commission shall be the same as those provided for in Article 42 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and in the Rules of Procedure of the Human Rights Committee.

ARTICLE 20

1. A State Party may at any time declare under this Article that it recognizes the competence of the Committee to receive and consider communications from individuals subject to its jurisdiction who claim to have been subjected to torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment in contravention of the obligations of that State Party under the present

Convention. No communication shall be received by the Committee if it concerns a State Party which has not made such a declaration.

2. Communications received under this Article shall be dealt with in the accordance with the procedure provided for in the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and in the Rules of Procedure of the Human Rights Committee.

ARTICLE 21

The Human Rights Committee shall include in its annual report to the General Assembly a summary of its activities under Article 16, 17, 18, 19 and 20 of the present Convention

(Final clauses to be elaborated)
REVISED TEXT OF THE SUBSTANTIVE PARTS OF THE DRAFT INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION
AGAINST TORTURE AND OTHER CRUEL, INHUMAN OR DEGRADING TREATMENT OR PUNISHMENT
(REVISED SWEDISH DRAFT)

(19 FEBRUARY 1979)⁴

ARTICLE 1

1. For the purposes of this Convention, torture means any act by which severe pain or suffering, whether physical or mental, is intentionally inflicted on a person for such purposes as obtaining from him or a third person information or a confession, punishing him for an act he or a third person has committed or is suspected of having committed, or intimidating or coercing him or a third person, or for any reason based on discrimination of any kind, when such pain or suffering is inflicted by or at the instigation of or with the consent or acquiescence of a public official or other person acting in an official capacity. It does not include pain or suffering arising only from, inherent in or incidental to lawful sanctions.
2. [Torture is an aggravated and deliberate form of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.]
3. This Article is without prejudice to any international instrument or national legislation which does or may contain provisions of wider application relating to the subject matter of this Convention.

ARTICLE 2

1. Each State party shall take effective legislative, administrative, judicial or other measures to prevent acts of torture in any territory under its jurisdiction,
2. No exceptional circumstances whatsoever, whether a state of war or a threat of war, internal political instability or any other public emergency, may be invoked as a justification of torture.
3. An order from a superior officer of a public authority may not be invoked as a justification of torture, [however, this may be considered a ground for mitigation of punishment, if justice so requires.]

⁴ E/CN.4/WG.1/WP.1.

ARTICLE 3

No State Party shall expel, return ('refouler') or extradite a person where there are substantial grounds for believing that he would be in danger of being subjected to torture.

(Remark to be included in the Commission's report:

"Some delegations indicated that their States might wish, at the time of signature or ratification of the Convention or accession thereto, to declare that they did not consider themselves bound by Article 3 of the Convention, in so far as that Article might not be compatible with obligations towards States not Party to the Convention under extradition treaties concluded before the date of the signature of the Convention.")

ARTICLE 4

1. Each State Party shall ensure that all acts of torture are offences under its criminal law. The same shall apply to an attempt to commit torture and to an act by any person which constitutes complicity or participation in torture.
2. Each State Party shall make these offences punishable by appropriate penalties which take into account their grave nature.

ARTICLE 5

1. Each State Party shall take such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over the offences referred to in Article 4 in the following cases:
 - (a) When the offences are committed in any territory under its jurisdiction;
 - (b) When the alleged offender is a national of that State;
 - (c) [When the victim is a national of that State.]
2. Each State Party shall likewise take such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over such offences in cases where the alleged offender is present in any territory under its jurisdiction and it does not extradite him pursuant to Article 8 to any of the States mentioned in paragraph 1 of this Article.
3. This Convention does not exclude any criminal jurisdiction exercised in accordance with internal law.

ARTICLE 6

1. Upon being satisfied that the circumstances so warrant, any State Party in whose jurisdiction a person alleged to have committed any offence referred to in Article 4 is present, shall take him into custody or take other measures to ensure his presence. The custody and other measures shall be as provided in the law of that State but may be continued only for such time as is necessary to enable any criminal or extradition proceedings to be instituted.
2. Such State shall immediately make a preliminary enquiry into the facts.
3. Any person in custody pursuant to paragraph 1 of this Article shall be assisted in communicating immediately with the nearest appropriate representative of the State of which he is a national.
4. When a State, pursuant to this Article, has taken a person into custody, it shall immediately notify the States referred to in Article 5, paragraph 1, of the fact that such person is in custody and of the circumstances which warrant his detention. The State which makes the preliminary enquiry contemplated in paragraph 2 of this Article shall promptly report its findings to the said State and shall indicate whether it intends to exercise jurisdiction.
5. Any person regarding whom proceedings are being carried out in connection with any of the offences referred to in Article 4 shall be guaranteed fair treatment at all stages of the proceedings.

ARTICLE 7

The State Party in territory under whose jurisdiction a person alleged to have committed any offence referred to in Article 4 is found shall, if it does not extradite him, be obliged, without exception whatsoever and whether or not the offence was committed in any territory under its jurisdiction, to submit the case to its competent authorities for the purpose of prosecution. Those authorities shall take their decision in the same manner as in the case of any offence of a serious nature under the law of that State.

ARTICLE 8

1. The offences referred to in Article 4 shall be deemed to be included as extraditable offences in any extradition treaty existing between States Parties. States Parties undertake to include such offences as extraditable offences in every extradition treaty to be concluded between them.
2. If a State Party which makes extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty receives a request for extradition from another State Party with which it has no extradition treaty, it [may] [shall] consider this Convention as the legal basis for extradition in respect of such offences. Extradition shall be subject to the other conditions provided by the law of the requested State.
3. States Parties which do not make extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty shall recognize such offences as extraditable offences between themselves subject to the conditions provided by the law of the requested State.
4. Such offences shall be treated, for the purpose of extradition between States Parties, as if they had been committed not only in the place in which they occurred but also in the territories of the States required to establish their jurisdiction in accordance with Article 5, paragraph 1.

ARTICLE 9

1. States Parties shall afford one another the greatest measure of assistance in connection with criminal proceedings brought in respect of any of the offences referred to in Article 4, including the supply of all evidence at their disposal necessary for the proceedings.
2. The provisions of paragraph 1 of this Article shall not affect obligations under any other treaty, bilateral or multilateral, which governs or will govern, in whole or in part, mutual assistance in criminal matters.

ARTICLE 10

1. Each State party shall ensure that education and information regarding the prohibition against torture are fully included in the training of law enforcement personnel, civil or military, medical personnel, public officials and other persons who may be involved in the custody, interrogation or treatment of any individual subjected to any form of arrest, detention or imprisonment.
2. Each State party shall include this prohibition in the rules or instructions issued in regard to the duties and functions of any such persons.

ARTICLE 11

Each State Party shall keep under systematic review interrogation methods and practices as well as arrangements for the custody and treatment of persons subjected to any form of arrest, detention or imprisonment in any territory under its jurisdiction, with a view to preventing any cases of torture.

ARTICLE 12

Each State Party shall ensure that any individual who alleges he has been subjected to torture in any territory under its jurisdiction has the right to complain to and to have his case impartially examined by its competent authorities. Steps shall be taken to ensure that the complainant is protected against ill-treatment in consequence of his complaint.

ARTICLE 13

Each State Party shall ensure that, even if there has been no formal complaint, its competent authorities proceed to a prompt and impartial investigation, wherever there is reasonable ground to believe that an act of torture has been committed in any territory under its jurisdiction.

ARTICLE 14

1. Each State Party shall ensure that the victim of an act of torture has an enforceable right to compensation. In the event of the death of the victim as a result of an act of torture, his dependants shall be entitled to compensation.
2. Nothing in this Article shall affect any other right to compensation which may exist under national law.

ARTICLE 15

Each State Party shall ensure that any statement which is established to have been made as a result of torture shall not be invoked as evidence in any proceedings except against a person accused of obtaining that statement by torture.

ARTICLE 16

This Convention shall be without prejudice to any provisions in other international instruments or in national law which prohibit cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment and punishment.

PROPOSALS FOR THE PREAMBLE AND THE FINAL PROVISIONS OF THE DRAFT CONVENTION
(SWEDISH DRAFT)

(2 DECEMBER 1980)⁵

PREAMBLE

The States Parties to the present Convention,

Considering that, in accordance with the principles proclaimed in the Charter of the United Nations, recognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world,

Recognizing that these rights derive from the inherent dignity of the human person,

Considering the obligation of States under the Charter of the United Nations to promote universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Having regard to Article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and Article 7 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, both of which provide that no one may be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Having regard also to the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, adopted by the General Assembly on 9 December 1975 (resolution 3452 (XXX)),

⁵ E/CN.4/1427.

Desiring to convert to the principles of the Declaration into binding treaty obligations and to adopt a system for their effective implementation,

Have agreed as follows:

FINAL PROVISIONS

ARTICLE A

1. The present Convention is open for signature by all States at the United Nations Headquarters in New York.
2. Any State which does not sign the Convention before its entry into force may accede to it.

ARTICLE B

1. The present Convention is subject to ratification. Instruments of ratification shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.
2. Accession shall be effected by the deposit of an instrument of accession with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

ARTICLE C

1. The present Convention shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after the date of the deposit with the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the tenth instrument of ratification of accession.
2. For each State ratifying this Convention or acceding to it after the deposit of the tenth instrument of ratification or accession, the Convention shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after the date of the deposit of its own instrument of ratification of accession.

ARTICLE D

1. A request for the revision of this Convention may be made at any time by any Contracting Party by means of a notification in writing addressed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.
2. The General Assembly by the United Nations shall decide upon the steps, if any, to be taken in respect to such a request.

ARTICLE E

The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall inform all States of the following particulars:

- (a) Signatures, ratifications, accessions and reservations under Articles A and B;
- (b) The date of entry into force of the present Convention under Article C;
- (c) Notification under Article D.

ARTICLE F

1. The present Convention, of which the Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited in the archives of the United Nations.
2. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall transmit certified copies of the present Convention to all States.

(*) see notes below

Notes

- * Unless otherwise indicated, the date of acceptance of the procedures under Arts 21, 22, 20 and 30 was done upon ratification or accession and entered into force with the entry into force of the Convention.
- * Cuba: Upon ratification, Cuba made the following declarations on Articles 28 and 30: "The Government of the Republic of Cuba declares, in accordance with article 28 of the Convention, that the provisions of para graphs 1, 2 and 3 of article 20 of the Convention will have to be invoked in strict compliance with the principle of the sovereignty of States and implemented with the prior consent of the States Parties. In connection with the provisions of article 30 of the Convention, the Government of the Republic of Cuba is of the view that any dispute between Parties should be settled by negotiation through the diplomatic channel."
- * Germany: The data reported above refer to the Federal Republic of Germany. The date of accession, was on 3.10.1990, the day of accession of the German Democratic Republic to the Federal Republic of Germany. With regard to the German Democratic Republic signed the Convention on 7.4.1986 and ratified it on 9.9.1987, so that Convention entered into force on 9.10.1987. Reservations regarding Arts 20, 30, 17(7) and 18(5) were made upon ratification. They were withdrawn on 13.9.1990. The German Democratic Republic recognized the competence of the Committee with regard to Art 22 and Art 21 from 13.9.1990 on.

* Ghana: Upon ratification, Ghana the following declaration on Article 30 'in accordance with Article 30 (2) of the said Convention that the submission under Article 30 (1) to arbitration or the International Court of Justice of disputes between State Parties relating to the interpretation or application of the said Convention shall be by the consent of ALL the Parties concerned and not by one or more of the Parties concerned'.

* Indonesia: Upon ratification, Indonesia made the following declaration on Articles 20 and 30: 'The Government of the Republic of Indonesia declares that the provisions of paragraphs 1, 2, and 3 of Article 20 of the Convention will have to be implemented in strict compliance with the principles of the sovereignty and territorial integrity of States'; 'The Government of the Republic of Indonesia does not consider itself bound by the provision of article 30, paragraph 1, and takes the position that disputes relating to the interpretation and application of the Convention which cannot be settled through the channel provided for in paragraph 1 of the said article, may be referred to the International Court of Justice only with the consent of all parties to the disputes.'

* Poland: The Committee no longer includes Poland in the list of opting out States as of 2009. While not counting Poland in the opting out States from 1998 until 2005 and then again as of 2009, the Committee had inserted Poland in its list of Committee's lists from 2005 until 2009 (A/60/44, Annex I; A/61/44, Annex II; A/62/44, Annex II; A/63/44, Annex II; A/64/44, Annex II). The 'UN Treaty Collection—Status of Treaties' webpage reports that Poland has made a reservation to Art 20 upon signature, but neither the text of the reservation nor its withdrawal are reported under the webpage 'UN Treaty Collection website—Depositary Notifications'.

* Qatar: Upon accession, Qatar made the following reservation on Articles 21 and 22: '(b) The competence of the Committee as indicated in articles 21 and 22 of the Convention' On 14 March 2012, it withdrew its reservation to the mandate of the Committee against Torture as stipulated in Articles 21 and 22 of the Convention.

*South Africa: Upon ratification, South Africa made the following declaration on Article 30 that: 'it recognises, for the purposes of article 30 of the Convention, the competence of the International Court of Justice to settle a dispute between two or more State Parties regarding the interpretation or application of the Convention, respectively.'

“While ratifying the above-mentioned Convention, the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan, invoking paragraph 1 of the article 28, of the Convention, does not recognize the authority of the committee as foreseen in the article 20 of the Convention.”

Article 30

“Also according to paragraph 2 of the article 30, the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan, will not be bound to honour the provisions of paragraph 1 of the same article since according to that paragraph 1 the compulsory submission of disputes in connection with interpretation or the implementation of the provisions of this Convention by one of the parties concerned to the International Court of Justice is deemed possible. Concerning to this matter, it declares that the settlement of disputes between the States Parties, such disputes may be referred to arbitration or to the International Court of Justice with the consent of all the Parties concerned and not by one of the Parties.”

ALGERIA

DECLARATIONS UPON RATIFICATION (12 SEPTEMBER 1989)

Article 21

“The Algerian Government declares, pursuant to article 21 of the Convention, that it recognizes the competence of the Committee Against Torture to receive and consider communications to the effect that a State Party claims that another State Party is not fulfilling its obligations under this Convention.”

Article 22

“The Algerian Government declares, pursuant to article 22 of the Convention, that it recognizes the competence of the Committee to receive and consider communications from or on behalf of individuals subject to its jurisdiction who claim to be victims of a violation by a State Party of the provisions of the Convention.”

ANDORRA

DECLARATIONS (22 NOVEMBER 2006)

Article 21

“The Principality of Andorra recognizes, in accordance with article 21 of the Convention, the competence of the Committee against Torture to receive and consider communications to the effect that a State Party claims that another State Party is not fulfilling its obligations under the Convention.”

Article 22

“The Principality of Andorra recognizes the competence of the Committee against Torture to receive and consider communications from or on behalf of individuals subject to its jurisdiction, who claim to be victims of a violation of the provisions of the Convention.”

ARGENTINA

DECLARATIONS UPON RATIFICATION (24 SEPTEMBER 1986)

Article 21

“The Argentine Republic recognizes the competence of the Committee against Torture to receive and consider communications to the effect that a State Party claims that another State Party is not fulfilling its obligations under this Convention.”

Article 22

“It also recognizes the competence of the Committee to receive and consider communications from or on behalf of individuals subject to its jurisdiction who claim to be victims of a violation by a State Party of the provisions of the Convention.”

AUSTRALIA

DECLARATIONS (28 JANUARY 1993)

Article 21

“The Government of Australia hereby declares that it recognises, for and on behalf of Australia, the competence of the Committee to receive and consider communications to the effect that a State Party claims that another State Party is not fulfilling its obligations under the aforesaid Convention.”

Article 22

“The Government of Australia hereby declares that it recognises, for and on behalf of Australia, the competence of the Committee to receive and consider communications from or on behalf of individuals subject to Australia’s jurisdiction who claim to be victims of a violation by a State Party of the provisions of the aforesaid Convention.”

AUSTRIA

DECLARATIONS UPON RATIFICATION (29 JULY 1987)

Article 5

“1. Austria will establish its jurisdiction in accordance with article 5 of the Convention irrespective of the laws applying to the place where the offence occurred, but in respect of paragraph 1 (c) only if prosecution by a State having jurisdiction under paragraph 1 (a) or paragraph 1 (b) is not to be expected.

Article 15

“2. Austria regards article 15 as the legal basis for the inadmissibility provided for therein of the use of statements which are established to have been made as a result of torture.”

Article 21

“Austria recognizes the competence of the Committee against Torture to receive and consider communications to the effect that a State Party claims that another State Party is not fulfilling its obligations under this Convention.

Article 22

“Austria recognizes the competence of the Committee against Torture to receive and consider communications from or on behalf of individuals subject to Austrian jurisdiction who claim to be victims of a violation of the provisions of the Convention.”

AZERBAIJAN

DECLARATION (4 FEBRUARY 2002)

Article 22

“...the Government of the Republic of Azerbaijan declares that it recognizes the competence of the Committee against Torture to receive and consider communications from or on behalf of individuals subject to its jurisdiction who claim to be victims of a violation by a State Party of the provisions of the Convention.”

BAHRAIN

RESERVATIONS UPON ACCESSION (6 MARCH 1998)

[Article 20

“The State of Bahrain does not recognize the competence of the Committee for which provision is made in article 20 of the Convention”] withdrawn on 4 August 1999

Article 30

“The State of Bahrain does not consider itself bound by paragraph 1 of article 30 of the Convention.”

BANGLADESH

DECLARATION UPON ACCESSION (5 OCTOBER 1998)

Article 14

“The Government of the People’s Republic of Bangladesh will apply article 14 para 1 in consonance with the existing laws and legislation in the country.”

Objections to certain declarations/reservations

FRANCE (30 SEPTEMBER 1999)

“The Government of France notes that the declaration made by Bangladesh in fact constitutes a reservation since it is aimed at precluding or modifying the legal effect of certain provisions of the treaty. A reservation which consists in a general reference to domestic law without specifying its contents does not clearly indicate to the other parties to what extent the State which issued the reservation commits itself when acceding to the Convention. The Government of France considers the reservation of Bangladesh incompatible with the objective and purpose of the treaty, in respect of which the provisions relating to the right of victims of acts of torture to obtain redress and compensation, which ensure the effectiveness and tangible realization of obligations under the Convention, are essential, and consequently lodges an objection to the reservation entered by Bangladesh regarding article 14, paragraph 1. This objection does not prevent the entry into force of the Convention between Bangladesh and France.”

GERMANY (17 DECEMBER 1999)

“The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany notes that the said declaration constitutes a reservation of a general nature. A reservation according to which article 14 paragraph 1 of the Convention will only be applied by the Government of the People’s Republic of Bangladesh “in consonance with the existing laws and legislation in the country” raises doubts as to the full commitment of Bangladesh to the object and purpose of the Convention. It is in the common interest of States that treaties to which they have chosen to become Parties are respected, as to their object and purpose, by all Parties and that States are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under these treaties.

The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany therefore objects to the reservation made by the Government of the People’s Republic of Bangladesh to the Convention. This objection does not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Federal Republic of Germany and the People’s Republic of Bangladesh.”

NETHERLANDS (20 DECEMBER 1999)

“The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands considers that such a reservation, which seeks to limit the responsibilities of the reserving State under the Convention by invoking national law, may raise doubts as to the commitment of this State to the object and purpose of the Convention and, moreover, contribute to undermining the basis of international treaty law.

It is in the common interest of States that treaties to which they have chosen to become parties should be respected, as to object and purpose, by all parties. The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Government of Bangladesh.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Kingdom of the Netherlands and Bangladesh.”

FINLAND (13 DECEMBER 1999)

“The Government of Finland has examined the contents of the declaration made by the Government of Bangladesh to Article 14 paragraph 1 to the Convention Against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and notes that the declaration constitutes a reservation as it seems to modify the obligations of Bangladesh under the said article.

A reservation which consists of a general reference to national law without specifying its contents does not clearly define for the other Parties of the Convention the extent to which the reserving State commits itself to the Convention and therefore may raise doubts as to the commitment of the reserving state to fulfil its obligations under the Convention. Such a reservation is also, in the view of the Government of Finland, subject to the general principle of treaty interpretation according to which a party may not invoke the provisions of its domestic law as justification for a failure to perform its treaty obligations.

Therefore the Government of Finland objects to the aforesaid reservation to Article 14 paragraph 1 made by the Government of Bangladesh. This objection does not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Bangladesh and Finland. The Convention will thus become operative between the two States without Bangladesh benefitting from these reservations.”

SPAIN (13 DECEMBER 1999)

“The Government of the Kingdom of Spain considers that this declaration is actually a reservation, since its purpose is to exclude or modify the application of the legal effect of certain provisions of the Convention. Moreover, in referring in a general way to the domestic laws of Bangladesh, without specifying their content, the reservation raises doubts among the other States parties as to the extent to which the People’s Republic of Bangladesh is committed to ratifying the Convention.

The Government of the Kingdom of Spain believes that the reservation lodged by the Government of the People's Republic of Bangladesh is incompatible with the objective and purpose of the Convention, for which the provisions concerning redress and compensation for victims of torture are essential factors in the concrete fulfilment of the commitments made under the Convention.

The Government of the Kingdom of Spain therefore states an objection to the above-mentioned reservation lodged by the Government of the People's Republic of Bangladesh to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, concerning article 14, paragraph 1, of that Convention.

This objection does not affect the entry into force of the above-mentioned Convention between the Kingdom of Spain and the People's Republic of Bangladesh."

SWEDEN (14 DECEMBER 1999)

"The Government of Sweden has examined the declaration regarding article 14, paragraph 1, made by the Government of Bangladesh at the time of its accession to the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.

In this context the Government of Sweden would like to recall, that under well-established international treaty law, the name assigned to a statement whereby the legal effect of certain provisions of a treaty is excluded or modified, does not determine its status as a reservation to the treaty. Thus, the Government of Sweden considers that the declaration made by the Government of Bangladesh, in the absence of further clarification, in substance constitutes a reservation to the Convention.

The Government of Sweden notes that the said declaration imply that the said article of the Convention is being made subject to a general reservation referring to the contents of existing laws and regulations in the country.

The Government of Sweden is of the view that this declaration raises doubts as to the commitment of Bangladesh to the object and purpose of the Convention and would recall that, according to well-established international law, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted.

It is in the common interest of States that treaties to which they have chosen to become parties are respected, as to their object and purpose, by all parties and that States are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under these treaties.

The Government of Sweden therefore objects to the aforesaid declaration made by the Government of Bangladesh to the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment."

BOTSWANA

RESERVATION UPON SIGNATURE AND CONFIRMED UPON RATIFICATION (8 SEPTEMBER 2000)

Article 1

“The Government of the Republic of Botswana considers itself bound by Article 1 of the Convention to the extent that ‘torture’ means the torture and inhuman or degrading punishment or other treatment prohibited by Section 7 of the Constitution of the Republic of Botswana.”

Objections to certain declarations/reservations

SWEDEN (2 OCTOBER 2001)

“The Government of Sweden has examined the reservation made by Botswana upon ratification of the 1984 Convention Against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, regarding article 1 of the Convention. The Government of Sweden notes that the said article of the Convention is being made subject to a general reservation referring to the contents of existing legislation in Botswana. Article 1.2 of the Convention states that the definition of torture in article 1.1 is “without prejudice to any international instrument or national legislation which does or may contain provisions of wider application”.

The Government of Sweden is of the view that this reservation, in the absence of further clarification, raises doubts as to the commitment of Botswana to the object and purpose of the Convention. The Government of Sweden would like to recall that, according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted.

It is in the common interest of States that treaties to which they have chosen to become parties are respected as to their object and purpose, by all parties, and that States are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under the treaties.

The Government of Sweden therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Government of Botswana to the Convention Against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Botswana and Sweden. The Convention enters into force in its entirety between the two States, without Botswana benefiting from its reservation.”

DENMARK (4 OCTOBER 2001)

“The Government of Denmark has examined the contents of the reservation made by the Government of Botswana to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment. The reservation refers to legislation in force in Botswana as to the definition of torture and thus to the scope of application of the Convention. In the absence of further clarification the Government of Denmark considers that the reservation raises doubts as to the commitment of Botswana to fulfill her obligations under the Convention and is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention.

For these reasons, the Government of Denmark objects to this reservation made by the Government of Botswana. This objection does not preclude the entry into force of the Convention in its entirety between Botswana and Denmark without Botswana benefiting from the reservation.”

NORWAY (4 OCTOBER 2001)

“The Government of Norway has examined the contents of the reservation made by the Government of the Republic of Botswana upon ratification of the Convention Against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.

The reservation’s reference to the national Constitution without further description of its contents, exempts the other States Parties to the Convention from the possibility of assessing the effects of the reservation. In addition, as the reservation concerns one of the core provisions of the Convention, it is the position of the Government of Norway that the reservation is contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention. Norway therefore objects to the reservation made by the Government of Botswana.

This objection does not preclude the entry into force in its entirety of the Convention between the Kingdom of Norway and the Republic of Botswana. The Convention thus becomes operative between Norway and Botswana without Botswana benefiting from the said reservation.”

BRAZIL

DECLARATION (26 JUNE 2006)

Article 22

“...the Federative Republic of Brazil recognizes the competence of the Committee against Torture to receive and consider denunciations of violations of the provisions of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, adopted in New York on December 10, 1984, as permitted by Article 22 of the Convention.”

[Article 30

“Pursuant to Article 30, paragraph 2 of the Convention, the People's Republic of Bulgaria states that it does not consider itself bound by the provisions of Article 30, paragraph 1 of the Convention, establishing compulsory jurisdiction of international arbitration or the International

Court of Justice in the settlement of disputes between States-parties to the Convention.

The People's Republic of Bulgaria maintains its position that disputes between two or more States can be submitted for consideration and settlement by international arbitration or the International Court of Justice only provided all parties to the dispute, in each individual case, have explicitly agreed to that.”] withdrawn on 24 June 1992

DECLARATIONS (12 MAY 1993)

Article 21

“The Republic of Bulgaria declares that in accordance with article 21 (2) of the Convention it recognizes the competence of the Committee against Torture to receive and consider communications to the effect that a State Party claims that another State Party is not fulfilling its obligations under this Convention.”

CAMEROON

DECLARATION (12 OCTOBER 2000)

Article 21

“[The Republic of Cameroon declares], that [it] recognizes the competence of the Committee against Torture to receive and consider communications from a State Party claiming that the Republic of Cameroon is not fulfilling its obligations under the Convention. However, such communications will not be receivable unless they refer to situations and facts subsequent to this declaration and emanate from a State Party which has made a similar declaration indicating its reciprocal acceptance of the competence of the Committee with regard to itself at least twelve (12) months before submitting its communication.

In accordance with article 22 of the Convention, the Republic of Cameroon also declares that it recognizes, in the case of situations and facts subsequent to this declaration, the competence of the Committee against Torture to receive and consider communications from or on behalf of individuals subject to its jurisdiction who claim to be victims of a violation by a State Party of the provisions of the Convention.”

CANADA

DECLARATIONS (13 NOVEMBER 1989)

Article 21

“The Government of Canada declares that it recognizes the competence of the Committee Against Torture, pursuant to article 21 of the said Convention, to receive and consider communications to the effect that a state party claims that another state party is not fulfilling its obligations under this Convention.”

Article 22

“The Government of Canada also declares that it recognizes the competence of the Committee Against Torture, pursuant to article 22 of the said Convention, to receive and consider communications from or on behalf of individuals subject to its jurisdiction who claim to be victims of a violation by a state party of the provisions of the Convention.”

CHILE

RESERVATION UPON SIGNATURE (30 SEPTEMBER 1987)

“To Article 2, paragraph 3, in so far as it modifies the principle of ‘obedience upon reiteration’ contained in Chilean domestic law. the Government of Chile will apply the provisions of that international norm to subordinate personnel governed by the Code of Military Justice, provided that the order patently intended to lead to perpetration of the acts referred to in article 1 is not insisted on by the superior officer after being challenged by his subordinate.”] withdrawn on 7 September 1990

[Article 3

“To Article 3, by reason of the discretionary and subjective nature of the terms in which it is drafted. The Government of Chile declares that in its relations with American States that are Parties to the Inter-American Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture, it will apply that Convention in cases where its provisions are incompatible with those of the present Convention.”] withdrawn on 7 September 1990

[Article 20

“As provided for in article 28, paragraph 1, the Government of Chile does not recognize the competence of the Committee against Torture as defined by article 20 of the Convention.”] withdrawn on 7 September 1990.

[Article 30

“The Government of Chile will not consider itself bound by the provisions of article 30, paragraph 1 of the Convention”] withdrawn on 7 September 1990.

DECLARATIONS (15 MARCH 2004)

Article 17

“By virtue of the powers vested in me by the Constitution of the Republic of Chile, I should like to declare that the Government of Chile recognizes the competence of the Committee against Torture established pursuant to article 17 of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, adopted by the General Assembly of the United Nations in resolution 39/46 of 10 December 1984, with respect to acts of which the commencement of execution is subsequent to the communication of this declaration by the Republic of Chile to the Secretary-General of the United Nations:”

Article 21

“(a) To receive and consider communications to the effect that a State party claims that the State of Chile is not fulfilling its obligations under the Convention, in accordance with article 21 thereof”

Article 22

“(b) To receive and consider communications from or on behalf of individuals subject to its jurisdiction who claim to be victims of a violation by the State of Chile of the provisions of the Convention, in accordance with article 22 thereof.”

Objections to certain declarations/reservations

ITALY (14 AUGUST 1989)

“The Government of Italy considers that the reservations entered by Chile are not valid, as they are incompatible with the objection and purpose of the Convention. The present objection is in no way an obstacle to the entry into force of this Convention between Italy and Chile.”

DENMARK (7 SEPTEMBER 1989)

“The Danish Government considers the said reservations as being incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention and therefore invalid.

This objection is not an obstacle to the entry into force of the said Convention between Denmark and Chile.”

LUXEMBOURG (12 SEPTEMBER 1989)

“... The Grand Duchy of Luxembourg objects to the reservations, which are incompatible with the intent and purpose of the Convention.

This objection does not represent an obstacle to the entry into force of the said Convention between the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg and Chile.”

CZECHOSLOVAKIA (20 SEPTEMBER 1989)

“The Czechoslovak Socialist Republic considers the reservations of the Government of Chile [...] as incompatible with the object and purpose of this Convention.

The obligation of each State to prevent acts of torture in any territory under its jurisdiction is unexceptional. It is the obligation of each State to ensure that all acts of torture are offences under its criminal law. This obligation is confirmed, inter alia, in article 2, paragraph 3 of the Convention concerned.

The observance of provisions set up in article 3 of this Convention is necessitated by the need to ensure more effective protection for persons who might be in danger of being subjected to torture and this is obviously one of the principal purposes of the Convention.

Therefore, the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic does not recognize these reservations as valid.”

FRANCE (20 SEPTEMBER 1989)

“France considers that the reservations made by Chile are not valid as being incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention.

Such objection is not an obstacle to the entry into force of the Convention between France and Chile.”

SWEDEN (25 SEPTEMBER 1989)

“The Swedish Government has examined the reservations made by Chile with respect to article 2, paragraph 3, and article 3 of the Convention and has come to the conclusion that these reservations are incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention and therefore are impermissible according to article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties. For this reason the Government of Sweden objects to these reservations. This objection does not have the effect of preventing the Convention from entering into force between Sweden and Chile, and the said reservations cannot alter or modify, in any respect, the obligations arising from the Convention.”

SPAIN (26 SEPTEMBER 1989)

“The Government of the Kingdom of Spain declares that it objects to the reservations made by Chile to article 2, paragraph 3, and article 3 of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment of 10 December 1984, because the aforementioned reservations are contrary to the purposes and aims of the Convention. The present objection does not constitute an obstacle to the entry into force of the Convention between Spain and Chile.”

NORWAY (28 SEPTEMBER 1989)

“... The Government of Norway considers the said reservations as being incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention and therefore invalid.

This objection is not an obstacle to the entry into force of the said Convention between Norway and Chile.”

PORTUGAL (6 OCTOBER 1989)

“... The Government of Portugal considers such reservations to be incompatible with the object and purpose of this Convention and therefore invalid.

This objection does not constitute an obstacle to the entry into force of the Convention between Portugal and Chile.”

GREECE (13 OCTOBER 1989)

“Greece does not accept the reservations since they are incompatible with the purpose and object of the Convention.

The above-mentioned objection is not an obstacle to the entry into force of the Convention between Greece and Chile.”

FINLAND (20 OCTOBER 1989)

“... The Government of Finland considers the said reservations as being incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention and therefore invalid.

This objection is not an obstacle to the entry into force of the said Convention between Finland and Chile.”

CANADA (23 OCTOBER 1989)

“The Government of Canada hereby formally objects to the reservations made by Chile in respect of Article 2, Paragraph 3 and Article 3 of the Convention Against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment. The reservations by Chile are incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention Against Torture and thus inadmissible under Article 19(C) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties.”

TURKEY (3 NOVEMBER 1989)

“The Government of Turkey considers such reservations to be incompatible with the object and purpose of this Convention and therefore invalid.

This objection does not constitute an obstacle to the entry into force of the Convention between Turkey and Chile.”

AUSTRALIA (7 NOVEMBER 1989)

“[The Government of Australia] has come to the conclusion that these reservations are incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention and therefore are impermissible according to article 19 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties. The Government of Australia therefore objects to these reservations. This objection does not have the effect of preventing the Convention from entering into force between Australia and Chile, and the afore-mentioned reservations cannot alter or modify, in any respect, the obligations arising from the Convention.”

NETHERLANDS (7 NOVEMBER 1989)

“Since the purpose of the Convention is strengthening of the existing prohibition of torture and similar practices the reservation to article 2, paragraph 3, to the effect to an order from a superior officer or a public authority may – in some cases – be invoked as a justification of torture, must be rejected as contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention.

For similar reasons the reservation to article 3 must be regarded as incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention.

These objections are not an obstacle to the entry into force of this Convention between the Kingdom of the Netherlands and Chile.”

SWITZERLAND (8 NOVEMBER 1989)

“These reservations are not compatible with the object and purpose of the Convention, which are to improve respect for human rights of fundamental importance and to make more effective the struggle against torture throughout the world.

This objection does not have the effect of preventing the Convention from entering into force between the Swiss Confederation and the Republic of Chile.

UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND NORTHERN IRELAND
(8 NOVEMBER 1989)

“The United Kingdom is unable to accept the reservation to article 2, paragraph 3, or the reservation to article 3.

In the same communication, the Government of the United Kingdom notified the Secretary-General of the following:

- (a) The reservations to article 28, paragraph 1, and to article 30, paragraph 1, being reservations expressly permitted by the Convention, do not call for any observations by the United Kingdom.
- (b) The United Kingdom takes note of the reservation referring to the Inter-American Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture, which cannot, however, affect the obligations of Chile in respect of the United Kingdom, as a non-Party to the said Convention.”

AUSTRIA (9 NOVEMBER 1989)

“The reservations [...] are incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention and are therefore impermissible under article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties. The Republic of Austria therefore objects against these reservations and states that they cannot alter or modify, in any respect, the obligations arising from the Convention for all States Parties thereto.”

NEW ZEALAND (10 DECEMBER 1989)

“... The New Zealand Government considers the said reservations to be incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention. This objection does not constitute an obstacle to the entry into force of the Convention between New Zealand and Chile.”

BULGARIA (24 JANUARY 1990)

“The Government of the People’s Republic of Bulgaria considers the reservations made by Chile with regard to art. 2, para. 3 and art. 3 of the Convention against torture and other forms of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment of December 10, 1984 incompatible with the object and the purpose of the Convention.

The Government of the People’s Republic of Bulgaria holds the view that each State is obliged to take all measures to prevent any acts of torture and other forms of cruel and inhuman treatment within its jurisdiction, including the unconditional qualification of such acts as crimes in its national criminal code. It is in this sense that art. 2, para. 3 of the Convention is formulated.

The provisions of art. 3 of the Convention are dictated by the necessity to grant the most effective protection to persons who risk to suffer torture or other inhuman treatment. For this reason these provisions should not be interpreted on the basis of subjective or any other circumstances, under which they were formulated.

In view of this the Government of the People’s Republic of Bulgaria does not consider itself bound by the reservations.”

COSTA RICA

DECLARATIONS (27 FEBRUARY 2002)

Article 21

“...the Republic of Costa Rica, with a view to strengthening the international instruments in this field and in accordance with full respect for human rights, the essence of Costa Rica’s foreign policy, recognizes, unconditionally and during the period of validity of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the competence of the Committee to receive and consider communications to the effect that a State Party claims that another State Party is not fulfilling its obligations under the Convention.”

Article 22

“Furthermore, the Republic of Costa Rica recognizes, unconditionally and during the period of validity of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the competence of the Committee to receive and consider communications from or on behalf of individuals subject to its jurisdiction who claim to be victims of a violation by a State Party of the provisions of the Convention.

The foregoing is in accordance with articles 21 and 22 of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, adopted by the United Nations General Assembly on 10 December 1984.”

CROATIA

DECLARATIONS (12 OCTOBER 1992)

Articles 21 and 22

“[The] Republic of Croatia ... accepts the competence of the Committee in accordance with articles 21 and 22 of the said Convention.”

CUBA

DECLARATIONS UPON RATIFICATION (17 MAY 1995)

Article 2

“The Government of the Republic of Cuba deplores the fact that even after the adoption of General Assembly resolution 1514 (XV) containing the Declaration on the granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples, a provision such as paragraph 1 of article 2 was included in the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.”

Article 20

“The Government of the Republic declares, in accordance with article 28 of the Convention, that the provisions of paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 of article 20 of the Convention will have to be invoked in strict compliance with the principle of the sovereignty of States and implemented with the prior consent of the States Parties.”

Article 30

“In connection with the provisions of article 30 of the Convention, the Government of the Republic of Cuba is of the view that any dispute between Parties should be settled by negotiation through the diplomatic channel.”

CYPRUS

DECLARATIONS (8 APRIL 1993)

Articles 21 and 22

ECUADOR

DECLARATIONS (6 SEPTEMBER 1988)

Article 21

“The Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Ecuador, in exercise of his authority, expressly declares that the Ecuadorian State, pursuant to article 21 of the International Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, recognizes the competence of the Committee against Torture to receive and consider communications to the effect that a State Party claims that another State Party is not fulfilling its obligations under the Convention; it also recognizes in regard to itself the competence of the Committee, in accordance with article 21.”

Article 22

“It further declares, in accordance with the provisions of article 22 of the Convention, that it recognizes the competence of the Committee to receive and consider communications from or on behalf of individuals subject to its jurisdiction who claim to be victims of a violation by a State Party of the provisions of the Convention.”

EQUATORIAL GUINEA

Article 20

“The Government of Equatorial Guinea hereby declares that, pursuant to article 28 of this Convention, it does not recognize the competence of the Committee provided for in article 20 of the Convention.”

Article 30

“With reference to the provisions of article 30, the Government of Equatorial Guinea does not consider itself bound by paragraph 1 thereof.”

ERITREA

DECLARATIONS UPON ACCESSION (25 SEPTEMBER 2014)

Article 20

“In accordance with Article 28 of the Convention, Eritrea declares that it does not recognize the competence of the Committee provided for it in article 20.”

Article 30

“The State of Eritrea does not consider itself bound by paragraph 1 of Article 30 which stipulates that all disputes concerning the interpretation or application of the Convention shall be referred to the International Court of Justice by one of the parties.”

FIJI

RESERVATIONS UPON RATIFICATION (14 MARCH 2016)

Article 1

“The Government of the Republic of Fiji does not recognize the definition of Torture as provided for in article 1 of the Convention therefore shall not be bound by these provisions. The definition of Torture in the Convention is only applicable to the extent as expressed in the Fijian Constitution.”

Article 14

“The Government of the Republic of Fiji recognizes the article 14 of the Convention only to the extent that the right to award compensation to victims of an act of torture shall be subject to the determination of a Court of law.”

Articles 20, 21 and 22

“The Government of the Republic of Fiji does not recognize the competence of the Committee against Torture as provided for in article(s) 20, 21 and 22 of the Convention and therefore shall not be bound by these provisions.”

Article 30

“The Government of the Republic of Fiji does not recognize paragraph 1 of article 30 of the Convention and therefore shall not be bound by this provision.”

Objections to certain declarations/reservations

SWEDEN (26 OCTOBER 2016)

‘The Republic of Fiji expresses that ‘[t]he Government of the Republic of Fiji does not recognize the definition of Torture as provided for in article 1 of the Convention therefore shall not be bound by these provisions. The definition of Torture in the Convention is only applicable to the extent as expressed in the Fijian Constitution’.

As regards the reservation to the definition of torture provided for in article 1 of the Convention, Sweden would like to state the following.

Reservations by which a State Party limits its responsibilities under the Convention by not considering itself bound by certain articles and by invoking general references to national law may cast doubts on the commitments of the reserving state to the object and purpose of the Convention and, moreover, contribute to undermining the basis of international treaty law.

It is in the common interest of states that treaties to which they have chosen to become parties also are respected, as to object and purpose, by all parties. The Government of Sweden therefore objects to the aforementioned reservation.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Sweden and the Republic of Fiji, without the Republic of Fiji benefiting from its aforementioned reservation.”

SWITZERLAND (27 FEBRUARY 2017)

“The Swiss Federal Council has examined the reservations made by the Government of the Republic of Fiji upon ratification of the Convention of 10 December 1984 against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.

The reservation made regarding the definition of torture contained in article 1 of the Convention, as well as the fact that in general it subordinates the definition of torture to the Constitution of the Republic of Fiji, constitutes a reservation of general scope that may raise doubts about the full commitment of the Republic of Fiji to the object and purpose of the Convention. The Swiss Federal Council notes that, according to article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention of 23 May 1969 on the Law of Treaties, no reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention is permissible.

It is in the common interest of States that the object and purpose of the instruments to which they choose to become parties be respected by all parties thereto, and that States be prepared to amend their legislation in order to fulfil their treaty obligations.

Consequently, the Swiss Federal Council objects to the reservation made by the Republic of Fiji concerning article 1 of the Convention. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention, in its entirety, between Switzerland and the Republic of Fiji.”

FINLAND (1 MARCH 2017)

“... The Government of Finland has carefully examined the contents of the reservations made by the Republic of Fiji concerning the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.

Regarding the reservation to Article 1 of the Convention, the Government of Finland notes that reservations by which a State Party limits its responsibilities under the Convention by invoking national law may cast doubts on the commitment of the reserving State to the object and purpose of the Convention. Such reservations are also subject to the general principle of treaty law according to which a party may not invoke the provisions of its domestic law as justification for a failure to perform its treaty obligations.

In view of the Government of Finland, the reservation made by Fiji to Article 1 of the Convention is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention. According to Article 19 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties and customary international law, such reservations shall not be permitted.

Therefore, the Government of Finland objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Republic of Fiji. This objection does not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Finland and the Republic of Fiji. The Convention will thus become operative between the two States without the Republic of Fiji benefiting from the aforementioned reservation ... ”

IRELAND (9 MARCH 2017)

“The Government of Ireland welcomes the ratification by the Republic of Fiji of the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman and Degrading Treatment or Punishment (1984) on 14 March 2016.

The Government of Ireland has examined the reservation to Article 1 made by the Government of the Republic of Fiji upon ratification.

The Government of Ireland considers that a reservation which consists of a general reference to the Constitution of the reserving State and which does not clearly specify the extent of the derogation from the provision of the Convention may cast doubts on the commitment of the reserving state to fulfil its obligations under the Convention.

The Government of Ireland is furthermore of the view that such a reservation may undermine the basis of international treaty law and is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention. The Government of Ireland recalls that under international treaty law a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

The Government of Ireland therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Government of the Republic of Fiji to Article 1 of the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Ireland and the Republic of Fiji.”

NETHERLANDS (13 MARCH 2017)

“The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands has carefully examined the reservations made by Fiji upon ratification of the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.

With respect to the reservation to Article 1 of the Convention, the Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands notes that Fiji does not consider itself bound by the definition of torture contained therein and that it considers this definition only to be applicable to the extent as expressed in the Fijian Constitution.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands considers that such a reservation, which seeks to limit the responsibilities of the reserving State under the Convention by invoking provisions of its domestic law, is likely to deprive the provisions of the Convention of their effect and therefore must be regarded as incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands recalls that according to customary international law, as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, reservations incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands therefore objects to the reservation of Fiji to Article 1 of the Convention.

This objection does not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Kingdom of the Netherlands and Fiji.”

UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND NORTHERN IRELAND (15 MARCH 2017)

“The United Kingdom Mission to the United Nations in New York [. . .] wishes to lodge an objection to one of the reservations made by Fiji upon accession to the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman and Degrading Treatment.

The reservation is as follows:

Reservation “The Government of the Republic of Fiji does not recognize the definition of Torture as provided for in article 1 of the Convention therefore shall not be bound by these provisions. The definition of Torture in the Convention is only applicable to the extent as expressed in the Fijian Constitution.”

The Government of the United Kingdom considers that the effect of the reservation is to exclude or modify the definition of torture, which is incompatible with the object and purpose of the treaty.

Further, the Government of the United Kingdom note that a reservation which consists of a general reference to a system of law without specifying its contents does not clearly define for the other States Parties to the Convention the extent to which the reserving State has accepted the obligations of the Convention. The Government of the United Kingdom therefore object to the aforesaid reservation.”

AUSTRIA (16 MARCH 2017)

“The Government of Austria has examined the reservation made by the Republic of Fiji upon ratification of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.

Austria considers that by recognizing the definition of torture according to Article 1 of the Convention only to the extent as expressed in the Fijian Constitution Fiji has made a reservation of a general and indeterminate scope. This reservation does not clearly define for the other States Parties to the Convention the extent to which the reserving State has accepted the obligations of the Convention.

Austria therefore considers the reservation to be incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention and objects to it.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Republic of Austria and the Republic of Fiji.”

GERMANY (16 MARCH 2017)

“The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany has examined the reservation made by the Republic of Fiji upon its ratification of ... the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment of 10 December 1984 with respect to Article 1 thereof.

The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany considers that the reservation to Article 1 makes the application of the Convention conditional on a definition contained in the national Constitution. The reservation is of a general and indeterminate nature and raises doubts as to the extent of the Republic of Fiji’s commitment to fulfil its obligations under the Convention. In the opinion of the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany such a reservation is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention. The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany therefore objects to this reservation as being impermissible.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Federal Republic of Germany and the Republic of Fiji.”

PORTUGAL (21 MARCH 2017)

“The Government of the Portuguese Republic has examined the contents of the reservations made by the Republic of Fiji upon ratification of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.

The Government of the Portuguese Republic considers that the reservation made upon ratification regarding Article 1 is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention.

The Government of the Portuguese Republic considers that reservations by which a State limits its responsibilities under the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment by not recognizing the definition of torture and invoking domestic law raises doubts as to the commitment of the reserving State to the object and purpose of the Convention, as the reservation is likely to deprive the provisions of the Convention of their effect and are contrary to the object and purpose thereof.

The Government of the Portuguese Republic recalls that according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted. The Government of the Portuguese Republic thus objects to this reservation.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Portuguese Republic and the Republic of Fiji.”

ITALY (23 MARCH 2017)

“The Government of the Italian Republic welcomes the ratification by the Republic of Fiji of the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman and Degrading Treatment or Punishment on 14 March 2016.

The Government of the Italian Republic has carefully examined the reservation made by the Republic of Fiji to Article 1 of the Convention.

The Italian Government considers that, by declaring not to recognize the definition of Torture as provided for in Article 1 of the Convention, and to only accept the definition of Torture as expressed in the Fijian Constitution, the Republic of Fiji has made a reservation of a general and indeterminate scope. As such the reservation introduces an element of uncertainty for the other States Parties to the Convention as to how the reserving State intends to implement the obligations of the Convention.

The Italian Republic considers that the reservation made by the Republic of Fiji regarding Article 1 of the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman and Degrading Treatment or Punishment is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention and therefore objects to it.

This objection nonetheless shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Republic of Fiji and the Italian Republic.”

PERU (12 APRIL 2017)

“The Government of the Republic of Peru has examined the contents of the reservation made by the Government of the Republic of Fiji to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, adopted in New York on 10 December 1984.

In this regard, the Government of the Republic of Peru considers that the reservation concerning article 1 may be incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention, as invoking norms of internal law creates ambiguity concerning the commitments of the State with regard to the provisions of the Convention.

Furthermore, the reservation made by the Government of the Republic of Fiji is unacceptable under public international law, as pursuant to article 27 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties of 1969 a State party may not invoke the provisions of its internal law as justification for its failure to perform a treaty.

In light of the foregoing, the Government of the Republic of Peru objects to the reservation made by the Republic of Fiji concerning article 1 of the Convention.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Republic of Peru and the Republic of Fiji, without the Republic of Fiji benefitting from the abovementioned reservation.”

NORWAY (13 APRIL 2017)

“The Government of Norway has examined the reservation made by the Government of the Republic of Fiji in relation to article 1 of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, in which the Government of the Republic of Fiji declares: ‘The Government of the Republic of Fiji does not recognize the definition of Torture as provided for in article 1 of the Convention therefore shall not be bound by these provisions. The definition of Torture in the Convention is only applicable to the extent as expressed in the Fijian Constitution.’

By declaring itself not bound by an essential provision of the Convention and invoking general reference to the national Constitution without further description of its content, the Republic of Fiji exempts the other States Parties to the Convention from the possibility of assessing the full effects of the reservation. The Government of Norway is of the view that the reservation casts doubts as to the full commitment of the Government of the Republic of Fiji to the object and purpose of the Convention. Furthermore, such a reservation may contribute to undermining the basis of international treaty law.

It is in the common interest of States that treaties to which they have chosen to become Parties are respected, as to their object and purpose, by all Parties. The Government of Norway therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Kingdom of Norway and the Republic of Fiji. The Convention thus becomes operative between the Kingdom of Norway and the Republic of Fiji without the Republic of Fiji benefiting from the aforesaid reservation.”

LATVIA (17 APRIL 2017)

“The Government of the Republic of Latvia has carefully examined the reservations made by the Republic of Fiji upon ratification of the Convention against Torture and Other [Cruel,] Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.

The Republic of Latvia considers that the definition of torture as expressed in Article 1 of the Convention forms the very basis of the Convention and thereof International Human Rights Law, thus no derogations from it can be made.

Therefore, the Government of the Republic of Latvia considers that [the] reservation made by the Republic of Fiji seeks to limit the responsibilities of the reserving State under the Convention by invoking provisions of its domestic law and are likely to deprive the provisions of the Convention of their effect and, hence, must be regarded as incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention against Torture and Other [Cruel,] Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.

Thus, the Republic of Latvia considers that general reservation to Article 1 of the Convention cannot be considered in line with [the] object and purpose of the Convention.

Consequently, the Government of the Republic of Latvia objects to the reservation made by the Republic of Fiji concerning Article 1 of the Convention. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention, in its entirety, between the Republic of Latvia and the Republic of Fiji.”

DECLARATION UPON RATIFICATION, FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY (1 OCTOBER 1990)

Article 3

“This provision prohibits the transfer of a person directly to a State where this person is exposed to a concrete danger of being subjected to torture. In the opinion of the Federal Republic of Germany, article 3 as well as the other provisions of the Convention exclusively establish State obligations that are met by the Federal Republic of Germany in conformity with the provisions of its domestic law which is in accordance with the Convention.”

DECLARATIONS, FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY (19 OCTOBER 2001)

Article 21

“In accordance with article 21 (1) of the Convention, the Federal Republic of Germany declares that it recognizes the competence of the Committee against Torture to receive and consider communications to the effect that a State Party claims that another State Party is not fulfilling its obligations under the Convention.”

Article 22

“In accordance with article 22 (1) of the Convention, the Federal Republic of Germany declares that it recognizes the competence of the Committee against Torture to receive and consider communications from or on behalf of individuals subject to its jurisdiction who claim to be victims of a violation by the Federal Republic of Germany of the provisions of the Convention.”

Objections to certain reservations, German Democratic Republic

FRANCE (23 JUNE 1988)

“France makes an objection to [the declaration] which it considers contrary with the object and purpose of the Convention.

The said objection is not an obstacle to the entry into force of the said Convention between France and the German Democratic Republic.”

LUXEMBOURG (9 SEPTEMBER 1988)

“The Grand Duchy of Luxembourg objects to this declaration, which it deems to be a reservation the effect of which would be to inhibit activities of the Committee in a manner incompatible with the purpose and the goal of the Convention.

The present objection does not constitute an obstacle to the entry into force of the said Convention between the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg and the German Democratic Republic.”

SWEDEN (28 SEPTEMBER 1988)

“According to article 2, paragraph 1 (d) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties a unilateral statement, whereby a State e.g. when ratifying a treaty purports to exclude the legal effect of certain provisions of the Treaty in their application, is regarded as a reservation. Thus, such unilateral statements are considered as reservations regardless of their name or phrase. The Government of Sweden has come to the conclusion that the declaration made by the German Democratic Republic is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention and therefore is invalid according to article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties. For this reason the Government of Sweden objects to this declaration.”

AUSTRIA (29 SEPTEMBER 1988)

“The Declaration [. . .] cannot alter or modify, in any respect, the obligations arising from that Convention for all States Parties thereto.”

DENMARK (29 SEPTEMBER 1988)

“The Government of Denmark hereby enters its formal objection to [the declaration] which it considers to be a unilateral statement with the purpose of modifying the legal effect of certain provisions of the Convention against Torture, and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment in their application to the German Democratic Republic. It is the position of the Government of Denmark that the said declaration has no legal basis in the Convention or in international treaty law.

This objection is not an obstacle to the entry into force of the said Convention between Denmark and the German Democratic Republic.”

NORWAY (29 SEPTEMBER 1988)

“The Government of Norway cannot accept this declaration entered by the German Democratic Republic. The Government of Norway considers that any such declaration is without legal effect, and cannot in any manner diminish the obligation of a Government to contribute to the costs of the Committee in conformity with the provisions of the Convention.”

CANADA (5 OCTOBER 1988)

“The Government of Canada considers that this declaration is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention against Torture, and thus inadmissible under article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties. Through its functions and its activities, the Committee against Torture plays an essential role in the execution of the obligations of States parties to the Convention against Torture. Any restriction whose effect is to hamper the activities of the Committee would thus be incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention.”

GREECE (6 OCTOBER 1988)

“The Hellenic Republic raises an objection to this declaration, which it considers to be in violation of article 19, paragraph (b), of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties. The Convention against Torture expressly sets forth in article 28, paragraph 1, and article 30, paragraph 2, the reservations which may be made. The declaration of the German Democratic Republic is not, however, in conformity with these specified reservations.

This objection does not preclude the entry into force of the said Convention as between the Hellenic Republic and the German Democratic Republic.”

SPAIN (6 OCTOBER 1988)

“... The Government of the Kingdom of Spain feels that such a reservation is a violation of article 19, paragraph (b), of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties of 23 May 1969, because the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment sets forth, in article 28, paragraph 1, and article 30, paragraph 2, the only reservations that may be made to the Convention, and the above-mentioned reservation of the German Democratic Republic does not conform to either of those reservations.”

SWITZERLAND (7 OCTOBER 1988)

“The Swiss Government objects to the reservation by the German Democratic Republic to the effect that that State will bear its share only of those expenses in accordance with article 17, paragraph 7, and article 18, paragraph 5, of the Convention arising from activities under the competence of the Committee as recognized by the German Democratic Republic. That reservation is contrary to the purpose and aims of the Convention which are, through the Committee’s activities, to encourage respect for a vitally important human right and to enhance the effectiveness of the struggle against torture the world over. This objection does not have the effect of preventing the Convention from entering into force between the Swiss Confederation and the German Democratic Republic.”

UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND NORTHERN IRELAND (8 DECEMBER 1988)

“The Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland has taken note of the reservations formulated by the Government of the German Democratic Republic pursuant to article 28, paragraph 1, and article 30, paragraph 2, respectively, and the declaration made by the German Democratic Republic with reference to article 17, paragraph 7, and article 18, paragraph 5. It does not regard the said declaration as affecting in any way the obligations of the German Democratic Republic as a State Party to the Convention (including the obligations to meet its share of the expenses of the Committee on Torture as apportioned by the first meeting of the States Parties held on 26 November 1987 or any subsequent such meetings) and do not accordingly raise objections to it. It reserves the rights of the United Kingdom in their entirety in the event that the said declaration should at any future time be claimed to affect the obligations of the German Democratic Republic as aforesaid.”

NETHERLANDS (21 DECEMBER 1988)

“This declaration, clearly a reservation according to article 2, paragraph 1, under (d), of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, not only “purports to exclude or modify the legal effect” of articles 17, paragraph 7, and 18, paragraph 5, of the present Convention in their application to the German Democratic Republic itself, but it would also affect the obligations of the other States Parties which would have to pay additionally in order to ensure the proper functioning of the Committee Against Torture. For this reason the reservation is not acceptable to the Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands.”

ITALY (12 JANUARY 1989)

“The Convention authorizes only the reservations indicated in article 28 (1) and 30 (2). The reservation made by the German Democratic Republic is not therefore admissible under the terms of article 19 (b) of the 1969 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties.”

PORTUGAL (9 FEBRUARY 1989)

“... The Government of Portugal considers that this declaration is incompatible with the object and purpose of the present Convention. This objection does not constitute an obstacle to the entry into force of the Convention between Portugal and G.D.R.”

AUSTRALIA (8 AUGUST 1989)

“The Government of Australia considers that this declaration is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention and, accordingly, hereby conveys Australia’s objection to the declaration.”

FINLAND (20 OCTOBER 1989)

“... The Government of Finland considers that any such declaration is without legal effect, and cannot in any manner diminish the obligation of a Government to contribute to the costs of the Committee in conformity with the provisions of the Convention.”

NEW ZEALAND (10 DECEMBER 1989)

“... The Government of New Zealand considers that this declaration is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention. This objection does not constitute an obstacle to the entry into force of the Convention between New Zealand and the German Democratic Republic.”

GHANA

DECLARATIONS UPON RATIFICATION (7 SEPTEMBER 2000)

Articles 21 and 22

“The Government of the Republic of Ghana recognises the competence of the Committee Against Torture to consider complaints brought by or against the Republic in respect of another State Party which has made a Declaration recognising the competence of the Committee as well as individuals subject to the jurisdiction of the Republic who claim to be victims of any violations by the Republic of the provisions of the said Convention.

The Government of the Republic of Ghana interprets Article 21 and Article 22 as giving the said Committee the competence to receive and consider complaints in respect of matters occurring after the said Convention had entered into force for Ghana and shall not apply to decisions, acts, omissions or events relating to matters, events, omissions, acts or developments occurring before Ghana becomes a party.”

Article 30

“[The Government of Ghana declares] in accordance with Article 30 (2) of the said Convention that the submission under Article 30 (1) to arbitration or the International Court of Justice of disputes between State Parties relating to the interpretation or application of the said Convention shall be by the consent of ALL the Parties concerned and not by one or more of the Parties concerned.”

GREECE

DECLARATIONS UPON RATIFICATION (6 OCTOBER 1988)

Article 21

“The Hellenic Republic declares, pursuant to article 21, paragraph 1, of the Convention, that it recognizes the competence of the Committee against Torture to receive and consider communications to the effect that a State Party claims that another State Party is not fulfilling its obligations under the Convention.”

Article 22

“The Hellenic Republic declares, pursuant to article 22, paragraph 1, of the Convention, that it recognizes the competence of the Committee against Torture to receive and consider communications from or on behalf of individuals subject to its jurisdiction who claims to be victims of a violation by a State Party of the provisions of the Convention.”

HOLY SEE

DECLARATION UPON ACCESSION (26 JUNE 2002)

“The Holy See considers the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment a valid and suitable instrument for fighting against acts that constitute a serious offence against the dignity of the human person. In recent times the Catholic Church has consistently pronounced itself in favour of unconditional respect for life itself and unequivocally condemned “whatever violates the integrity of the human person, such as mutilation, torments inflicted on body or mind, attempts to coerce the will itself" (Second Vatican Council, Pastoral Constitution Gaudium et spes, 7 December 1965).

The law of the Church (Code of Canon Law, 1981) and its catechism (Catechism of the Catholic Church, 1987) enumerate and clearly identify forms of behaviour that can harm the bodily or mental integrity of the individual, condemn their perpetrators and call for the abolition of such acts. On 14 January 1978, Pope Paul VI, in his last address to the diplomatic corps, after referring to the torture and mistreatment practised in various countries against individuals, concluded as follows: "How could the Church fail to take up a stern stand . . . with regard to torture and to similar acts of violence inflicted on the human person?" Pope John Paul II, for his part, has not failed to affirm that "torture must be called by its proper name" (message for the celebration of the World Day of Peace, 1 January 1980). He has expressed his deep compassion for the victims of torture (World Congress on Pastoral Ministry for Human Rights, Rome, 4 July 1998), and in particular for tortured women (message to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, 1 March 1993). In this spirit the Holy See wishes to lend its moral support and collaboration to the international community, so as to contribute to the elimination of recourse to torture, which is inadmissible and inhuman.

The Holy See, in becoming a party to the Convention on behalf of the Vatican City State, undertakes to apply it insofar as it is compatible, in practice, with the peculiar nature of that State."

Article 30

"The Government of the Lao People's Democratic Republic does not consider itself bound by the provisions of Article 30, paragraph 1, to refer any dispute concerning the interpretation and application of the Convention to the International Court of Justice."

DECLARATION UPON RATIFICATION (26 SEPTEMBER 2012)

Article 1

"It is the understanding of the Government of the Lao People's Democratic Republic that the term 'torture' in Article 1, paragraph 1, of the Convention means torture as defined in both national law and international law"

Article 8

"The Government of the Lao People's Democratic Republic declares that, pursuant to Article 8, paragraph 2 of the Convention it makes extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty. Therefore, it does not consider the Convention as the legal basis for extradition in respect of the offences set forth therein. It further declares that bilateral agreements will be the basis for extradition as between the Lao People's Democratic Republic and other States Parties in respect of any offences."

Objections to certain reservations/declarations

PORTUGAL (13 SEPTEMBER 2013)

"The Government of the Portuguese Republic has examined the reservations and declaration made by the Lao People's Democratic Republic on ratification of the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, New York, 10 December 1984.

The Government of the Portuguese Republic considers that the declaration made by the Lao People's Democratic Republic to Article 1 of the Convention, insofar as it refers to the national law of the Lao People's Democratic Republic, constitutes in substance a reservation of general scope, which does not specify the extent of the derogation and is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention.

The Government of the Portuguese Republic underlines that according to Customary International Law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted, and recalls that it is in the common interest of all States that Treaties to which they have chosen to become parties are respected as to their object and purpose by all parties, and that States are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under the Treaties.

The Government of the Portuguese Republic therefore objects to the aforesaid declaration made by the Government of the Lao People's Democratic Republic of the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, New York, 10 December 1984.

The present objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Portuguese Republic and the Lao People's Democratic Republic."

IRELAND (18 SEPTEMBER 2013)

- “1. The Government of Ireland has examined the reservations and declarations made by the Lao People’s Democratic Republic upon ratification of the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman and Degrading Treatment or Punishment (1984), made on 26 September 2012.
2. The Government of Ireland is of the view that this declaration in substance constitutes a reservation limiting the scope of the Convention.
3. The Government of Ireland considers that a reservation which consists of a general reference to domestic laws of the reserving State and which does not clearly specify the extent of the derogation from the provision of the Convention may cast doubts on the commitment of the reserving state to fulfil its obligations under the Convention.
4. The Government of Ireland is furthermore of the view that such a reservation may undermine the basis of international treaty law and is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Covenant. The Government of Ireland recalls that according to Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Covenant shall not be permitted.
5. The Government of Ireland therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Lao People’s Democratic Republic to Article 1 (1) of the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman and Degrading Treatment or Punishment.
6. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Ireland and the Lao People’s Democratic Republic.”

NETHERLANDS (19 SEPTEMBER 2013)

“The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands has carefully examined the reservations and the declarations made by the Lao People’s Democratic Republic upon ratification of the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands considers that the declaration made by the Lao People’s Democratic Republic regarding Article 1 of the Convention in substance constitutes a reservation limiting the scope of the Convention.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands considers that with this reservation the application of the Convention is made subject to national legislation in force in the Lao People’s Democratic Republic.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands considers that reservations of this kind must be regarded as incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention and would recall that, according to Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, reservations incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands therefore objects to the reservation of the Lao People’s Democratic Republic to Article 1 of the Convention. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Lao People’s Democratic Republic.”

FINLAND (20 SEPTEMBER 2013)

“The Government of Finland has carefully examined the contents of the declaration [made by the Lao People’s Democratic Republic relating to article 1, paragraph 1 of the Convention] and considers that it amounts to a reservation as it seems to modify the obligations of the Lao People’s Democratic Republic under the said article.

A reservation which consists of a general reference to national law without specifying its contents does not clearly define for other Parties of the Convention the extent to which the reserving State commits itself to the Convention and therefore, raises doubts as to the commitment of the reserving State to fulfil its obligations under the Convention. Such a reservation is also subject to the general principle of treaty interpretation according to which a party may not invoke the provisions of its domestic law as justification for a failure to perform its treaty obligations.

It is in the common interest of States that treaties to which they have chosen to become parties are respected as to their object and purpose, and that States are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under the treaties.

The Government of Finland wishes to recall that according to customary international law, as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the treaty is not permitted. In its present formulation, the reservation to article 1, paragraph 1, is in contradiction with the object and purpose of the Convention.

Therefore, the Government of Finland objects to the aforesaid reservation to article 1, paragraph 1, made by the Lao People's Democratic Republic. This objection does not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Finland and the Lao People's Democratic Republic. The Convention will thus become operative between the two States without the Lao People's Democratic Republic benefitting from this reservation."

AUSTRIA (23 SEPTEMBER 2013)

"The Government of Austria has examined the declaration made by the Lao People's Democratic Republic upon ratification of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment. In Austria's view the declaration amounts to a reservation. The Government of Austria considers that by the reference to national law regarding Art. 1 of the Convention the Lao People's Democratic Republic has made a reservation of general and indeterminate scope. This reservation does not clearly define for the other States Parties to the Convention the extent to which the reserving State has accepted the obligations of the Convention. The Government of Austria therefore considers the reservation to Art. 1 incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention and objects to it. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Austria and the Lao People's Democratic Republic."

GREECE (23 SEPTEMBER 2013)

"The Government of the Hellenic Republic has examined the reservations and declarations formulated by the Lao People's Democratic Republic upon ratification of the 1984 Convention Against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.

The Government of the Hellenic Republic considers that the declaration formulated by the Lao People's Democratic Republic regarding Article 1 paragraph 1 of the above Convention constitutes in substance a reservation limiting the scope of the Convention to the extent that with this reservation the application of the Convention is made subject to national legislation in force in the Lao People's Democratic Republic.

The Government of the Hellenic Republic considers that reservations of this kind must be regarded as incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention and would like to recall that according to Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, reservations incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted.

For these reasons the Government of the Hellenic Republic objects to the above mentioned reservation formulated by the Lao People's Democratic Republic.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Greece and the Lao People's Democratic Republic."

ITALY (23 SEPTEMBER 2018)

“The Government of Italy has examined the reservations and declarations formulated by the Lao People’s Democratic Republic upon ratification of the 1984 Convention Against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment of Punishment.

The Government of Italy considers that the declaration formulated by the Lao People’s Democratic Republic regarding Article 1, paragraph 1, of the above Convention constitutes in substance a reservation limiting the scope of the Convention to the extent that with this reservation the application of the Convention is made subject to national legislation in force in the Lao People’s Democratic Republic.

The Government of Italy considers that reservations of this kind must be regarded as incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention and would like to recall that according to Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, reservations incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted.

For these reasons the Government of Italy objects to the above mentioned reservation formulated by the Lao People’s Democratic Republic.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Italy and the Lao People’s Democratic Republic.”

SWEDEN (23 JUNE 2011)

“The Government of Sweden recalls that the designation assigned to a statement whereby the legal effect of certain provisions of a treaty is excluded or modified does not determine its status as a reservation to the treaty. The Government of Sweden considers that the declaration made by the Lao People’s Democratic Republic, according to which the term ‘torture’ in Article 1 paragraph 1 of the Convention shall mean torture as defined in both national law and international law, in substance constitutes a reservation modifying the scope of the Convention.

The Government of Sweden notes that this reservation implies that the application of the Convention is made subject to a general reservation referring to existing legislation in the Lao People’s Democratic Republic. The Government of Sweden is of the view that such a reservation, which does not clearly specify the extent of the derogation, raises serious doubt as to the commitment of the Lao People’s Democratic Republic to the object and purpose of the Convention. According to customary international law, as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted. It is in the common interest of States that treaties to which they have chosen to become parties are respected as to their object and purpose, by all parties, and that States are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under the treaties.

The Government of Sweden therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Lao People’s Democratic Republic to the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and considers the reservation null and void.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Lao People’s Democratic Republic and Sweden. The Convention enters into force in its entirety between the Lao People’s Democratic Republic and Sweden, without the Lao People’s Democratic Republic benefiting from its reservation.”

CZECH REPUBLIC (25 SEPTEMBER 2013)

“The Government of the Czech Republic has examined the reservations and declarations made by the Lao People’s Democratic Republic on ratification of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (hereinafter as the “Convention”).

The Government of the Czech Republic is of the view that the declaration made by the Lao People's Democratic Republic with regard to the definition of torture in Article 1, paragraph 1, of the Convention is of general and vague nature and, therefore, its character and scope cannot be properly assessed. The declaration leaves open the question whether it amounts to a reservation and whether such a reservation is compatible with the object and purpose of the Convention, i.e., to what extent the Lao People's Democratic Republic commits itself to the binding definition of torture as contained in Article 1, paragraph 1, of the Convention, which forms part of the object and purpose of the Convention and cannot be excluded or modified by the definitions of torture contained in national law of the States Parties to the Convention.

The Government of the Czech Republic wishes to recall that reservations may not be general or vague, since such reservations, without indicating in precise terms their scope, make it impossible to assess whether or not they are compatible with the object and purpose of the treaty. Therefore, the Government of the Czech Republic objects to the aforesaid declaration made by the Government of the Lao People's Democratic Republic. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Lao People's Democratic Republic and the Czech Republic, without the Lao People's Democratic Republic benefiting from its declaration.”

SEPTEMBER 2013)

“The Government of the United Kingdom have examined the Declaration made by the Government of the Lao People's Democratic Republic in respect of Article 1, paragraph 1 of the Convention: ‘It is the understanding of the Government of the Lao People's Democratic Republic that the term ‘torture’ in Article 1, paragraph 1 of the Convention means torture as defined in both national law and international law.’

The Government of the United Kingdom considers that the Declaration is capable of being understood as an attempt by the Government of the Lao People's Democratic Republic to exclude or modify the definition of torture set out in under Article 1 of the Convention. To the extent that the Declaration is intended to exclude or modify the definition of torture under Article 1 of the Convention, and is accordingly a reservation, the United Kingdom objects to the said reservation.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the Lao People's Democratic Republic.”

GERMANY (25 SEPTEMBER 2013)

“The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany has carefully examined the declaration made by the Lao People's Democratic Republic upon its ratification of the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment of 10 December 1984 with respect to Article 1, paragraph 1, thereof.

The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany considers that the declaration, notwithstanding its designation, amounts to a reservation which is meant to limit the scope of application of the Convention. A reservation which makes the application of the Convention conditional on a definition contained in national laws is of a general and indeterminate nature and raises doubts as to the extent of the State's commitment to fulfil its obligations under the Convention. In the opinion of the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany such a reservation is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention.

The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany therefore objects to this reservation as being impermissible.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Federal Republic of Germany and the Lao People's Democratic Republic.”

NORWAY (7 OCTOBER 2013)

“The Government of Norway has examined the declarations contained in the instrument of ratification to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (New York, 10 December 1984), made by the Lao People’s Democratic Republic on 26 September 2012.

The Government of Norway is of the view that the declaration with regard to Article 1, paragraph 1, of the Convention in substance constitutes a general reservation aimed at limiting the scope of the Convention with reference to national law, without identifying the provisions in question. The Government of Norway accordingly considers that the reservation casts serious doubts on the commitment of the Government of the Lao People’s Democratic Republic to the object and purpose of the Convention and therefore objects to the said reservation.

This objection does not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Kingdom of Norway and the Lao People’s Republic. The Convention thus becomes operative between the Kingdom of Norway and the Lao People’s Democratic Republic without the Lao People’s Democratic Republic benefiting from the aforesaid reservation.”

Article 20

“The Mauritanian Government does not recognize the competence granted to the Committee in article 20 of the Convention, which provides as follows:

1. If the Committee receives reliable information which appears to it to contain well-founded indications that torture is being systematically practiced in the territory of a State Party, the Committee shall invite that State Party to cooperate in the examination of the information and to this end to submit observations with regard to the information concerned.
2. Taking into account any observations which may have been submitted by the State Party concerned, as well as any other relevant information available to it, the Committee may, if it decides that this is warranted, designate one or more of its members to make a confidential inquiry and to report to the Committee urgently.
3. If an inquiry is made in accordance with paragraph 2 of this article, the Committee shall seek the cooperation of the State Party concerned. In agreement with that State Party, such an inquiry may include a visit to its territory.
4. After examining the findings of its member or members submitted in accordance with paragraph 2 of this article, the Committee shall transmit these findings to the State Party concerned together with any comments or suggestions which seem appropriate in view of the situation.
5. All the proceedings of the Committee referred to in paragraphs 1 to 4 of this article shall be confidential, and at all stages of the proceedings the cooperation of the State Party shall be sought. After such proceedings have been completed with regard to an inquiry made in accordance with paragraph 2, the Committee may, after consultations with the State Party concerned, decide to include a summary account of the results of the proceedings in its annual report made in accordance with article 24.”

DECLARATIONS UPON RATIFICATION (9 JULY 1986)

Article 21

“Norway recognizes the competence of the Committee to receive and consider communications to the effect that a State Party claims that another State Party is not fulfilling its obligations under this Convention.”

Article 22

“Norway recognizes the competence of the Committee to receive and consider communications from or on behalf of individuals subject to its jurisdiction who claim to be victims of a violation by a State Party of the provisions of the Convention.”

PAKISTAN

RESERVATION UPON SIGNATURE (17 APRIL 2008)

“The Government of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan reserves its right to attach appropriate reservations, make declarations and state its understanding in respect of various provisions of the Convention at the time of ratification.”

DECLARATIONS/RESERVATIONS UPON RATIFICATION (23 JUNE 2010)

[Article 3

“The Government of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan declares the provisions of Article 3 shall be so applied as to be in conformity with the provisions of its laws relating to extradition and foreigners.”] withdrawn on 20 September 2011

[Article 4, 6, 12, 13 and 16

“The Government of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan declares that the provisions of these Articles shall be so applied to the extent that they are not repugnant to the Provisions of the Constitution of Pakistan and the Sharia laws.”] withdrawn on 20 September 2011

Article 8

“The Government of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan declares that pursuant to Article 8, paragraph 2, of the Convention, it does not take this Convention as the legal basis for cooperation on extradition with other States Parties.”

Article 20

“In accordance with Article 28, paragraph 1, of the Convention, the Government of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan hereby declares that it does not recognize the competence of the Committee provided for in Article 20.”

Article 30

“The Government of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan does not consider itself bound by Article 30, Paragraph 1 of the Convention.”

Objections to certain declarations/reservations

POLAND (3 JUNE 2011)

“The Government of the Republic of Poland has examined the reservations made by the Islamic Republic of Pakistan upon accession to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment adopted by General Assembly of the United Nations on 10 December 1984, with regard to Articles 3, 4, 6, 8, 12, 13, 16, 28 and 30 of the Convention.

The Government of the Republic of Poland is of the view that the implementation of the reservations aiming at the elimination of the duty to fulfill by the reserving State vital obligations enshrined in the Convention made by the Islamic Republic of Pakistan with regard to Articles 3, 4, 6, 12, 13 and 16 of the Convention would make it impossible to attain the objective of the Convention, which is to protect entities from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment and to make the struggle against such violations of human rights more effective. In consequence, according to Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, which is a treaty and customary norm, these reservations shall not be permitted as incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention.

In order to justify its will to exclude the legal consequences of certain provisions of the Convention, the Islamic Republic of Pakistan raised in the reservations with regard to Articles 3, 4, 6, 12, 13 and 16 the inconsistency of these provisions with its domestic legislation. The Government of the Republic of Poland recalls that, according to Article 27 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, which is a treaty and customary norm, the State Party to an international agreement may not invoke the provisions of its internal law as justification for its failure to perform a treaty.

The Islamic Republic of Pakistan refers in the above-mentioned reservations to the Sharia laws and to its domestic legislation as possibly affecting the application of the Convention. Nonetheless it does specify the exact content of these laws and legislation. As a result, it is impossible to clearly define the extent to which the reserving State has accepted the obligations of the Convention. Therefore, the Government of the Republic of Poland objects to the reservations made by the Islamic Republic of Pakistan upon accession to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment adopted by the General Assembly of the United Nations on 10 December 1984, with regard to Articles 3, 4, 6, 12, 13 and 16.

This objection does not preclude the entry into force of the Covenant between the Republic of Poland and the Islamic Republic of Pakistan.”

CANADA (7 JUNE 2011)

“The Government of Canada has carefully examined the reservations made by the Government of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan upon ratification of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, in accordance with which the Government of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan declares that:

The provisions of Articles 4, 6, 12, 13 and 16 ‘shall be so applied to the extent that they are not repugnant to the Provisions of the Constitution of Pakistan and the Sharia laws’.

The Government of Canada considers that a reservation which consists of a general reference to national law or to the prescriptions of the Islamic Sharia constitutes, in reality, a reservation with a general, indeterminate scope. Such a reservation makes it impossible to identify the modifications to obligations under the Convention that it purports to introduce and impossible for the other States Parties to the Convention to know the extent to which Pakistan has accepted the obligations of the Convention, an uncertainty which is unacceptable, especially in the context of treaties related to human rights.

The Government of Canada notes that the above-mentioned reservations made by the Government of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, addressing many of the most essential provisions of the Convention, and aiming to exclude the obligations under those provisions, are incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention, and thus inadmissible under article 19(c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties. The Government of Canada therefore objects to the aforesaid reservations made by the Government of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan.

This objection does not preclude the entry into force in its entirety of the Convention between Canada and the Islamic Republic of Pakistan.”

CZECH REPUBLIC (20 JUNE 2011)

“The Czech Republic believes that the reservations of Pakistan made to Articles 3, 4, 6, 8, 12, 13 and 16 of the Convention, if put into practice, would result in restriction and weakening of the universal prohibition of torture. Such restriction or weakening is contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention. Furthermore, Pakistan supports reservations to Articles 4, 6, 12, 13 and 16 by references to its domestic law, which is, in the opinion of the Czech Republic, unacceptable under customary international law, as codified in Article 27 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties. Finally, the reservations to Articles 4, 6, 12, 13 and 16 that refer to the notions such as “Constitution of Pakistan” and “Sharia laws” and to Article 3 that refer to the notions such as “the provisions of its laws relating to extradition and foreigners”, without specifying its contents, do not clearly define for the other States Parties to the Convention the extent to which the reserving State has accepted the obligations under the Convention.

It is in the common interest of States that treaties to which they have chosen to become parties are respected as to their object and purpose, by all parties, and that States are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under the treaties. According to Article 28 paragraph 2 of the Convention and according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation that is incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted.

The Czech Republic, therefore, objects to the aforesaid reservations made by Pakistan to the Convention. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Czech Republic and Pakistan. The Convention enters into force in its entirety between the Czech Republic and Pakistan, without Pakistan benefiting from its reservation.”

GREECE (22 JUNE 2011)

“The Government of the Hellenic Republic considers that the reservation with respect to Article 3, a core provision of the Convention, which subjects its application to the laws of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan relating to extradition and foreigners without specifying their content, is incompatible with the object and purpose of the above Convention.

Moreover, the Government of the Hellenic Republic considers that the reservations with respect to Articles 4, 12, 13 and 16, which contain a general reference to the Provisions of the Constitution of Pakistan and Sharia laws do not specify the extent of the derogation therefrom and, therefore, are incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention.

For those reasons the Government of the Hellenic Republic objects to the abovementioned reservations formulated by the Islamic Republic of Pakistan.”

SWEDEN (22 JUNE 2011)

“The Government of Sweden is of the view that these reservations raise serious doubt as to the commitment of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan to the object and purpose of the Convention, as the reservations are likely to deprive the provisions of the Convention of their effect and are contrary to the object and purpose thereof.

The Government of Sweden would like to recall that, according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted. It is in the common interest of States that treaties to which they have chosen to become parties are respected as to their object and purpose, by all parties, and that States are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under the treaties.

The Government of Sweden therefore objects to the aforesaid reservations made by the Islamic Republic of Pakistan to the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Pakistan and Sweden. The Convention enters into force in its entirety between the two States, without Pakistan benefiting from these reservations.”

IRELAND (23 JUNE 2011)

“The Government of Ireland has examined the reservations made on 23 June 2010 by the Islamic Republic of Pakistan upon ratification of the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.

The Government of Ireland notes that the Islamic Republic of Pakistan subjects Articles 3, 4, 6, 12, 13 and 16 to the Constitution of Pakistan, its domestic law and/or Sharia law. The Government of Ireland is of the view that a reservation which consists of a general reference to the Constitution or the domestic law of the reserving State or to religious law, may cast doubt on the commitment of the reserving state to fulfill its obligations under the Convention. The Government of Ireland is of the view that such general reservations are incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention and may undermine the basis of international treaty law.

The Government of Ireland therefore objects to the reservations made by the Islamic Republic of Pakistan to Articles 3, 4, 6, 12, 13 and 16 of the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Ireland and the Islamic Republic of Pakistan.”

SLOVAKIA (23 JUNE 2011)

“The Slovak Republic has examined the reservations made by the Islamic Republic of Pakistan upon its ratification of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, of 10 December 1984, according to which:

“The Government of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan declares that the provisions of Article 3 shall be so applied as to be in conformity with the provisions of its laws relating to extradition and foreigners.

The Government of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan declares that pursuant to Article 8, paragraph 2, of the Convention, it does not take this Convention as the legal basis for cooperation on extradition with other States Parties.

The Government of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan declares that the provisions of these Articles [Article 4, 6, 12, 13, and 16] shall be so applied to the extent that they are not repugnant to the Provisions of the Constitution of Pakistan and the Sharia laws.

In accordance with Article 28, paragraph 1, of the Convention, the Government of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan hereby declares that it does not recognize the competence of the Committee provided for in Article 20.

The Government of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan does not consider itself bound by Article 30, paragraph 1 of the Convention.’

The Slovak Republic considers that with the reservations to Articles 4, 6, 12, 13 and 16 the application of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment is made subject to the Islamic Sharia law. Moreover it considers the reservations with respect to Article 3 of the Convention as incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention.

This makes it unclear to what extent the Islamic Republic of Pakistan considers itself bound by the obligations of the Convention as to its commitment to the object and purpose of the Convention.

It is in the common interest of States that all parties respect treaties to which they have chosen to become party, as to their object and purpose, and that States are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under the treaties.

The Slovak Republic recalls that the customary international law, as codified by the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, and in particular Article 19 (c), sets out that the reservation that is incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty is not permitted. The Slovak Republic therefore objects to the reservations made by the Islamic Republic of Pakistan to Articles 3, 4, 6, 12, 13 and 16 of the Convention.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Slovak Republic and the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, without the Islamic Republic of Pakistan benefiting from its reservations.”

AUSTRIA (24 JUNE 2011)

“The Government of Austria has examined the reservations made by the Islamic Republic of Pakistan upon ratification of the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment. The Government of Austria considers that in aiming to exclude the application of those provisions of the Convention which are deemed incompatible with the Constitution of Pakistan, Sharia laws and certain national laws, the Islamic Republic of Pakistan has made reservations of general and indeterminate scope. These reservations do not clearly define for the other States Parties to the Convention the extent to which the reserving State has accepted the obligations of the Convention. The Government of Austria therefore considers the reservations of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan to Articles 3, 4, 6, 12, 13 and 16 incompatible with the object and purpose of the Covenant and objects to them. These objections shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Austria and the Islamic Republic of Pakistan.”

FRANCE (27 JUNE 2011)

“The Government of the French Republic has considered the reservations made by the Islamic Republic of Pakistan upon its ratification of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment on 23 June 2010.

Concerning the reservations to articles 3, 4, 6, 12, 13 and 16, France considers that in seeking to exclude the application of provisions of the Convention, insofar as they might be contrary to or inconsistent with laws relating to extradition and foreigners, the Constitution of Pakistan and Sharia law, the Islamic Republic of Pakistan has made reservations of a general and indeterminate nature. Indeed, these reservations are vague since they do not specify which provisions of domestic law are affected. Thus, they do not allow other States Parties to appreciate the extent of the commitment of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, including the compatibility of the provisions with the object and purpose of the Convention.

The Government of the French Republic therefore objects to the reservations made by the Islamic Republic of Pakistan. However, this objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between France and Pakistan.”

AUSTRALIA (28 JUNE 2011)

“The Government of Australia has examined the reservation made by The Islamic Republic of Pakistan to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and now hereby objects to the same for and on behalf of Australia:

The Government of Australia considers that the reservations by the Islamic Republic of Pakistan are incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (the Convention).

The Government of Australia recalls that, according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty is not permitted.

It is in the common interest of States that treaties to which they have chosen to become party are respected, as to their object and purpose, by all parties and that States are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under the treaties.

Furthermore, the Government of Australia considers that The Islamic Republic of Pakistan, through its reservations, is purporting to make the application of the Convention subject to the provisions of general domestic law in force in The Islamic Republic of Pakistan. As a result, it is unclear to what extent The Islamic Republic of Pakistan considers itself bound by the obligations of the Convention and therefore raises concerns as to the commitment of The Islamic Republic of Pakistan to the object and purpose of the Convention.

The Government of Australia considers that the reservations to the Convention are subject to the general principle of treaty interpretation, pursuant to Article 27 of the Vienna Convention of the Law of Treaties, according to which a party may not invoke the provisions of its internal law as justification for its failure to perform a treaty.

For the above reasons, the Government of Australia objects to the aforesaid reservations made by The Islamic Republic of Pakistan to the Convention and expresses the hope that the Islamic Republic of Pakistan will withdraw its reservations.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Australia and The Islamic Republic of Pakistan.”

BELGIUM (28 JUNE 2011)

“Belgium has carefully examined the reservations made by Pakistan upon accession on 23 June 2010 to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.

The vagueness and general nature of the reservations made by Pakistan with respect to Articles 3, 4, 6, 12, 13 and 16 of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment may contribute to undermining the bases of international human rights treaties.

The reservations make the implementation of the Convention’s provisions contingent upon their compatibility with the Islamic Sharia and legislation in force in Pakistan. This creates uncertainty as to which of its obligations under the Convention Pakistan intends to observe and raises doubts as to Pakistan’s respect for the object and purpose of the Convention.

It is in the common interest for all parties to respect the treaties to which they have acceded and for States to be willing to enact such legislative amendments as may be necessary in order to fulfil their treaty obligations.

Belgium also notes that the reservations concern fundamental provisions of the Convention.

Consequently, Belgium considers the reservations to be incompatible with the object and purpose of that instrument.

Belgium notes that under customary international law, as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty is not permitted (article 19 (c)).

Furthermore, under Article 27 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a party may not invoke the provisions of its internal law as justification for its failure to perform a treaty.

Consequently, Belgium objects to the reservations formulated by Pakistan with respect to Articles 3, 4, 6, 12, 13 and 16 of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Kingdom of Belgium and Pakistan.”

DENMARK (28 JUNE 2011)

“The Government of the Kingdom of Denmark has examined the reservations made by the Government of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan upon ratification of the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.

The Government of Denmark considers, that the reservations made by the Islamic Republic of Pakistan to articles 3, 4, 6, 12, 13, and 16 of the Convention, which make the application of these essential obligations under the Convention subject to Sharia and/or constitutional and/or national law in force in the Islamic Republic of Pakistan, raise doubts as to what extent the Islamic Republic of Pakistan considers itself bound by the obligations of the treaty and concern as to the commitment of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan to the object and purpose of the Convention.

The Government of Denmark wishes to recall that, according to customary international law, as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, reservations incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

Consequently, the Government of Denmark considers the said reservations as incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention and accordingly inadmissible and without effect under international law.

The Government of Denmark therefore objects to the aforementioned reservations made by the Government of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan. This shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention in its entirety between the Islamic Republic of Pakistan and Denmark.

The Government of Denmark recommends the Government of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan to reconsider its reservations to the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.”

FINLAND (28 JUNE 2011)

“The Government of Finland welcomes the ratification of the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment by the Islamic Republic of Pakistan. The Government of Finland has carefully examined the content of the reservations relating to Articles 3, 4, 6, 8, 12, 13, 16, 28 and 30 of the Convention made by the Islamic Republic of Pakistan upon ratification.

The Government of Finland notes that the Islamic Republic of Pakistan reserves the right to apply the provisions of Article 3 so as to be in conformity with the provisions of its laws relating to extradition and foreigners, and the provisions of Articles 4, 6, 12, 13 and 16 to the extent that they are not repugnant to the provisions of the Constitution of Pakistan and the Sharia laws.

The Government of Finland notes that a reservation which consists of a general reference to national law without specifying its content does not clearly define to other Parties to the Convention the extent to which the reserving States commits itself to the Convention and creates serious doubts as to the commitment of the reserving State to fulfil its obligations under the Convention. Such reservations are, furthermore, subject to the general principle of treaty interpretation according to which a party may not invoke the provisions of its domestic law as justification for a failure to perform its treaty obligations.

The reservations to Articles 3, 4, 6, 12, 13 and 16 seeks to restrict essential obligations of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan under the Convention and raise serious doubts as to the commitment of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan to the object and purpose of the Convention. The Government of Finland wishes to recall that, according to Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties and customary international law, a reservation contrary to the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted. It is in the common interest of States that treaties to which they have chosen to become parties are respected as to their object and purpose and that States are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under the treaties.

The Government of Finland therefore objects to the reservations made by the Islamic Republic of Pakistan in respect of Articles 3, 4, 6, 12, 13 and 16 of the Convention. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Islamic Republic of Pakistan and Finland. The Convention will thus become operative between the two states without the Islamic Republic of Pakistan benefiting from its reservations.”

GERMANY (28 JUNE 2011)

“The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany has carefully examined the reservations made by the Islamic Republic of Pakistan on 23 June 2010 to Articles 3, 4, 6, 12, 13 and 16 of the Convention Against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment. The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany is of the opinion that these reservations subject the application of Articles 3, 4, 6, 12, 13 and 16, all of which are core provisions of the Convention, to a system of domestic norms without specifying the contents thereof, leaving it uncertain to which extent the Islamic Republic of Pakistan accepts to be bound by the obligations under the Convention and raising serious doubts as to its commitment to fulfil its obligations under the Convention. The reservations therefore are considered incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention and consequently impermissible under Art. 19 c of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties.

The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany therefore objects to the above-mentioned reservations as being incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Federal Republic of Germany and the Islamic Republic of Pakistan.”

HUNGARY (28 JUNE 2011)

“With regard to the reservations made by the Islamic Republic of Pakistan:

The Government of the Republic of Hungary has examined the reservations made by the Islamic Republic of Pakistan upon accession to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment adopted by General Assembly of the United Nations on 10 December 1984, with regard to Articles 3, 4, 6, 8, 12, 13, 16, 28 and 30 of the Convention.

The Government of the Republic of Hungary is of the view that the implementation of the reservations aiming at the elimination of the duty to fulfill by the reserving State vital obligations enshrined in the Convention made by the Islamic Republic of Pakistan with regard to Articles 3, 4, 6, 12, 13 and 16 of the Convention would make it impossible to attain the objective of the Convention, which is to protect entities from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment and to make the struggle against such violations of human rights more effective. In consequence, according to Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, which is a treaty and customary norm, these reservations shall not be permitted as they are incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention.

In order to justify its will to exclude the legal consequences of certain provisions of the Convention, the Islamic Republic of Pakistan raised in the reservations with regard to Articles 3, 4, 6, 12, 13 and 16 the inconsistency of these provisions with its domestic legislation. The Government of the Republic of Hungary recalls that, according to Article 27 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, which is a treaty and customary norm, the State Party to an international agreement may not invoke the provisions of its internal law as justification for its failure to perform a treaty.

The Islamic Republic of Pakistan refers in the above-mentioned reservations to the Sharia laws and to its domestic legislation as possibly affecting the application of the Convention. Nonetheless, it fails to specify the exact content of these laws and legislation. As a result, it is impossible to clearly define the extent to which the reserving State has accepted the obligations of the Convention.

Therefore, the Government of the Republic of Hungary objects to the reservations made by the Islamic Republic of Pakistan upon accession to the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment adopted by the General Assembly of the United Nations on 10 December 1984, with regard to Articles 3, 4, 6, 12, 13 and 16.

This objection does not preclude the entry into force of the [Convention] between the Republic of Hungary and the Islamic Republic of Pakistan.”

ITALY (28 JUNE 2011)

“The Government of Italy has examined the reservations made on 23 June 2010 by the Islamic Republic of Pakistan upon ratification of the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, regarding Articles 3, 4, 6, 12, 13 and 16 of the Convention.

The Government of Italy notes that the said articles of the Convention are being made subject to a general reservation referring to the contents of existing legislation in the Islamic Republic of Pakistan.

The Government of Italy is of the view that, in the absence of further clarification, these reservations raise doubts as to the commitment of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan as to the object and purpose of the Convention and would like to recall that, according to customary international law as codified by the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted. It is in the common interest of States that treaties to which they have chosen to become parties are respected as to their object and purpose by all Parties and that States are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under the treaties.

The Government of Italy, therefore, objects to the aforesaid reservations made by the Islamic Republic of Pakistan to the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Italy and the Islamic Republic of Pakistan.”

PORTUGAL (28 JUNE 2011)

“The Government of the Portuguese Republic has examined the reservations made by the Islamic Republic of Pakistan upon ratification of the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, New York, 10 December 1984.

The Government of the Portuguese Republic considers that the reservations made by the Islamic Republic of Pakistan to Articles 3, 4, 6, 12, 13 and 16 are reservations that seek to subject the application of the Convention to its Constitution, its domestic law or/and Sharia Law, limiting the scope of the Convention on an unilateral basis and contributing to undermining the basis of International Law.

The Government of the Portuguese Republic considers that reservations by which a State limits its responsibilities under the International Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, by invoking its Constitution, the domestic law or/and the Sharia Law raise serious doubts as to the commitment of the reserving State to the object and purpose of the Convention, as the reservations are likely to deprive the provisions of the Convention of their effect and are contrary to the object and purpose thereof.

It is in the common interest of all the States that Treaties to which they have chosen to become parties are respected as to their object and purpose by all parties and that States are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under the Treaties.

The Government of the Portuguese Republic recalls that, according to customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

The Government of the Portuguese Republic therefore objects to the aforesaid reservations made by the Government of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan to Articles 3, 4, 6, 12, 13 and 16 of the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, New York, 10 December 1984.

However, these objections shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Portuguese Republic and the Islamic Republic of Pakistan.”

SPAIN (28 JUNE 2011)

“The Government of the Kingdom of Spain has examined the reservations made by Pakistan upon its ratification of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, with regard to articles 3, 4, 6, 12, 13 and 16 of that international instrument.

The Government of the Kingdom of Spain considers that those articles refer to rights and guarantees that are essential for achieving the object and purpose of the Convention. As the reservations formulated by Pakistan make application of those articles of the Convention subject to their consistency with domestic law on extradition, with the Constitution and with Sharia laws, to which it refers in general terms without specifying their content, they make it impossible to determine the extent of Pakistan's commitment to achieving the object and purpose of the Convention. Furthermore, they violate the principle of international law, well established in practice, that a State cannot make compliance with international obligations that are assumed voluntarily subordinate to the application of the provisions of domestic law, whatever their nature. In no case may such reservations, as formulated, exclude the legal effects of obligations arising from the relevant provisions of the Convention.

Consequently, the Government of the Kingdom of Spain objects to the reservations made to articles 3, 4, 6, 12, 13 and 16 of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Kingdom of Spain and Pakistan.”

SWITZERLAND (28 JUNE 2011)

“The Swiss Federal Council has examined the reservations made by the Islamic Republic of Pakistan upon its accession to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment of 10 December 1984, with regard to articles 3, 4, 6, 12, 13 and 16.

The reservations to the articles, which refer to the provisions of domestic law and Islamic Sharia law, do not specify their scope and raise doubts about the ability of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan to honour its obligations as a party to the Convention.

Article 19 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties of 23 May 1969 prohibits any reservation that is incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty.

Consequently, the Swiss Federal Council objects to the aforesaid reservations made by the Islamic Republic of Pakistan to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment of 10 December 1984.

This objection does not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Switzerland and the Islamic Republic of Pakistan.”

UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND NORTHERN IRELAND (28
JUNE 2011)

“The Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland has examined the reservations made by the Government of Pakistan to the Convention [against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment] on 23 June 2010, which read:

1. Article 3 – The Government of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan declares that provisions of Article 3 shall be so applied as to be in conformity with the provisions of its laws relating to extradition and foreigners.
2. Article 8 – The Government of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan declares that pursuant to Article 8, paragraph 2, of the Convention, it does not take this Convention as the legal basis for cooperation on extradition with other States Parties.
3. Article 4, 6, 12, 13 and 16 – The Government of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan declares that the provisions of these Articles shall be so applied to the extent that they are not repugnant to the Provisions of the Constitution of Pakistan and the Sharia laws.
4. Article 28 – In accordance with Article 28, paragraph 1, of the Convention, the Government of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan hereby declares that it does not recognize the competence of the Committee provided for in Article 20.
5. Article 30 – The Government of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan does not consider itself bound by Article 30, paragraph 1 of the Convention.

In the view of the United Kingdom a reservation should clearly define for the other States Parties to the Convention the extent to which the reserving State has accepted the obligations of the Convention. Reservations which consist of a general reference to a constitutional provision, law or system of laws without specifying their contents do not do so.

The Government of the United Kingdom therefore objects to the reservations made by the Government of Pakistan to Articles 3, 4, 6, 12, 13 and 16.

The United Kingdom will re-consider its position in light of any modifications or withdrawals of the reservations made by the Government of Pakistan to the Convention.”

NORWAY (29 JUNE 2011)

“The Government of Norway has examined the reservations made by the Islamic Republic of Pakistan upon ratification of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment. The Government of Norway considers that the reservations with regard to articles 3, 4, 6, 12, 13 and 16 of the Convention are so extensive as to be contrary to its object and purpose. The Government of Norway therefore objects to the said reservations made by the Islamic Republic of Pakistan. This objection does not preclude the entry into force in its entirety of the Convention between the Kingdom of Norway and the Islamic Republic of Pakistan. The Convention thus becomes operative between the Kingdom of Norway and the Islamic Republic of Pakistan without the Islamic Republic of Pakistan benefiting from the aforesaid reservations.”

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA (29 JUNE 2011)

“The Government of the United States of America objects to Pakistan’s reservations to the CAT. Pakistan has reserved to Articles 3, 4, 6, 12, 13, and 16 of the Convention, which address non refolement, criminalization of acts which constitute torture, arrest or apprehension of those suspected of committing torture, investigation of credible allegations of torture, the right to bring before and have examined by competent authorities allegations of torture and for protection of complainants and witnesses, and the prevention of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. At the same time, Pakistan has chosen not to participate in the Committee’s inquiry process under Article 20. The combination of Pakistan’s reservations and its decision not to participate in the Article 20 process raises serious concerns because the reservations obscure the extent to which Pakistan intends to modify its substantive obligations under the Convention, and preclude further inquiry by the Committee if well founded indications of systematic torture do arise. As a result, the United States considers the totality of Pakistan's reservations to Articles 3, 4, 6, 12, 13, and 16 to be incompatible with the object and purpose of the [Convention]. This objection does not constitute an obstacle to the entry into force of the [Convention] between the United States and Pakistan, and the aforementioned articles shall apply between our two states, except to the extent of Pakistan's reservations."

NETHERLANDS (30 JUNE 2011)

"The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands has examined the reservations made by the Islamic Republic of Pakistan upon ratification of the Convention against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands considers that with its reservations to the Articles 3, 4, 6, 12, 13 and 16 of the Convention, the Islamic Republic of Pakistan has made the application of essential obligations under the Convention subject to the Sharia laws and/or the constitutional and/or national laws in force in Pakistan.

This makes it unclear to what extent the Islamic Republic of Pakistan considers itself bound by the obligations of the treaty and raises concerns as to the commitment of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan to the object and purpose of the Convention.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands considers that reservations of this kind must be regarded as incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention and would recall that, according to customary international law, as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, reservations incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands therefore objects to the reservations of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan to the aforesaid Articles of the Convention.

This objection does not constitute an obstacle to the entry into force of the convention between the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Islamic Republic of Pakistan."

PANAMA

PARAGUAY

DECLARATIONS (29 MAY 2002)

Articles 21 and 22

"...the Government of the Republic of Paraguay recognizes the competence of the Committee against Torture, pursuant to articles 21 and 22 of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, approved by the General Assembly of the United Nations on 10 December 1984.

...the Honourable National Congress of the Republic of Paraguay has granted its approval for the recognition of the competence of the Committee to receive communications from States parties and individuals."

PERU

DECLARATIONS (17 OCTOBER 2002)

Article 21

“The Republic of Peru recognizes, in accordance with Article 21 of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the competence of the Committee against Torture to receive and consider communications to the effect that a State Party claims that another State Party is not fulfilling its obligations under the said Convention.”

Article 22

“Likewise, the Republic of Peru recognizes, in accordance with the provisions of Article 22 of the above-mentioned Convention, the competence of the Committee against Torture to receive and consider communications from or on behalf of individuals subject to its jurisdiction who claim to be victims of a violation by a State Party of the provisions of the Convention.”

POLAND

DECLARATIONS (12 MAY 1993)

Articles 21 and 22

“The Government of the Republic of Poland, in accordance with articles 21 and 22 of the Convention, recognizes the competence of the Committee against Torture to receive and consider communications to the effect that a State Party claims that the Republic of Poland is not fulfilling its obligations under the Convention or communications from or on behalf of individuals subject to its jurisdiction who claim to be victims of a violation by the Republic of Poland of the provisions of the Convention.”

PORTUGAL

DECLARATIONS UPON RATIFICATION (9 FEBRUARY 1989)

Article 21

“Portugal hereby declares, in accordance with article 21, paragraph 1, of the Convention, that it recognizes the competence of the Committee Against Torture to receive and consider communications to the effect that the State Party claims that another State Party is not fulfilling its obligations under this Convention.”

Article 22

“Portugal hereby declares, in accordance with article 22, paragraph 1 of the Convention, that it recognizes the competence of the Committee Against Torture to receive and consider communications from or on behalf of individuals subject to its jurisdiction who claim to be victims of violation by State Party of the provisions of the Convention.”

QATAR

RESERVATIONS UPON ACCESSION (11 JANUARY 2000)

General reservation

“(a) Any interpretation of the provisions of the Convention that is incompatible with the precepts of Islamic law and the Islamic religion;] partially withdrawn on 14 March 2012, when the State of Qatar communicated that it “1) partially withdraws its general reservation, while keeping in effect a limited general reservation within the framework of Articles 1 and 16 of the Convention”

[Article 21 and 22

“(b) The competence of the Committee as indicated in articles 21 and 22 of the Convention.”] withdrawn on 14 March 2012

Objections to certain declarations/reservations

SPAIN (14 MARCH 2000)

“The Government of the Kingdom of Spain has examined the reservation made by the Government of the State of Qatar to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment on 11 January 2000, as to any interpretation of the Convention that is incompatible with the precepts of Islamic law and the Islamic religion.

The Government of the Kingdom of Spain considers that, by making a general reference to Islamic law and religion rather than to specific content, this reservation raises doubts among the other States parties as to the extent of the commitment of the State of Qatar to abide by the Convention.

The Government of the Kingdom of Spain considers the reservation made by the Government of the State of Qatar to be incompatible with the purpose and aim of the Convention, in that it relates to the entire Convention and seriously limits or even excludes its application on a basis which is not clearly defined, namely, a general reference to Islamic law.

Accordingly, the Government of the Kingdom of Spain objects to the above-mentioned reservation made by the Government of the State of Qatar to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.

This objection does not prevent the Convention's entry into force between the Government of Spain and the Government of the State of Qatar.”

LUXEMBOURG (6 APRIL 2000)

“The Government of the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg has examined the reservation made by the Government of the State of Qatar to [the Convention] regarding any interpretation incompatible with the precepts of Islamic law and the Islamic religion.

The Government of the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg considers that this reservation, by referring in a general way to both Islamic law and the Islamic religion without specifying their content, raises doubts among other States Parties about the degree to which the State of Qatar is committed to the observance of the Convention. The Government of the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg believes that the aforementioned reservation of the Government of the State of Qatar is incompatible with the objective and purpose of the Convention, because it refers to it as a whole and seriously limits or even excludes its application on a poorly defined basis, as in the case of the global reference to Islamic law.

Consequently, the Government of the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg objects to the aforementioned reservation made by the Government of the State of Qatar to [the Convention]. This objection does not prevent the entry into force of the Convention between the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg and the State of Qatar.”

SWEDEN (27 APRIL 2000)

“The Government of Sweden has examined the reservations made by the Government of Qatar at the time of its accession to the [Convention], as to the competence of the committee and to any interpretation of the provisions of the Convention that is incompatible with the precepts of Islamic laws and the Islamic religion.

The Government of Sweden is of the view that as regards the latter, this general reservation, which does not clearly specify the provisions of the Convention to which it applies and the extent of the derogation therefrom, raises doubts as to the commitment of Qatar to the object and purpose of the Convention.

It is in the common interest of States that treaties to which they have chosen to become parties are respected as to their object and purpose, and that States are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under the treaties.

According to customary law as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted. The Government of Sweden therefore objects to the aforesaid general reservation made by the Government of Qatar to the [Convention].

This shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the State of Qatar and the Kingdom of Sweden, without Qatar benefiting from the said reservation”.

FINLAND (16 JANUARY 2001)

“The Government of Finland has examined the context of the reservation made by the Government of Qatar regarding any interpretation incompatible with the precepts of Islamic law and the Islamic religion. The Government of Finland notes that a reservation which consists of a general reference to national law without specifying its contents does not clearly define for the other Parties to the Convention the extent to which the reserving State commits itself to the Convention and may therefore raise doubts as to the commitment of the reserving state to fulfil its obligations under the Convention. Such a reservation, in the view of the Government of Finland, is subject to the general principle of treaty interpretation according to which a party may not invoke the provisions of its domestic law as justification for a failure to perform its treaty obligations.

The Government of Finland also notes that the reservation of Qatar, being of such a general nature, raises doubts as to the full commitment of Qatar to the object and purpose of the Convention and would like to recall that, according to the Vienna Convention on the Law of the Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

For the above-mentioned reasons the Government of Finland objects to the reservation made by the Government of Qatar. This objection does not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Qatar and Finland. The Convention will thus become operative between the two States without Qatar benefitting from this reservation.”

NORWAY (18 JANUARY 2001)

“It is the Government of Norway’s position that paragraph (a) of the reservation, due to its unlimited scope and undefined character, is contrary to the object and purpose of the Convention, and thus impermissible according to well established treaty law. The Government of Norway therefore objects to paragraph (a) of the reservation.

This objection does not preclude the entry into force in its entirety of the Convention between the Kingdom of Norway and Qatar. The Convention thus becomes operative between Norway and Qatar without Qatar benefitting from the said reservation.”

NETHERLANDS (19 JANUARY 2001)

“The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands considers that the reservation concerning the national law of Qatar, which seeks to limit the responsibilities of the reserving State under the Convention by invoking national law, may raise doubts as to the commitment of this State to the object and purpose of the Convention and, moreover, contribute to undermining the basis of international treaty law.

It is in the common interest of States that treaties to which they have chosen to become party should be respected, as to object and purpose, by all parties.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Government of Qatar.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Kingdom of the Netherlands and Qatar.”

GERMANY (23 JANUARY 2001)

“The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany has examined the reservation to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment made by the Government of Qatar. The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany is of the view that the reservation with regard to compatibility of the rules of the Convention with the precepts of Islamic law and the Islamic religion raises doubts as to the commitment of Qatar to fulfil its obligations under the Convention. The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany considers this reservation to be incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention. Therefore the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Government of Qatar to the Convention.

This objection does not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Federal Republic of Germany and Qatar.”

FRANCE (24 JANUARY 2001)

“The Government of the French Republic has carefully considered the reservation made by the Government of Qatar to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment of 10 December 1984, whereby it excludes any interpretation of the Convention which would be incompatible with the precepts of Islamic law and the Islamic religion. The reservation, which seeks to give precedence to domestic law and practices over the Convention to an indeterminate extent, is comprehensive in scope. Its terms undermine the commitment of Qatar and make it impossible for the other States parties to assess the extent of that commitment.

The Government of France consequently objects to the reservation made by Qatar.”

ITALY (5 FEBRUARY 2001)

“The Government of the Italian Republic has examined the reservation to the Convention against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment made by the Government of Qatar. The Government of the Italian Republic believes that the reservation concerning the compatibility of the rules of the Convention with the precepts of the Islamic law and the Islamic Religion raises doubts as the commitment of Qatar to fulfill its obligations under the Convention. The Government of the Italian Republic considers this reservation to be incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention according to article 19 of the 1969 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties. This reservation does not fall within the rule of article 20, paragraph 5 and can be objected anytime.

Therefore, the Government of the Italian Republic objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Government of Qatar to the Convention.

This objection does not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Italy and Qatar.”

DENMARK (21 FEBRUARY 2001)

“The Government of Denmark has examined the contents of the reservation made by the Government of Qatar to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment regarding any interpretation of the provisions of the Convention that is incompatible with the precepts of Islamic law and the Islamic religion. The Government of Denmark considers that the reservation, which is of a general nature, is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention and raises doubts as to the commitment of Qatar to fulfil her obligations under the Convention. It is the opinion of the Government of Denmark that no time limit applies to objections against reservations which are inadmissible under international law.

For the above-mentioned reasons, the Government of Denmark objects to this reservation made by the Government of Qatar. This objection does not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Qatar and Denmark.”

PORTUGAL (20 JULY 2001)

“The Government of the Portuguese Republic has examined the reservation made by the Government of Qatar to the Convention Against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (New York, 10 December 1984), whereby it excludes any interpretation of the said Convention which would be incompatible with the precepts of Islamic Law and the Islamic Religion.

The Government of the Portuguese Republic is of the view that this reservation goes against the general principle of treaty interpretation according to which a State party to a treaty may not invoke the provisions of its internal law as justification for failure to perform according to the obligations set out by the said treaty, creating legitimate doubts on its commitment to the Convention and, moreover, contribute to undermine the basis of International Law.

Furthermore, the said reservation is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention.

The Government of the Portuguese Republic wishes, therefore, to express its disagreement with the reservation made by the Government of Qatar.”

UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND NORTHERN IRELAND (9 NOVEMBER 2001)

“The Government of the United Kingdom have examined the reservation made by the Government of Qatar on 11 January 2000 in respect of the Convention, which reads as follows: ‘...with reservation as to: (a) Any interpretation of the provisions of the Convention that is incompatible with the precepts of Islamic law and the Islamic religion.’

The Government of the United Kingdom note that a reservation which consists of a general reference to national law without specifying its contents does not clearly define for the other States Parties to the Convention the extent to which the reserving State has accepted the obligations of the Convention. The Government of the United Kingdom therefore object to the reservation made by the Government of Qatar.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and Qatar.”

THAILAND

DECLARATIONS UPON ACCESSION (2 OCTOBER 2007)

Article 1

"1. With respect to the term "torture" under Article 1 of the Convention, although there is neither a specific definition nor particular offence under the current Thai Penal Code corresponding to the term, there are comparable provisions under the aforesaid Thai Penal Code applicable to acts under Article 1 of the Convention. The term "torture" under Article 1 of the Convention shall accordingly be interpreted in conformity with the current Thai Penal Code.

The Kingdom of Thailand shall revise its domestic law to be more consistent with Article 1 of the Convention at the earliest opportunity."

Article 4

"2. For the same reason as stipulated in the preceding paragraph, Article 4 of the Convention which stipulates: 'Each State Party shall ensure that all acts of torture are offences under its criminal law. The same shall apply to an attempt to commit torture and to an act by any person which constitutes complicity or participation in torture,' shall be interpreted in conformity with the current Thai Penal Code.

The Kingdom of Thailand shall revise its domestic law to be more consistent with Article 4 of the Convention at the earliest opportunity."

Article 5

"3. Article 5 of the Convention which provides: 'Each State Party shall take such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over the offences referred to in Article 4.....' is interpreted by the Kingdom of Thailand to mean that the jurisdiction referred to in Article 5 shall be established in accordance with the current Thai Penal Code.

The Kingdom of Thailand shall revise its domestic law to be more consistent with Article 5 of the Convention at the earliest opportunity."

Article 30

"The Kingdom of Thailand does not consider itself bound by Article 30, paragraph 1, of the Convention."

Objection to certain declarations/reservations

SWEDEN (29 SEPTEMBER 2008)

“The Government of Sweden recalls that the designation assigned to a statement does not determine whether or not it constitutes a reservation to a treaty. If the legal effect of certain provisions of a treaty is excluded or modified by an interpretative declaration, this in fact amounts to a reservation.

Since the application of a number of provisions of the Convention have been made subject to provisions of the Thai Penal Code it is unclear to what extent the Kingdom of Thailand considers itself bound by the obligations of the treaty. This in turn raises doubts as to the commitment of the Kingdom of Thailand to the object and purpose of the Convention. This applies in particular to the declaration made under Article 1 of the Convention which contains a clear and generally recognized definition of the concept of torture.

The Government of Sweden therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the Kingdom of Thailand to the Convention Against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Kingdom of Thailand and Sweden, without the Kingdom of Thailand benefiting from its reservation.”

RESERVATION UPON RATIFICATION (2 AUGUST 1988)

Article 30

"The Government of Turkey declares in accordance with article 30, paragraph 2, of the Convention, that it does not consider itself bound by the provisions of paragraph 1 of this article."

UGANDA

DECLARATION (19 DECEMBER 2001)

Article 21

"In accordance with Article 21 of the Convention, the Government of the Republic of Uganda declares that it recognizes the competence of the Committee against Torture to receive and consider communications submitted by another State party, provided that such other State Party has made a declaration under Article 21 recognizing the competence of the Committee to receive and consider communications in regard to itself."

UKRAINE

RESERVATIONS UPON SIGNATURE AND CONFIRMED UPON RATIFICATION, UKRAINIAN SOVIET SOCIALIST REPUBLIC (27 FEBRUARY 1986)

[Article 20

"The Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic does not recognize the competence of the Committee against torture as defined by article 20 of the Convention."] withdrawn by Ukraine on 12 September 2003

[Article 30

"The Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic does not consider itself bound by the provisions of para. 1 article 30 of the Convention."] withdrawn by Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic on 20 April 1989

DECLARATIONS, UKRAINE (12 SEPTEMBER 2003)

Article 21

"Ukraine fully recognizes extension to its territory of Article 21 of the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment as regards recognition of the competence of the Committee against Torture to receive and consider communications to the effect that a State Party claims that another State Party is not fulfilling its obligations under this Convention.

Article 22

“Ukraine fully recognizes extension to its territory of Article 22 of the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment as regards recognition of the competence of the Committee against Torture to receive and consider communications from or on behalf of individuals subject to jurisdiction of a State Party who claim to be victims of a violation by a State Party of the provisions of the Convention.”

“Ukraine declares that the provisions of Articles 20, 21 and 22 of the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment shall extend to cases which may arise as from the date of receipt by the UN Secretary General of the notification concerning the withdrawal of reservations and relevant declarations of Ukraine.”

UNITED ARAB EMIRATES

RESERVATIONS UPON ACCESSION (19 JULY 2012)

Article 20

“In accordance with paragraph 1 of article 28 of the Convention, the United Arab Emirates declares that it does not recognize the competence of the Committee against Torture referred to in article 20 of the Convention.”

Article 30

“In accordance with paragraph 2 of article 30 of the Convention, the United Arab Emirates does not consider itself bound by paragraph 1 of article 30 relating to arbitration in this Convention.”

DECLARATION UPON ACCESSION (19 JULY 2012)

Article 1

“The United Arab Emirates also confirms that the lawful sanctions applicable under national law, or pain or suffering arising from or associated with or incidental to these lawful sanctions, do not fall under the concept of “torture” defined in article 1 of this Convention or under the concept of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment mentioned in this Convention.”

Objections to certain declarations/reservations

AUSTRIA (31 JANUARY 2013)

With regard to the reservation made by the United Arab Emirates upon ratification:

“The Government of Austria has examined the reservation made by the United Arab Emirates upon accession to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.

The Government of Austria considers that by the reference to national law regarding Art. 1 of the Convention the United Arab Emirates have made a reservation of general and indeterminate scope. This reservation does not clearly define for the other States Parties to the Convention the extent to which the reserving State has accepted the obligations of the Convention.

The Government of Austria therefore considers the reservation of the United Arab Emirates to Art. 1 incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention and objects to it.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Austria and the United Arab Emirates.”

SWEDEN (7 MARCH 2013)

“The Government of Sweden has examined the declaration and reservations made by the United Arab Emirates at the time of its accession to the Convention.

The Government of Sweden recalls that the designation assigned to a statement whereby the legal effect of certain provisions of a treaty is excluded or modified does not determine its status as a reservation to the treaty. The Government of Sweden considers that the declaration made by the United Arab Emirates in substance constitutes a reservation limiting the scope of the Convention.

The Government of Sweden notes that the reservation, according to which ‘the lawful sanctions applicable under national law, or pain or suffering arising from or associated with or incidental to these lawful sanctions, do not fall under the concept of ‘torture’ defined in article 1 of this Convention or under the concept of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment mentioned in this Convention’, implies that the application of the Convention is made subject to a general reservation referring to existing legislation in the United Arab Emirates. The Government of Sweden is of the view that such a reservation, which does not clearly specify the extent of its scope, raises serious doubt as to the commitment of the United Arab Emirates to the object and purpose of the Convention.

According to customary international law, as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted. It is in the common interest of States that treaties to which they have chosen to become parties are respected as to their object and purpose, by all parties, and that States are prepared to undertake any legislative changes necessary to comply with their obligations under the treaties.

The Government of Sweden therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the United Arab Emirates to the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and considers this reservation null and void. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the United Arab Emirates and Sweden. The Convention enters into force between the United Arab Emirates and Sweden, without the United Arab Emirates benefiting from this reservation.”

SWITZERLAND (1 JULY 2013)

“The Swiss Federal Council has examined the reservations and the declaration made by the United Arab Emirates upon accession to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment of 10 December 1984. The Council believes that the declaration related to article 1 of the Convention, insofar as it refers to the national law of the United Arab Emirates, constitutes in substance a reservation of general scope, which does not specify the extent of the derogation and is therefore incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention. Consequently, the Swiss Federal Council objects to the reservation. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Switzerland and the United Arab Emirates.”

ROMANIA (2 JULY 2013)

“The Government of Romania has examined the declaration made by the United Arab Emirates which sustains that ‘the lawful sanctions applicable under national law, or pain or suffering arising from or associated with or incidental to these lawful sanctions, do not fall under the concept of ‘torture’ defined in article 1 of this Convention or under the concept of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment mentioned in this Convention’ and regards this declaration as a disguised reservation. The reservation refers to the legislation in force in the United Arab Emirates as to the definition of torture and thus to the scope of the application of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.

Furthermore, if the intention of the United Arab Emirates is to subordinate the application of the Convention entirely to the provisions of its internal law as it results from the text of the declaration, the reservation is contrary to the general rule (contained in article 27 VCLT) according to which a party may not invoke its internal law as justification for failure to perform a treaty. Thus, the reservation is inconsistent with the object and purpose of the treaty. Romania appreciates that the term 'lawful sanctions' under article 1, paragraph 1 of the Convention must not be subordinated only to domestic law but it incorporates also a standard of legality under international law.

For these reasons, the Government of Romania objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the United Arab Emirates to the Convention as being incompatible with its object and purpose even though the objection does not constitute an obstacle to the entry into force of the Convention between Romania and the United Arab Emirates. At the same time, the Government of Romania recommends the United Arab Emirates to reconsider its reservation and expresses the hope in its withdrawal."

CZECH REPUBLIC (15 JULY 2013)

"The Government of the Czech Republic has examined the declaration and reservations made by the United Arab Emirates at the time of its accession to the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment. The Government of the Czech Republic considers that the declaration made by the United Arab Emirates in substance constitutes a reservation limiting the scope of the Convention. The Government of the Czech Republic is of the view that the reservation, according to which 'the lawful sanctions applicable under national law, or pain or suffering arising from or associated with or incidental to these lawful sanctions, do not fall under the concept of 'torture' defined in article 1 of this Convention or under the concept of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment mentioned in this Convention' raises serious doubt as to the commitment of the United Arab Emirates to the object and purpose of the Convention. The Government of the Czech Republic therefore considers the aforesaid reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention and objects to it.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the United Arab Emirates and the Czech Republic. The Convention enters into force between the United Arab Emirates and the Czech Republic, without the United Arab Emirates benefiting from this reservation."

NETHERLANDS (16 JULY 2013)

"The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands has carefully examined the reservations and the declaration made by the United Arab Emirates upon accession to the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands considers that the declaration made by the United Arab Emirates regarding Article 1 of the Convention in substance constitutes a reservation limiting the scope of the Convention. The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands considers that with this reservation the application of the Convention is made subject to national legislation in force in the United Arab Emirates. The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands considers that reservations of this kind must be regarded as incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention and would recall that, according to customary international law, as codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, reservations incompatible with the object and purpose of a treaty shall not be permitted. The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands therefore objects to the reservation of the United Arab Emirates to Article 1 of the Convention. This objection does not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the United Arab Emirates."

POLAND (17 JULY 2013)

"The Government of the Republic of Poland has examined the reservation made by the United Arab Emirates upon accession to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment adopted by General Assembly of the United Nations on 10 December 1984, with regard to Article 1 of the Convention.

The reservation made by the United Arab Emirates with regard to Article 1 of the Convention is of general nature and in view of the reference to national law does not allow to define the extent to which State Party making a reservation will be bound by the Convention's provisions. In consequence, according to Article 19(c) of the Vienna Convention of the Law of Treaties, which is a treaty and customary norm, the reservation shall not be permitted as incompatible with the object and purpose of the treaty.

Therefore, the Government of the Republic of Poland objects to the reservation made by the United Arab Emirates upon accession to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment adopted by General Assembly of the United Nations on 10 December 1984, with regard to Article 1.

This objection does not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Republic of Poland and the United Arab Emirates."

IRELAND (18 JULY 2013)

"The Government of Ireland has examined the declaration contained in the instrument of accession to the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman and Degrading Treatment or Punishment, made by the United Arab Emirates on 19 July 2012.

The Government of Ireland is of the view that this declaration in substance constitutes a reservation limiting the scope of the Convention.

The Government of Ireland considers that a reservation which consists of a general reference to domestic laws of the reserving State and which does not clearly specify the extent of the reservation to the provisions of the Convention may cast doubts on the commitment of the reserving state to fulfil its obligations under the Convention.

The Government of Ireland is furthermore of the view that such a reservation may undermine the basis of international treaty law and is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention.

The Government of Ireland therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the United Arab Emirates to Article 1 of the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman and Degrading Treatment or Punishment.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Ireland and the United Arab Emirates."

PORTUGAL (19 JULY 2013)

"The Government of the Portuguese Republic has examined the declaration made by the United Arab Emirates upon accession to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, New York, 10 December 1984.

The Government of the Portuguese Republic considers that the declaration made by the United Arab Emirates, to Article 1, is in fact a reservation that seeks to limit the scope of the Convention on a unilateral basis and is therefore contrary to its object and purpose.

The reservation furthermore is not compatible with the terms of Article 2 of the Convention according to which each State Party shall take effective measures to prevent acts of torture in any territory under its jurisdiction.

The Government of the Portuguese Republic recalls that, according to Article 19 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention shall not be permitted.

The Government of the Portuguese Republic therefore objects to the aforesaid reservation made by the United Arab Emirates to Article 1 of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, New York, 10 December 1984.

However, this objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Portuguese Republic and the United Arab Emirates.”

FINLAND (22 JULY 2013)

“The Government of Finland has examined the contents of the declaration made by the Government of the United Arab Emirates to Article 1 to the Convention Against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and notes that the declaration constitutes a reservation as it seems to modify the obligations of the United Arab Emirates under the said article.

A reservation which consists of a general reference to national law without specifying its contents does not clearly define for the other Parties of the Convention the extent to which the reserving State commits itself to the Convention and therefore may raise doubts as to the commitment of the reserving State to fulfill its obligations under the Convention. Such a reservation is also, in the view of the Government of Finland, subject to the general principle of treaty interpretation according to which a party may not invoke the provisions of its domestic law as justification for a failure to perform its treaty obligations.

In its present formulation, the reservation to Article 1 is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention. According to Article 19, paragraph (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of the Treaties, such reservations shall not be permitted.

Therefore, the Government of Finland objects to the aforesaid reservation to Article 1 made by the Government of the United Arab Emirates. This objection does not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between Finland and the United Arab Emirates. The Convention will thus become operative between the two States without the United Arab Emirates benefitting from this reservation.”

GERMANY (23 JULY 2013)

“The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany has carefully examined the declaration made by the United Arab Emirates upon its accession to the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment of 10 December 1984.

The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany considers that the declaration, notwithstanding its designation, amounts to a reservation, which is meant to limit the scope of application of the Convention. The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany also considers that a reservation which subjects the application of the Convention to national laws on sanctions is of a general and indeterminate nature and raises doubts as to the extent of the commitment to fulfil obligations under the Convention. According to the opinion of the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany such a reservation is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention. The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany therefore objects to this reservation as being impermissible.

This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Federal Republic of Germany and the United Arab Emirates.”

BELGIUM (23 JULY 2013)

“Belgium has examined the declaration formulated by the United Arab Emirates upon its accession to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment. The Government of Belgium considers that, in referring to national law in connection with article 1 of the Convention, the United Arab Emirates has formulated a reservation of general, indeterminate scope that does not define clearly for the other States parties to the Convention the extent to which the State that formulated the reservation has accepted the obligations arising from the Convention. The Government of Belgium considers that the reservation formulated by the United Arab Emirates concerning article 1 is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention.

Belgium recalls that, pursuant to article 19, paragraph (c), of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, a reservation may not be formulated when it is incompatible with the object and purpose of the treaty in question. Belgium therefore objects to the declaration, while specifying that this objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the United Arab Emirates and Belgium.”

NORWAY (24 JULY 2013)

“The Government of Norway is of the view that this declaration in substance constitutes a general reservation aimed at limiting the scope of the Convention with reference to national law, without identifying the provisions in question. It is the understanding of the Government of Norway that the term ‘lawful sanctions’ in article 1, paragraph 1 of the Convention must be understood as referring to sanctions which are lawful not only under national law but also under international law. The Government of Norway accordingly considers that the reservation casts serious doubts on the commitment of the United Arab Emirates to the object and purpose of the Convention and therefore objects to the said reservation.

This objection does not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Kingdom of Norway and the United Arab Emirates. The Convention thus becomes operative between the Kingdom of Norway and the United Arab Emirates without the United Arab Emirates benefiting from the aforesaid reservation.”

UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND NORTHERN IRELAND

DECLARATION UPON SIGNATURE (15 MARCH 1985)

“The United Kingdom reserves the right to formulate, upon ratifying the Convention, any reservations or interpretative declarations which it might consider necessary.”

DECLARATIONS UPON RATIFICATION (8 DECEMBER 1988)

“The instrument of ratification specifies that the said Convention is ratified in respect of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, Anguilla, British Virgin Islands, Cayman Islands, Falkland Islands, Gibraltar, Montserrat, Pitcairn, Henderson, Ducie and Oeno Islands, Saint Helena, Saint Helena Dependencies, Turks and Caicos Islands. ”

Article 21

“The Government of the United Kingdom declares under article 21 of the said Convention that it recognizes the competence of the Committee Against Torture to receive and consider communications submitted by another State Party, provided that such other State Party has, not less than twelve months prior to the submission by it of a communication in regard to the United Kingdom, made a declaration under article 21 recognizing the competence of the Committee to receive and consider communications in regard to itself.”

DECLARATION (9 DECEMBER 1992)—TERRITORIAL APPLICATION

“I have the honour to declare on behalf of the Government of the United Kingdom that its ratification of the Convention shall extend to the following territories: Bailiwick of Guernsey Bailiwick of Jersey Isle of Man Bermuda Hong Kong This extension is subject to the same declaration under Article 21 of the Convention as accompanied the said ratification."

Objections to certain declarations/reservations

ARGENTINA (14 APRIL 1989)

"The Government of Argentina reaffirms its sovereignty over the Malvinas Islands, which form part of its national territory, and, with regard to the Malvinas Islands, formally objects to and rejects the declaration of territorial extension issued by the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland in the instrument of ratification of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations on 8 December 1988.

The General Assembly of the United Nations adopted resolutions 2065 (XX), 3160 (XXVIII), 31/49, 37/9, 38/12 and 39/6 in which it recognizes the existence of a sovereignty dispute regarding the question of the Malvinas Islands and has repeatedly requested the Argentine Republic and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland to resume negotiations in order to find as soon as possible a peaceful and definitive solution to the dispute and their remaining differences relating to that question, through the good offices of the Secretary-General. The General Assembly also adopted resolutions 40/21, 41/40, 42/19 and 43/25, which request the parties to initiate negotiations with a view to finding the means to resolve peacefully and definitively the problems pending between both countries, including all aspects on the future of the Malvinas Islands.

Subsequently, on 17 April 1991, the Secretary-General received from the Government of Argentina the following declaration:

The Argentine Government rejects the extension of the application of the [said] Convention to the Malvinas Islands, effected by the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland on 8 December 1988, and reaffirms the rights of sovereignty of the Argentine Republic over those Islands, which are an integral part of its national territory.

The Argentine Republic recalls that the United Nations General Assembly has adopted resolutions 2065 (XX), 3160 (XXVIII), 31/49, 37/9, 38/12, 39/6, 40/21, 41/40, 42/19 and 43/25, in which it recognizes the existence of a sovereignty dispute and requests the Governments of the Argentine Republic and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland to initiate negotiations with a view to finding the means to resolve peacefully and definitively the pending questions of sovereignty, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations."

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

DECLARATION UPON SIGNATURE (18 APRIL 1988)

"The Government of the United States of America reserves the right to communicate, upon ratification, such reservations, interpretive understandings, or declarations as are deemed necessary."

RESERVATIONS, UNDERSTANDINGS AND DECLARATIONS UPON RATIFICATION (21 OCTOBER 1994)

Article 16 and 30

"I. The Senate's advice and consent is subject to the following reservations:

- (1) That the United States considers itself bound by the obligation under article 16 to prevent 'cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment', only insofar as the term 'cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment' means the cruel, unusual and inhumane treatment or punishment prohibited by the Fifth, Eighth, and/or Fourteenth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States.

- (2) That pursuant to article 30 (2) the United States declares that it does not consider itself bound by Article 30 (1), but reserves the right specifically to agree to follow this or any other procedure for arbitration in a particular case.
- II. The Senate's advice and consent is subject to the following understandings, which shall apply to the obligations of the United States under this Convention:"

Articles 1 and 3

- "II. The Senate's advice and consent is subject, to the following understandings, which shall apply to the obligations of the United States under this Convention: (1) (a) That with reference to article 1, the United States understands that, in order to constitute torture, an act must be specifically intended to inflict severe physical or mental pain or suffering and that mental pain or suffering refers to prolonged mental harm caused by or resulting from (1) the intentional infliction or threatened infliction of severe physical pain or suffering; (2) the administration or application, or threatened administration or application, of mind altering substances or other procedures calculated to disrupt profoundly the senses or the personality; (3) the threat of imminent death; or (4) the threat that another person will imminently be subjected to death, severe physical pain or suffering, or the administration or application of mind altering substances or other procedures calculated to disrupt profoundly the senses or personality.
- (b) That the United States understands that the definition of torture in article 1 is intended to apply only to acts directed against persons in the offender's custody or physical control.
 - (c) That with reference to article 1 of the Convention, the United States understands that 'sanctions' includes judicially-imposed sanctions and other enforcement actions authorized by United States law or by judicial interpretation of such law. Nonetheless, the United States understands that a State Party could not through its domestic sanctions defeat the object and purpose of the Convention to prohibit torture.
 - (d) That with reference to article 1 of the Convention, the United States understands that the term 'acquiescence' requires that the public official, prior to the activity constituting torture, have awareness of such activity and thereafter breach his legal responsibility to intervene to prevent such activity.
 - (e) That with reference to article 1 of the Convention, the United States understands that noncompliance with applicable legal procedural standards does not per se constitute torture.
- (2) That the United States understands the phrase, 'where there are substantial grounds for believing that he would be in danger of being subjected to torture,' as used in article 3 of the Convention, to mean 'if it is more likely than not that he would be tortured.'
 - (3) That it is the understanding of the United States that article 14 requires a State Party to provide a private right of action for damages only for acts of torture committed in territory under the jurisdiction of that State Party.
 - (4) That the United States understands that international law does not prohibit the death penalty, and does not consider this Convention to restrict or prohibit the United States from applying the death penalty consistent with the Fifth, Eighth and/or Fourteenth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States, including any constitutional period of confinement prior to the imposition of the death penalty.
 - (5) That the United States understands that this Convention shall be implemented by the United States Government to the extent that it exercises legislative and judicial jurisdiction over the matters covered by the Convention and otherwise by the state and local governments.

Accordingly, in implementing articles 10-14 and 16, the United States Government shall take measures appropriate to the Federal system to the end that the competent authorities of the constituent units of the United States of America may take appropriate measures for the fulfilment of the Convention.”

Article 1 to 16

“III. The Senate’s advice and consent is subject to the following declarations:

- (1) That the United States declares that the provisions of articles 1 through 16 of the Convention are not self-executing.”

Article 21

“The United States declares, pursuant to article 21, paragraph 1, of the Convention, that it recognizes the competence of the Committee against Torture to receive and consider communications to the effect that a State Party claims that another State Party is not fulfilling its obligations under the Convention. It is the understanding of the United States that, pursuant to the above-mentioned article, such communications shall be accepted and processed only if they come from a State Party which has made a similar declaration.”

Objections to certain declarations/reservations

NETHERLANDS (26 FEBRUARY 1996)

“The Government of the Netherlands considers the reservation made by the United States of America regarding the article 16 of [the Convention] to be incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention, to which the obligation laid down in article 16 is essential.

Moreover, it is not clear how the provisions of the Constitution of the United States of America relate to the obligations under the Convention. The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands therefore objects to the said reservation. This objection shall not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the United States of America.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands considers the following understandings to have no impact on the obligations of the United States of America under the Convention:

II. 1 a This understanding appears to restrict the scope of the definition of torture under article 1 of the Convention.

1 d This understanding diminishes the continuous responsibility of public officials for behaviour of their subordinates.

The Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands reserves its position with regard to the understandings II. 1b, 1c and 2 as the contents thereof are insufficiently clear.”

FINLAND (27 FEBRUARY 1996)

“A reservation which consists of a general reference to national law without specifying its contents does not clearly define to the other Parties of the Convention the extent to which the reserving State commits itself to the Convention and therefore may cast doubts about the commitment of the reserving State to fulfil its obligations under the Convention. Such a reservation is also, in the view of the Government of Finland, subject to the general principle to treaty interpretation according to which a party may not invoke the provisions of its internal law as justification for failure to perform a treaty.

The Government of Finland therefore objects to the reservation made by the United States to Article 16 of the Convention (cf. Reservation I. (1)). In this connection the Government of Finland would also like to refer to its objection to the reservation entered by the United States with regard to article 7 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. It is also the view of the Government of Finland that the understandings expressed by the United States do not release the United States as a Party to the Convention from the responsibility to fulfil the obligations undertaken therein.”

SWEDEN (27 FEBRUARY 1996)

“With regard to the reservations, understandings and declarations entered by the United States of America to the [above] Convention, the Government of Sweden would like to refer to its objections to the reservations entered by the United States of America with regard to article 7 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

The same reasons for objection apply to the now entered reservation with regard to article 16 reservation I (1) of [the Convention]. The Government of Sweden therefore objects to that reservation. It is the view of the Government of Sweden that the understandings expressed by the United States of America do not relieve the United States of America as a party to the Convention from the responsibility to fulfil the obligations undertaken therein.”

GERMANY (26 FEBRUARY 1996)

“The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany has taken note of the reservations and understandings of the Government of the United States of America contained in the instrument of ratification of the [above] Convention, especially with regard to the reservation under I (1) and the understanding under II (2) and (3). It is the understanding of the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany that they do not touch upon the obligations of the United States of America as State Party to the Convention.”

URUGUAY

DECLARATION (27 JULY 1988)

Articles 21 and 22

“The Government of Uruguay recognizes the competence of the Committee Against Torture to receive and consider communications referring to the said articles [21 and 22].”

VENEZUELA

DECLARATION (26 APRIL 1994)

Articles 21 and 22

“The Government of the Republic of Venezuela recognizes the competence of the Committee against Torture as provided for under articles 21 and 22 of the Convention ...”

VIET NAM

DECLARATIONS UPON RATIFICATION (5 FEBRUARY 2015)

Articles 20 and 30

“The Socialist Republic of Viet Nam declares, in accordance with article 28 paragraph 1, that it does not recognize the competence of the Committee provided for in article 20, and in accordance with article 30, paragraph 2, that it does not consider itself bound by article 30, paragraph 1.”

Article 4

“The Socialist Republic of Viet Nam does not consider the Convention as the direct legal basis for extradition in respect of the offences referred to in Article 4 of the Convention. Extradition shall be decided on the basis of extradition treaties to which Viet Nam is a party or the principle of reciprocity, and shall be in accordance with Vietnamese laws and regulations.”

Objections to certain declarations/reservations

POLAND (4 FEBRUARY 2016)

“The Government of the Republic of Poland has examined the declaration made by the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam upon ratification of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment adopted in New York on December 10, 1984. The declaration meets the definition of a reservation laid out in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties.

The Government of the Republic of Poland notes that the purpose and object of the Convention is to ensure an enhanced effectiveness of the protection from torture and other cruel or degrading treatment or punishment globally. To this end State-parties took it upon themselves to undertake legislative, administrative, judicial or other measures to prevent the use of torture.

The Government of the Republic of Poland notes that the reservation of the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam – to the extent it concerns not recognizing the Convention as a direct legal basis for extradition in relation to offences referred to in Article 4 – leads to an exemption of certain provisions of that treaty. The efficacy of Article 7, paragraph 1, and Article 8, paragraph 2, of the Convention will depend on the extradition treaties binding the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam or on the domestic authorities’ decision regarding the principle of mutuality. Furthermore, the reservation may cause the avoidance of the obligation to supplement the catalogue of offences in the already-binding extradition treaties with the offence of use of torture as stipulated in Article 8, paragraph 1, of the Convention.

It is the opinion of the Government of the Republic of Poland that the reservation is incompatible with the object and purpose of the Convention in relation to the indicated provisions and as such is not permissible.

Therefore, the Government of the Republic of Poland objects to the reservation made by the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment adopted in New York on December 10, 1984.

This objection does not preclude the entry into force of the Convention between the Socialist Republic of Viet Nam and the Republic of Poland.”

YUGOSLAVIA

DECLARATIONS UPON RATIFICATION (10 SEPTEMBER 1991)

Article 21

“Yugoslavia recognizes, in compliance with article 21, paragraph 1 of the Convention, the competence of the Committee against Torture to receive and consider communications in which one State Party to the Convention claims that another State Party does not fulfil the obligations pursuant to the Convention”

Article 22

“Yugoslavia recognizes, in conformity with article 22, paragraph 1 of the Convention, the competence of the Committee against Torture to receive and consider communications from or on behalf of individuals subject to its jurisdiction who claim to be victims of a violation by a State Party of the provisions of the Convention.”

Confirmation upon succession (12 March 2001)

“Confirmation upon succession of the declaration made by the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.”

PART ONE. GENERAL RULES

I. SESSIONS

RULE 1

Meetings of the Committee

The Committee against Torture (hereinafter referred to as “the Committee”) shall hold meetings as may be required for the satisfactory performance of its functions in accordance with the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (hereinafter referred to as “the Convention”).

RULE 2

Regular sessions

1. The Committee shall normally hold two regular sessions each year.
2. Regular sessions of the Committee shall be convened at dates decided by the Committee in consultation with the Secretary-General of the United Nations (hereinafter referred to as “the Secretary-General”), taking into account the calendar of conferences as approved by the General Assembly.

RULE 3

Special sessions

1. Special sessions of the Committee shall be convened by decision of the Committee. When the Committee is not in session, the Chairperson may convene special sessions of the Committee in consultation with the other officers of the Committee. The Chairperson of the Committee shall also convene special sessions:
 - (a) At the request of a majority of the members of the Committee;
 - (b) At the request of a State party to the Convention.
2. Special sessions shall be convened as soon as possible at a date fixed by the Chairperson in consultation with the Secretary-General and with the other officers of the Committee, taking into account the calendar of conferences as approved by the General Assembly.

RULE 4

Place of sessions

Sessions of the Committee shall normally be held at the United Nations Office at Geneva. Another place for a session may be designated by the Committee in consultation with the Secretary-General, taking into account the relevant rules of the United Nations.

RULE 5

Notification of opening date of sessions

The Secretary-General shall notify the members of the Committee of the date and place of the first meeting of each session. Such notifications shall be sent, in the case of regular sessions, at least six weeks in advance, and in the case of a special session, at least three weeks in advance, of the first meeting.

II. AGENDA

RULE 6

Provisional agenda for regular sessions

The provisional agenda of each regular session shall be prepared by the Secretary-General in consultation with the Chairperson of the Committee, in conformity with the relevant provisions of the Convention, and shall include:

- (a) Any item decided upon by the Committee at a previous session;
- (b) Any item proposed by the Chairperson of the Committee;

- (c) Any item proposed by a State party to the Convention;
- (d) Any item proposed by a member of the Committee;
- (e) Any item proposed by the Secretary-General relating to his functions under the Convention or these Rules.

RULE 7

Provisional agenda for special sessions

The provisional agenda for a special session of the Committee shall consist only of those items which are proposed for consideration at that special session.

RULE 8

Adoption of the agenda

The first item on the provisional agenda of any session shall be the adoption of the agenda, except for the election of the officers when required under rule 16.

RULE 9

Revision of the agenda

During a session, the Committee may revise the agenda and may, as appropriate, defer or delete items; only urgent and important items may be added to the agenda.

RULE 10

Transmission of the provisional agenda and basic documents

The provisional agenda and basic documents relating to each item appearing thereon shall be transmitted to the members of the Committee by the Secretary-General as early as possible. The provisional agenda of a special session shall be transmitted to the members of the Committee by the Secretary-General simultaneously with the notification of the meeting under rule 5.

III. MEMBERS OF THE COMMITTEE

RULE 11

Members

Members of the Committee shall be the 10 experts elected in accordance with article 17 of the Convention.

RULE 12

Beginning of term of office

1. The term of office of the members of the Committee elected at the first election shall begin on 1 January 1988. The term of office of members elected at subsequent elections shall begin on the day after the date of expiry of the term of office of the members whom they replace.
2. The Chairperson, members of the Bureau and Rapporteurs may continue performing the duties assigned to them until one day before the first meeting of the Committee, composed of its new members, at which it elects its officers.

RULE 13

Filling of casual vacancies

1. If a member of the Committee dies or resigns or for any other cause can no longer perform his/her Committee duties, the Secretary-General shall immediately declare the seat of that member to be vacant and shall request the State party whose expert has ceased to function as a member of the Committee to appoint another expert from among its nationals within two months, if possible, to serve for the remainder of his/her predecessor's term.
2. The name and the curriculum vitae of the expert so appointed shall be transmitted by the Secretary-General to the States parties for their approval. The approval shall be considered given unless half or more of the States parties respond negatively within six weeks after having been informed by the Secretary-General of the proposed appointment to fill the vacancy.

3. Except in the case of a vacancy arising from a member's death or disability, the Secretary-General shall act in accordance with the provisions of paragraphs 1 and 2 of the present rule only after receiving, from the member concerned, written notification of his/her decision to cease to function as a member of the Committee.

RULE 14

Solemn declaration

Before assuming his/her duties after his/her first election, each member of the Committee shall make the following solemn declaration in open Committee:

"I solemnly declare that I will perform my duties and exercise my powers as a member of the Committee against Torture honourably, faithfully, independently, impartially and conscientiously."

RULE 15

Independence and impartiality of members

1. The independence and impartiality of the members of the Committee are essential for the performance of their duties and requires that they serve in their personal capacity and shall neither seek nor accept instructions from anyone concerning the performance of their duties. Members are accountable only to the Committee and their own conscience.
2. In their duties under the Convention, members of the Committee shall maintain the highest standards of impartiality and integrity, and apply the standards of the Convention equally to all States and all individuals, without fear or favour and without discrimination of any kind.
3. The Addis Ababa guidelines on the independence and impartiality of members of the human rights treaty bodies are annexed to the present rules of procedure.¹ The guidelines are an important tool for the interpretation of the rules concerning the independence and impartiality of the members of the Committee.

IV. OFFICERS

RULE 16

Elections

The Committee shall elect from among its members a Chairperson, three Vice-Chairpersons and a Rapporteur. In electing its officers, the Committee shall give consideration to equitable geographical distribution and appropriate gender balance and, to the extent possible, rotation among members.

RULE 17

Term of office

Subject to the provisions of rule 12 regarding the Chairperson, members of the Bureau and Rapporteurs, the officers of the Committee shall be elected for a term of two years. They shall be eligible for re-election. None of them, however, may hold office if he/she ceases to be a member of the Committee.

¹ In accordance with United Nations documentation regulations, a United Nations document already published cannot be reissued in a different document. Consequently, reference is made to the Addis Ababa guidelines contained in annex I to the report of the Chairs of the human rights treaty bodies on their twenty-fourth meeting (A/67/222).

RULE 18

Position of Chairperson in relation to the Committee

1. The Chairperson shall perform the functions conferred upon him/her by the Committee and by these rules of procedure. In exercising his/her functions as Chairperson, the Chairperson shall remain under the authority of the Committee.
2. Between sessions, at times when it is not possible or practical to convene a special session of the Committee in accordance with rule 3, the Chairperson is authorized to take action to promote compliance with the Convention on the Committee's behalf if he/she receives information which leads him/her to believe that it is necessary to do so. The Chairperson shall report on the action taken to the Committee at its following session at the latest.

RULE 19

Acting Chairperson

1. If during a session the Chairperson is unable to be present at a meeting or any part thereof, he/she shall designate one of the Vice-Chairpersons to act in his/her place.
2. In the event of the absence or temporary disability of the Chairperson, one of the Vice-Chairpersons shall serve as Chairperson, in the order of precedence determined by their seniority as members of the Committee; where they have the same seniority, the order of seniority in age shall be followed.
3. If the Chairperson ceases to be a member of the Committee in the period between sessions or is in any of the situations referred to in rule 21, the Acting Chairperson shall exercise this function until the beginning of the next ordinary or special session.

RULE 20

Powers and duties of the Acting Chairperson

A Vice-Chairperson acting as Chairperson shall have the same powers and duties as the Chairperson.

RULE 21

Replacement of officers

If any of the officers of the Committee ceases to serve or declares his/her inability to continue serving as a member of the Committee or for any reason is no longer able to act as an officer, a new officer shall be elected for the unexpired term of his/her predecessor.

V. SECRETARIAT

RULE 22

Duties of the Secretary-General

1. Subject to the fulfilment of the financial obligations undertaken by States parties in accordance with article 18, paragraph 5, of the Convention, the secretariat of the Committee and of such subsidiary bodies as may be established by the Committee (hereinafter referred to as "the secretariat") shall be provided by the Secretary-General.
2. Subject to the fulfilment of the requirements referred to in paragraph 1 of the present rule, the Secretary-General shall provide the necessary staff and facilities for the effective performance of the functions of the Committee under the Convention.

RULE 23

Statements

The Secretary-General or his/her representative shall attend all meetings of the Committee. Subject to rule 37, he/she or his/her representative may make oral or written statements at meetings of the Committee or its subsidiary bodies.

RULE 24

Servicing of meetings

The Secretary-General shall be responsible for all the necessary arrangements for meetings of the Committee and its subsidiary bodies.

RULE 25

Keeping the members informed

The Secretary-General shall be responsible for keeping the members of the Committee informed of any questions which may be brought before it for consideration.

RULE 26

Financial implications of proposals

Before any proposal which involves expenditures is approved by the Committee or by any of its subsidiary bodies, the Secretary-General shall prepare and circulate to its members, as early as possible, an estimate of the cost involved in the proposal. It shall be the duty of the Chairperson to draw the attention of members to this estimate and to invite discussion on it when the proposal is considered by the Committee or by a subsidiary body.

VI. LANGUAGES

RULE 27

Official and working languages

Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish shall be the official languages of the Committee and, to the extent possible, also its working languages, including for its summary records.

RULE 28

Interpretation from a working language

Speeches made in any of the working languages shall be interpreted into the other working languages.

RULE 29

Interpretation from other languages

Any speaker addressing the Committee and using a language other than one of the working languages shall normally provide for interpretation into one of the working languages. Interpretation into the other working languages by interpreters of the Secretariat may be based on the interpretation given in the first working language.

RULE 30

Languages of formal decisions and official documents

All formal decisions and official documents of the Committee shall be issued in the official languages.

VII. PUBLIC AND PRIVATE MEETINGS

RULE 31

Public and private meetings

The meetings of the Committee and its subsidiary bodies shall be held in public, unless the Committee decides otherwise or it appears from the relevant provisions of the Convention that the meeting should be held in private.

RULE 32

Issue of communiqués concerning private meetings

At the close of each private meeting, the Committee or its subsidiary body may issue a communiqué, through the Secretary-General, for the use of the information media and the general public regarding the activities of the Committee at its closed meetings.

VIII. RECORDS

RULE 33

Correction of summary records

Summary records of the public and private meetings of the Committee and its subsidiary bodies shall be prepared by the Secretariat. They shall be distributed as soon as possible to the members of the Committee and to any others participating in the meetings. All such participants may, within three working days of the receipt of the records of the meetings, submit corrections to the Secretariat in the languages in which the records have been issued. Corrections to the records of the meetings shall be consolidated in a single corrigendum to be issued after the end of the session concerned. Any disagreement concerning such corrections shall be decided by the Chairperson of the Committee or the Chairperson of the subsidiary body to which the record relates or, in the case of continued disagreement, by decision of the Committee or of the subsidiary body.

RULE 34

Distribution of summary records

1. The summary records of public meetings shall be documents for general distribution.
2. The summary records of private meetings shall be distributed to the members of the Committee and to other participants in the meetings. They may be made available to others upon decision of the Committee at such time and under such conditions as the Committee may decide.

IX. DISTRIBUTION OF REPORTS AND OTHER OFFICIAL DOCUMENTS OF THE COMMITTEE*RULE 35*

Distribution of official documents

1. Without prejudice to the provisions of rule 34 and subject to paragraphs 2 and 3 of the present rule, reports, formal decisions and all other official documents of the Committee and its subsidiary bodies shall be documents for general distribution, unless the Committee decides otherwise.
2. Reports, formal decisions and other official documents of the Committee and its subsidiary bodies relating to articles 20, 21 and 22 of the Convention shall be distributed by the secretariat to all members of the Committee, to the States parties concerned and, as may be decided by the Committee, to members of its subsidiary bodies and to others concerned.
3. Reports and additional information submitted by States parties under article 19 of the Convention shall be documents for general distribution, unless the State party concerned requests otherwise.

X. CONDUCT OF BUSINESS

RULE 36

Quorum

Six members of the Committee shall constitute a quorum.

RULE 37

Powers of the Chairperson

The Chairperson shall declare the opening and closing of each meeting of the Committee, direct the discussion, ensure observance of these rules, accord the right to speak, put questions to the vote and announce decisions. The Chairperson, subject to these rules, shall have control over the proceedings of the Committee and over the maintenance of order at its meetings. The Chairperson may, in the course of the discussion of an item, propose to the Committee the limitation of the time to be allowed to speakers, the limitation of the number of times each speaker may speak on any question and the closure of the list of speakers. He/she shall rule on points of order. He/she shall also have the power to propose adjournment or closure of the debate or adjournment or suspension of a meeting.

Debate shall be confined to the question before the Committee, and the Chairperson may call a speaker to order if his/her remarks are not relevant to the subject under discussion.

RULE 38

Points of order

During the discussion of any matter, a member may, at any time, raise a point of order, and such a point of order shall immediately be decided upon by the Chairperson in accordance with the rules of procedure. Any appeal against the ruling of the Chairperson shall immediately be put to the vote, and the ruling of the Chairperson shall stand unless overruled by a majority of the members present. A member raising a point of order may not speak on the substance of the matter under discussion.

RULE 39

Time limit on statements

The Committee may limit the time allowed to each speaker on any question. When debate is limited and a speaker exceeds his/her allotted time, the Chairperson shall call him/her to order without delay.

RULE 40

List of speakers

During the course of a debate, the Chairperson may announce the list of speakers and, with the consent of the Committee, declare the list closed. The Chairperson may, however, accord the right of reply to any member or representative if a speech delivered after he/she has declared the list closed makes this desirable. When the debate on an item is concluded because there are no other speakers, the Chairperson shall declare the debate closed. Such closure shall have the same effect as closure by the consent of the Committee.

RULE 41

Suspension or adjournment of meetings

During the discussion of any matter, a member may move the suspension or the adjournment of the meeting. No discussion on such motions shall be permitted, and they shall immediately be put to the vote.

RULE 42

Adjournment of debate

During the discussion of any matter, a member may move the adjournment of the debate on the item under discussion. In addition to the proposer of the motion, one member may speak in favour of and one against the motion, after which the motion shall immediately be put to the vote.

RULE 43

Closure of debate

A member may, at any time, move the closure of the debate on the item under discussion, whether or not any other member has signified his/her wish to speak. Permission to speak on the closure of the debate shall be accorded only to two speakers opposing the closure, after which the motion shall immediately be put to the vote.

RULE 44

Order of motions

Subject to rule 38, the following motions shall have precedence in the following order over all other proposals or motions before the meeting:

- (a) To suspend the meeting;
- (b) To adjourn the meeting;
- (c) To adjourn the debate on the item under discussion;
- (d) For the closure of the debate on the item under discussion.

RULE 45

Submission of proposals

Unless otherwise decided by the Committee, proposals and substantive amendments or motions submitted by members shall be introduced in writing and handed to the secretariat, and their consideration shall, if so requested by any member, be deferred until the next meeting on a following day.

RULE 46

Decisions on competence

Subject to rule 44, any motion by a member calling for a decision on the competence of the Committee to adopt a proposal submitted to it shall be put to the vote immediately before a vote is taken on the proposal in question.

RULE 47

Withdrawal of motions

A motion may be withdrawn by the member who proposed it at any time before voting on it has commenced, provided that the motion has not been amended. A motion which has thus been withdrawn may be reintroduced by any member.

RULE 48

Reconsideration of proposals

When a proposal has been adopted or rejected, it may not be reconsidered at the same session unless the Committee so decides. Permission to speak on a motion to reconsider shall be accorded only to two speakers in favour of the motion and to two speakers opposing the motion, after which it shall be immediately put to the vote.

XI. VOTING

RULE 49

Voting rights

Each member of the Committee shall have one vote.

RULE 50

Adoption of decisions

1. Decisions of the Committee shall be made by a majority vote of the members present.
2. Before voting, the Committee shall endeavour to reach its decisions by consensus, provided that the Convention and the rules of procedure are observed and that such efforts do not unduly delay the work of the Committee.

3. Bearing in mind the previous paragraph of this rule, the Chairperson at any meeting may, and at the request of any member shall, put a proposal or the adoption of a decision to a vote.

RULE 51

Equally divided votes

If a vote is equally divided on matters other than elections, the proposal shall be regarded as rejected.

RULE 52

Method of voting

Subject to rule 58, the Committee shall normally vote by show of hands, except that any member may request a roll-call, which shall then be taken in the alphabetical order of the names of the members of the Committee, beginning with the member whose name is drawn by lot by the Chairperson.

RULE 53

Roll-call votes

The vote of each member participating in any roll-call shall be inserted in the record.

RULE 54

Conduct during voting and explanation of votes

After the voting has commenced, there shall be no interruption of the voting except on a point of order by a member in connection with the actual conduct of the voting. Brief statements by members consisting solely of explanations of their votes may be permitted by the Chairperson before the voting has commenced or after the voting has been completed.

RULE 55

Division of proposals

Parts of a proposal shall be voted on separately if a member requests that the proposal be divided. Those parts of the proposal which have been approved shall then be put to the vote as a whole; if all the operative parts of a proposal have been rejected, the proposal shall be considered to have been rejected as a whole.

RULE 56

Order of voting on amendments

1. When an amendment to a proposal is moved, the amendment shall be voted on first. When two or more amendments to a proposal are moved the Committee shall first vote on the amendment furthest removed in substance from the original proposal and then on the amendment next furthest removed therefrom, and so on, until all amendments have been put to the vote. If one or more amendments are adopted, the amended proposal shall then be voted upon.
2. A motion is considered an amendment to a proposal if it merely adds to, deletes from or revises part of that proposal.

RULE 57

Order of voting on proposals

1. If two or more proposals relate to the same question, the Committee shall, unless it decides otherwise, vote on the proposals in the order in which they have been submitted.
2. The Committee may, after each vote on a proposal, decide whether to vote on the next proposal.
3. Any motions requiring that no decision be taken on the substance of such proposals shall, however, be considered as previous questions and shall be put to the vote before them.

XII. ELECTIONS

RULE 58

Method of elections

Elections shall be held by secret ballot, unless the Committee decides otherwise in the case of elections to fill a place for which there is only one candidate.

RULE 59

Conduct of elections when only one elective place is to be filled

1. When only one person or member is to be elected and no candidate obtains in the first ballot the majority required, a second ballot shall be taken, which shall be restricted to the two candidates who obtained the greatest number of votes.
2. If the second ballot is inconclusive and a majority vote of members present is required, a third ballot shall be taken in which votes may be cast for any eligible candidate. If the third ballot is inconclusive, the next ballot shall be restricted to the two candidates who obtained the greatest number of votes in the third ballot and so on, with unrestricted and restricted ballots alternating, until a person or member is elected.
3. If the second ballot is inconclusive and a two-thirds majority is required, the balloting shall be continued until one candidate secures the necessary two-thirds majority. In the next three ballots, votes may be cast for any eligible candidate. If three such unrestricted ballots are inconclusive, the next three ballots shall be restricted to the two candidates who obtained the greatest number of votes in the third such unrestricted ballot, and the following three ballots shall be unrestricted, and so on until a person or member is elected.

Conduct of elections when two or more elective places are to be filled

When two or more elective places are to be filled at one time under the same conditions, those candidates obtaining in the first ballot the majority required shall be elected. If the number of candidates obtaining such majority is less than the number of persons or members to be elected, there shall be additional ballots to fill the remaining places, the voting being restricted to the candidates obtaining the greatest number of votes in the previous ballot, to a number not more than twice the places remaining to be filled; provided that, after the third inconclusive ballot, votes may be cast for any eligible candidates. If three such unrestricted ballots are inconclusive, the next three ballots shall be restricted to the candidates who obtained the greatest number of votes in the third of the unrestricted ballots, to a number not more than twice the places remaining to be filled, and the following three ballots thereafter shall be unrestricted, and so on until all the places have been filled.

XIII. SUBSIDIARY BODIES

RULE 61

Establishment of subsidiary bodies

1. The Committee may, in accordance with the provisions of the Convention and subject to the provisions of rule 26, set up ad hoc subsidiary bodies as it deems necessary and define their composition and mandates.
2. Each subsidiary body shall elect its own officers and adopt its own rules of procedure. Failing such rules, the present rules of procedure shall apply mutatis mutandis.
3. The Committee may also appoint one or more of its members as Rapporteurs to perform such duties as mandated by the Committee.

XIV. SUBCOMMITTEE ON PREVENTION

RULE 62

Meetings with the Subcommittee on Prevention

In order to pursue its institutional cooperation with the Subcommittee on Prevention of Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment of the Committee against Torture, especially as established in articles 10, paragraph 3, 16, paragraphs 3 and 4, and 24, paragraph 2, of the Optional Protocol to the Convention, the Committee shall meet with the Subcommittee on Prevention, at least once a year, during the regular session they both hold simultaneously.

XV. INFORMATION AND DOCUMENTATION

RULE 63

Submission of information, documentation and written statements

1. The Committee may invite the Secretariat, specialized agencies, United Nations bodies concerned, Special Procedures of the Human Rights Council, intergovernmental organizations, National Human Rights Institutions, non-governmental organizations, and other relevant civil society organizations, to submit to it information, documentation and written statements, as appropriate, relevant to the Committee's activities under the Convention.
2. The Committee may receive, at its discretion, any other information, documentation and written statements submitted to it, including from individuals and sources not mentioned in the previous paragraph of this rule.
3. The Committee shall determine, at its discretion, how such information, documentation and written statements are made available to the members of the Committee, including by devoting meeting time at its sessions for such information to be presented orally.
4. Information, documentation and written statements received by the Committee concerning article 19 of the Convention are made public through appropriate means and channels, including by posting on the Committee's web page. However, in exceptional cases, the Committee may consider, at its discretion, that information, documentation and written statements received are confidential and decide not to make them public. In these cases, the Committee will decide on how to use such information.

XVI. ANNUAL REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE

RULE 64

Annual report

The Committee shall submit an annual report on its activities under the Convention to the States parties and to the General Assembly of the United Nations, including a reference to the activities of the Subcommittee on Prevention, as they appear in the public annual report submitted by the Subcommittee to the Committee under article 16, paragraph 3, of the Optional Protocol.

PART TWO RULES RELATING TO THE FUNCTIONS OF THE COMMITTEEXVII. REPORTS FROM STATES PARTIES
UNDER ARTICLE 19 OF THE CONVENTION*RULE 65*

Submission of reports

1. The States parties shall submit to the Committee, through the Secretary-General, reports on the measures they have taken to give effect to their undertakings under the Convention, within one year after the entry into force of the Convention for the State party concerned. Thereafter the

- States parties shall submit supplementary reports every four years on any new measures taken and such other reports as the Committee may request.
2. The Committee may consider the information contained in a recent report as covering information that should have been included in overdue reports. The Committee may recommend, at its discretion, that States parties consolidate their periodic reports.
 3. The Committee may recommend, at its discretion, that States parties present their periodic reports by a specified date.
 4. The Committee may, through the Secretary-General, inform the States parties of its wishes regarding the form and contents as well as the methodology for consideration of the reports to be submitted under article 19 of the Convention, and issue guidelines to that effect.

RULE 66

List of issues submitted to a State party prior to receiving its report

The Committee may submit to a State party a list of issues prior to receiving its report. If the State party agrees to report under this optional reporting procedure, its response to this list of issues shall constitute, for the respective period, its report under article 19 of the Convention.

RULE 67

Non-submission of reports

1. At each session, the Secretary-General shall notify the Committee of all cases of non-submission of reports under rules 65 and 69. In such cases the Committee may transmit to the State party concerned, through the Secretary-General, a reminder concerning the submission of such report or reports.
2. If, after the reminder referred to in paragraph 1 of this rule, the State party does not submit the report required under rules 65 and 69, the Committee shall so state in the annual report which it submits to the States parties and to the General Assembly of the United Nations.
3. The Committee may notify the defaulting State party through the Secretary-General that it intends, on a date specified in the notification, to examine the measures taken by the State party to protect or give effect to the rights recognized in the Convention in the absence of a report, and adopt concluding observations.

Attendance by States parties at examination of reports

1. The Committee shall, through the Secretary-General, notify the States parties, as early as possible, of the opening date, duration and place of the session at which their respective reports will be examined. Representatives of the States parties shall be invited to attend the meetings of the Committee when their reports are examined. The Committee may also inform a State party from which it decides to seek further information that it may authorize its representative to be present at a specified meeting. Such a representative should be able to answer questions which may be put to him/her by the Committee and make statements on reports already submitted by his/her State, and may also submit additional information from his/her State.
2. If a State party has submitted a report under article 19, paragraph (1), of the Convention but fails to send a representative, in accordance with paragraph 1 of this rule, to the session at which it has been notified that its report will be examined, the Committee may, at its discretion, take one of the following courses:
 - (a) Notify the State party through the Secretary-General that, at a specified session, it intends to examine the report and thereafter act in accordance with rules 68, paragraph 1, and 71; or
 - (b) Proceed at the session originally specified to examine the report and thereafter adopt and submit to the State party provisional concluding observations for its written comments. The Committee shall adopt final concluding observations at its following session.

RULE 69

Request for additional reports and information

1. When considering a report submitted by a State party under article 19 of the Convention, the Committee shall first determine whether the report provides all the information required under rule 65.
2. If a report of a State party to the Convention, in the opinion of the Committee, does not contain sufficient information or the information provided is outdated, the Committee may request, through a list of issues to be sent to the State party, that it furnish an additional report or specific information, indicating by what date the said report or information should be submitted.

RULE 70

Examination of report and dialogue with State party's representatives

1. The Committee may establish, as appropriate, country Rapporteurs or any other methods of expediting its functions under article 19 of the Convention.
2. During the examination of the report of the State party, the Committee shall organize the meeting as it deems appropriate, in order to establish an interactive dialogue between the Committee's members and the State party's representatives.

RULE 71

Concluding observations by the Committee

1. After its consideration of each report, the Committee, in accordance with article 19, paragraph 3, of the Convention, may make such general comments, concluding observations, or recommendations on the report as it may consider appropriate and shall forward these, through the Secretary-General, to the State party concerned, which in reply may submit to the Committee any comment that it considers appropriate.
2. The Committee may, in particular, indicate whether, on the basis of its examination of the report and information supplied by the State party, it appears that some of its obligations under the Convention have not been discharged or that it did not provide sufficient information and, therefore, request the State party to provide the Committee with additional follow-up information by a specified date.
3. The Committee may, at its discretion, decide to include any comments made by it in accordance with paragraph 1 of this rule, together with any observations thereon received from the State party concerned, in its annual report made in accordance with article 24 of the Convention. If so requested by the State party concerned, the Committee may also include a copy of the report submitted under article 19, paragraph 1, of the Convention.

RULE 72

Follow-up and Rapporteurs

1. In order to further the implementation of the Committee's concluding observations, including the information to be provided by the State party under rule 71, paragraph 2, the Committee may designate at least one Rapporteur to follow-up with the State party on its implementation of a number of recommendations identified by the Committee in its concluding observations.
2. The follow-up Rapporteur(s) shall assess the information provided by the State party in consultation with the country Rapporteurs and report at every session to the Committee on his/her activities. The committee may set guidelines for such assessment.

RULE 73

Obligatory non-participation or non-presence of a member in the consideration of a report

1. A member shall not take part in the consideration of a report by the Committee or its subsidiary bodies if he/she is a national of the State party concerned, is employed by that State, or if any other conflict of interest is present.

2. Such a member shall not be present during any non-public consultations or meetings between the Committee and National Human Rights Institutions, non-governmental organizations, or any other entities referred to in rule 63, as well as during the discussion and adoption of the respective concluding observations.

XVIII. GENERAL COMMENTS OF THE COMMITTEE

RULE 74

General comments on the Convention

1. The Committee may prepare and adopt general comments on the provisions of the Convention with a view to promoting its further implementation or to assisting States parties in fulfilling their obligations.
2. The Committee shall include such general comments in its annual report to the General Assembly.

XIX. PROCEEDINGS UNDER ARTICLE 20 OF THE CONVENTION

RULE 75

Transmission of information to the Committee

1. The Secretary-General shall bring to the attention of the Committee, in accordance with the present rules, information which is, or appears to be, submitted for the Committee's consideration under article 20, paragraph 1, of the Convention.
2. No information shall be received by the Committee if it concerns a State party which, in accordance with article 28, paragraph 1, of the Convention, declared at the time of ratification or accession to the Convention that it did not recognize the competence of the Committee provided for in article 20, unless that State has subsequently withdrawn its reservation in accordance with article 28, paragraph 2, of the Convention.

RULE 76

Register of information submitted

The Secretary-General shall maintain a permanent register of information brought to the attention of the Committee in accordance with rule 75 and shall make the information available to any member of the Committee upon request.

RULE 77

Summary of the information

The Secretary-General, when necessary, shall prepare and circulate to the members of the Committee a brief summary of the information submitted in accordance with rule 75.

RULE 78

Confidentiality of documents and proceedings

All documents and proceedings of the Committee relating to its functions under article 20 of the Convention shall be confidential, until such time when the Committee decides, in accordance with the provisions of article 20, paragraph 5, of the Convention, to make them public.

RULE 79

Meetings

1. Meetings of the Committee concerning its proceedings under article 20 of the Convention shall be closed. A member shall neither take part in nor be present at any proceedings under article 20 of the Convention if he/she is a national of the State party concerned, is employed by that State, or if any other conflict of interest is present.

2. Meetings during which the Committee considers general issues, such as procedures for the application of article 20 of the Convention, shall be public, unless the Committee decides otherwise.

RULE 80

Issue of communiqués concerning closed meetings

The Committee may decide to issue communiqués, through the Secretary-General, for the use of the information media and the general public regarding its activities under article 20 of the Convention.

RULE 81

Preliminary consideration of information by the Committee

1. The Committee, when necessary, may ascertain, through the Secretary-General, the reliability of the information and/or of the sources of the information brought to its attention under article 20 of the Convention or obtain additional relevant information substantiating the facts of the situation.
2. The Committee shall determine whether it appears to it that the information received contains well-founded indications that torture, as defined in article 1 of the Convention, is being systematically practised in the territory of the State party concerned.

RULE 82

Examination of the information

1. If it appears to the Committee that the information received is reliable and contains well-founded indications that torture is being systematically practised in the territory of a State party, the Committee shall invite the State party concerned, through the Secretary-General, to cooperate in its examination of the information and, to this end, to submit observations with regard to that information.
2. The Committee shall indicate a time limit for the submission of observations by the State party concerned, with a view to avoiding undue delay in its proceedings.
3. In examining the information received, the Committee shall take into account any observations which may have been submitted by the State party concerned, as well as any other relevant information available to it.
4. The Committee may decide, if it deems it appropriate, to obtain additional information or answers to questions relating to the information under examination from different sources, including the representatives of the State party concerned, governmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as individuals.
5. The Committee shall decide, on its initiative and on the basis of its rules of procedure, the form and manner in which such additional information may be obtained.

RULE 83

Documentation from United Nations bodies and specialized agencies

The Committee may at any time obtain, through the Secretary-General, any relevant documentation from United Nations bodies or specialized agencies that may assist it in the examination of the information received under article 20 of the Convention.

RULE 84

Establishment of an inquiry

1. The Committee may, if it decides that this is warranted, designate one or more of its members to make a confidential inquiry and to report to it within a time limit which may be set by the Committee.
2. When the Committee decides to make an inquiry in accordance with paragraph 1 of this rule, it shall establish the modalities of the inquiry as it deems it appropriate.

3. The members designated by the Committee for the confidential inquiry shall determine their own methods of work in conformity with the provisions of the Convention and the rules of procedure of the Committee.
4. While the confidential inquiry is in progress, the Committee may defer the consideration of any report the State party may have submitted during this period in accordance with article 19, paragraph 1, of the Convention.

RULE 85

Cooperation of the State party concerned

The Committee shall invite the State party concerned, through the Secretary-General, to cooperate with it in the conduct of the inquiry. To this end, the Committee may request the State party concerned:

- (a) To designate an accredited representative to meet with the members designated by the Committee;
- (b) To provide its designated members with any information that they, or the State party, may consider useful for ascertaining the facts relating to the inquiry;
- (c) To indicate any other form of cooperation that the State may wish to extend to the Committee and to its designated members with a view to facilitating the conduct of the inquiry.

RULE 86

Visiting mission

If the Committee deems it necessary to include in its inquiry a visit of one or more of its members to the territory of the State party concerned, it shall request, through the Secretary-General, the agreement of that State party and shall inform the State party of its wishes regarding the timing of the mission and the facilities required to allow the designated members of the Committee to carry out their task.

RULE 87

Hearings in connection with the inquiry

1. The designated members may decide to conduct hearings in connection with the inquiry as they deem it appropriate.
2. The designated members shall establish, in cooperation with the State party concerned, the conditions and guarantees required for conducting such hearings. They shall request the State party to ensure that no obstacles are placed in the way of witnesses and other individuals wishing to meet with the designated members of the Committee and that no retaliatory measure is taken against those individuals or their families.
3. Every person appearing before the designated members for the purpose of giving testimony shall be requested to take an oath or make a solemn declaration concerning the veracity of his/her testimony and respect for the confidentiality of the proceedings.

RULE 88

Assistance during the inquiry

1. In addition to the staff and facilities to be provided by the Secretary-General in connection with the inquiry and/or the visiting mission to the territory of the State party concerned, the designated members may invite, through the Secretary-General, persons with special competence in the medical field or in the treatment of prisoners as well as interpreters to provide assistance at all stages of the inquiry.
2. If the persons providing assistance during the inquiry are not bound by an oath of office to the United Nations, they shall be required to declare solemnly that they will perform their duties honestly, faithfully and impartially, and that they will respect the confidentiality of the proceedings.

3. The persons referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2 of the present rule shall be entitled to the same facilities, privileges and immunities provided for in respect of the members of the Committee, under article 23 of the Convention.

RULE 89

Transmission of findings, comments or suggestions

1. After examining the findings of its designated members submitted to it in accordance with rule 84, paragraph 1, the Committee shall transmit, through the Secretary-General, these findings to the State party concerned, together with any comments or suggestions that it deems appropriate.
2. The State party concerned shall be invited to inform the Committee within a reasonable delay of the action it takes with regard to the Committee's findings and in response to the Committee's comments or suggestions.

RULE 90

Summary account of the results of the proceedings

1. After all the proceedings of the Committee regarding an inquiry made under article 20 of the Convention have been completed, the Committee may decide, after consultations with the State party concerned, to include a summary account of the results of the proceedings in its annual report made in accordance with article 24 of the Convention.
2. The Committee shall invite the State party concerned, through the Secretary-General, to inform the Committee directly or through its designated representative of its observations concerning the question of a possible publication, and may indicate a time limit within which the observations of the State party should be communicated to the Committee.
3. If it decides to include a summary account of the results of the proceedings relating to an inquiry in its annual report, the Committee shall forward, through the Secretary-General, the text of the summary account to the State party concerned.

XX. PROCEDURE FOR THE CONSIDERATION OF COMMUNICATIONS RECEIVED
UNDER ARTICLE 21 OF THE CONVENTION

RULE 91

Declarations by States parties

1. The Secretary-General shall transmit to the other States parties copies of the declarations deposited with him/her by States parties recognizing the competence of the Committee, in accordance with article 21 of the Convention.
2. The withdrawal of a declaration made under article 21 of the Convention shall not prejudice the consideration of any matter that is the subject of a communication already transmitted under that article; no further communication by any State party shall be received under that article after the notification of withdrawal of the declaration has been received by the Secretary-General, unless the State party has made a new declaration.

RULE 92

Notification by the States parties concerned

1. A communication under article 21 of the Convention may be referred to the Committee by either State party concerned by notice given in accordance with paragraph 1 (b) of that article.
2. The notice referred to in paragraph 1 of this rule shall contain or be accompanied by information regarding:
 - (a) Steps taken to seek adjustment of the matter in accordance with article 21, paragraphs 1 (a) and (b), of the Convention, including the text of the initial communication and of any subsequent written explanations or statements by the States parties concerned which are pertinent to the matter;

- (b) Steps taken to exhaust domestic remedies;
- (c) Any other procedure of international investigation or settlement resorted to by the States parties concerned.

RULE 93

Register of communications

The Secretary-General shall maintain a permanent register of all communications received by the Committee under article 21 of the Convention.

RULE 94

Information to the members of the Committee

The Secretary-General shall inform the members of the Committee without delay of any notice given under rule 92 and shall transmit to them as soon as possible copies of the notice and relevant information.

RULE 95

Meetings

The Committee shall examine communications under article 21 of the Convention at closed meetings.

RULE 96

Issue of communiqués concerning closed meetings

The Committee may, after consultation with the States parties concerned, issue communiqués, through the Secretary-General, for the use of the information media and the general public regarding the activities of the Committee under article 21 of the Convention.

RULE 97

Requirements for the consideration of communications

A communication shall not be considered by the Committee unless:

- (a) Both States parties concerned have made declarations under article 21, paragraph 1, of the Convention;
- (b) The time limit prescribed in article 21, paragraph 1 (b), of the Convention has expired;
- (c) The Committee has ascertained that all available domestic remedies have been invoked and exhausted in the matter, in conformity with the generally recognized principles of international law, or that the application of the remedies is unreasonably prolonged or is unlikely to bring effective relief to the person who is the victim of the violation of the Convention.

RULE 98

Good offices

1. Subject to the provisions of rule 97, the Committee shall proceed to make its good offices available to the States parties concerned with a view to an amicable solution of the matter on the basis of respect for the obligations provided for in the Convention.
2. For the purpose indicated in paragraph 1 of this rule, the Committee may, when appropriate, set up an ad hoc conciliation commission.

RULE 99

Request for information

The Committee may, through the Secretary-General, request the States parties concerned or either of them to submit additional information or observations orally or in writing. The Committee shall indicate a time limit for the submission of such written information or observations.

RULE 100

Attendance by the States parties concerned

1. The States parties concerned shall have the right to be represented when the matter is being considered in the Committee and to make submissions orally and/or in writing.
2. The Committee shall, through the Secretary-General, notify the States parties concerned as early as possible of the opening date, duration and place of the session at which the matter will be examined.
3. The procedure for making oral and/or written submissions shall be decided by the Committee, after consultation with the States parties concerned.

RULE 101

Report of the Committee

1. Within 12 months after the date on which the Committee received the notice referred to in rule 92, the Committee shall adopt a report in accordance with article 21, paragraph 1 (h), of the Convention.
2. The provisions of paragraph 1 of rule 100 shall not apply to the deliberations of the Committee concerning the adoption of the report.
3. The Committee's report shall be communicated, through the Secretary-General, to the States parties concerned.

XXI. PROCEDURE FOR THE CONSIDERATION OF COMMUNICATIONS RECEIVED
UNDER ARTICLE 22 OF THE CONVENTION

A. GENERAL PROVISIONS

RULE 102

Declarations by States parties

1. The Secretary-General shall transmit to the other States parties copies of the declarations deposited with him/her by States parties recognizing the competence of the Committee, in accordance with article 22 of the Convention.
2. The withdrawal of a declaration made under article 22 of the Convention shall not prejudice the consideration of any matter which is the subject of a complaint already transmitted under that article; no further complaint by or on behalf of an individual shall be received under that article after the notification of withdrawal of the declaration has been received by the Secretary-General, unless the State party has made a new declaration.

RULE 103

Transmission of complaints

1. The Secretary-General shall bring to the attention of the Committee, in accordance with the present rules, complaints which are or appear to be submitted for consideration by the Committee under paragraph 1 of article 22 of the Convention.
2. The Secretary-General, when necessary, may request clarification from the complainant of a complaint as to his/her wish to have his/her complaint submitted to the Committee for consideration under article 22 of the Convention. In case there is still doubt as to the wish of the complainant, the Committee shall be seized of the complaint.

RULE 104

Registration of complaints; Rapporteur on new complaints and interim measures

1. Complaints may be registered by the Secretary-General or by decision of the Committee or by the Rapporteur on new complaints and interim measures.
2. No complaint shall be registered by the Secretary-General if:
 - (a) It concerns a State which has not made the declaration provided for in article 22, paragraph 1, of the Convention; or

- (b) It is anonymous; or
 - (c) It is not submitted in writing by the alleged victim or by close relatives of the alleged victim on his/her behalf or by a representative with appropriate written authorization.
3. The Secretary-General shall prepare lists of the complaints brought to the attention of the Committee in accordance with rule 103 with a brief summary of their contents, and shall circulate such lists to the members of the Committee at regular intervals. The Secretary-General shall also maintain a permanent register of all such complaints.
 4. An original case file shall be kept for each summarized complaint. The full text of any complaint brought to the attention of the Committee shall be made available to any member of the Committee upon his/her request.

RULE 105

Request for clarification or additional information

1. The Secretary-General or the Rapporteur on new complaints and interim measures may request clarification from the complainant concerning the applicability of article 22 of the Convention to his/her complaint, in particular regarding:
 - (a) The name, address, age and occupation of the complainant and the verification of his/her identity;
 - (b) The name of the State party against which the complaint is directed;
 - (c) The object of the complaint;
 - (d) The provision or provisions of the Convention alleged to have been violated;
 - (e) The facts of the claim;
 - (f) Steps taken by the complainant to exhaust domestic remedies;
 - (g) Whether the same matter is being, or has been, examined under another procedure of international investigation or settlement.
2. When requesting clarification or information, the Secretary-General shall indicate an appropriate time limit to the complainant of the complaint with a view to avoiding undue delays in the procedure under article 22 of the Convention. Such time limit may be extended in appropriate circumstances.
3. The Committee may approve a questionnaire for the purpose of requesting the above-mentioned information from the complainant.
4. The request for clarification referred to in paragraph 1 (c)-(g) of the present rule shall not preclude the inclusion of the complaint in the list provided for in rule 104, paragraph 3.
5. The Secretary-General shall instruct the complainant on the procedure that will be followed and inform him/her that the text of the complaint shall be transmitted confidentially to the State party concerned in accordance with article 22, paragraph 3, of the Convention.

RULE 106

Summary of the information

For each registered complaint the Secretary-General shall prepare and circulate to the members of the Committee a summary of the relevant information obtained.

RULE 107

Meetings and hearings

1. Meetings of the Committee or its subsidiary bodies during which complaints under article 22 of the Convention will be examined shall be closed.
2. Meetings during which the Committee may consider general issues, such as procedures for the application of article 22 of the Convention, may be public if the Committee so decides.

RULE 108

Issue of communiqués concerning closed meetings

The Committee may issue communiqués, through the Secretary-General, for the use of the information media and the general public regarding the activities of the Committee under article 22 of the Convention.

*RULE 109*Obligatory non-participation or non-presence of a member in the examination of a complaint

1. A member shall not take part in the examination of a complaint by the Committee or its subsidiary body if he/she:
 - (a) Has any personal interest in the case or if any other conflict of interest is present; or
 - (b) Has participated in any capacity, other than as a member of the Committee, in the making of any decision; or
 - (c) Is a national of the State party concerned or is employed by that country.
2. Such member shall not be present during any non-public consultations or meetings of the Committee, as well as during any discussion, consideration or adoption related to that complaint.
3. Any question which may arise under paragraphs 1 and 2 above shall be decided by the Committee without the participation of the member concerned.

RULE 110

Optional non-participation of a member in the examination of a complaint

If, for any reason, a member considers that he/she should not take part or continue to take part in the examination of a complaint, he/she shall inform the Chairperson of his/her withdrawal.

B. PROCEDURE FOR DETERMINING ADMISSIBILITY OF COMPLAINTSRULE 111

Method of dealing with complaints

1. In accordance with the following rules, the Committee shall decide by simple majority as soon as practicable whether or not a complaint is admissible under article 22 of the Convention.
2. The Working Group established under rule 112, paragraph 1, may also declare a complaint admissible by majority vote or inadmissible by unanimity.
3. The Committee, the Working Group established under rule 112, paragraph 1, or the Rapporteur(s) designated under rule 112, paragraph 3, shall, unless they decide otherwise, deal with complaints in the order in which they are received by the secretariat.
4. The Committee may, if it deems it appropriate, decide to consider two or more communications jointly.
5. The Committee may, if it deems appropriate, decide to sever consideration of complaints of multiple complainants. Severed complaints may receive a separate registry number.

*RULE 112*Establishment of a working group and designation of special Rapporteurs for specific complaints

1. The Committee may, in accordance with rule 61, set up a working group to meet shortly before its sessions, or at any other convenient time to be decided by the Committee, in consultation with the Secretary-General, for the purpose of taking decisions on admissibility or inadmissibility and making recommendations to the Committee regarding the merits of complaints, and assisting the Committee in any manner which the Committee may decide.
2. The Working Group shall comprise no less than three and no more than five members of the Committee. The Working Group shall elect its own officers, develop its own working methods,

- and apply as far as possible the rules of procedure of the Committee to its meetings. The members of the Working Group shall be elected by the Committee every other session.
3. The Working Group may designate Rapporteurs from among its members to deal with specific complaints.

RULE 113

Conditions for admissibility of complaints

With a view to reaching a decision on the admissibility of a complaint, the Committee, its Working Group or a Rapporteur designated under rules 104 or 112, paragraph 3, shall ascertain:

- (a) That the individual claims to be a victim of a violation by the State party concerned of the provisions of the Convention. The complaint should be submitted by the individual himself/herself or by his/her relatives or designated representatives, or by others on behalf of an alleged victim when it appears that the victim is unable personally to submit the complaint, and, when appropriate authorization is submitted to the Committee;
- (b) That the complaint is not an abuse of the Committee's process or manifestly unfounded;
- (c) That the complaint is not incompatible with the provisions of the Convention;
- (d) That the same matter has not been and is not being examined under another procedure of international investigation or settlement;
- (e) That the individual has exhausted all available domestic remedies. However, this shall not be the rule where the application of the remedies is unreasonably prolonged or is unlikely to bring effective relief to the person who is the victim of the violation of this Convention;
- (f) That the time elapsed since the exhaustion of domestic remedies is not so unreasonably prolonged as to render consideration of the claims unduly difficult by the Committee or the State party.

RULE 114

Interim measures

1. At any time after the receipt of a complaint, the Committee, a working group, or the Rapporteur(s) on new complaints and interim measures may transmit to the State party concerned, for its urgent consideration, a request that it take such interim measures as the Committee considers necessary to avoid irreparable damage to the victim or victims of alleged violations.
2. Where the Committee, the Working Group, or Rapporteur(s) request(s) interim measures under this rule, the request shall not imply a determination of the admissibility or the merits of the complaint. The State party shall be so informed upon transmittal.
3. The decision to grant interim measures may be adopted on the basis of information contained in the complainant's submission. It may be reviewed, at the initiative of the State party, in the light of timely information received from that State party to the effect that the submission is not justified and the complainant does not face any prospect of irreparable harm, together with any subsequent comments from the complainant.
4. Where a request for interim measures is made by the Working Group or Rapporteur(s) under the present rule, the Working Group or Rapporteur(s) should inform the Committee members of the nature of the request and the complaint to which the request relates at the next regular session of the Committee.
5. The Secretary-General shall maintain a list of such requests for interim measures.
6. The Rapporteur on new complaints and interim measures shall also monitor compliance with the Committee's requests for interim measures.
7. The State party may inform the Committee that the reasons for the interim measures have lapsed or present arguments why the request for interim measures should be lifted.
8. The Rapporteur, the Committee or the Working Group may withdraw the request for interim measures.

RULE 115

Additional information, clarifications and observations

1. As soon as possible after the complaint has been registered, it should be transmitted to the State party, requesting it to submit a written reply within six months.
2. The State party concerned shall include in its written reply explanations or statements that shall relate both to the admissibility and the merits of the complaint as well as to any remedy that may have been provided in the matter, unless the Committee, Working Group or Rapporteur on new complaints and interim measures has decided, because of the exceptional nature of the case, to request a written reply that relates only to the question of admissibility.
3. A State party that has received a request for a written reply under paragraph 1 both on admissibility and on the merits of the complaint may apply in writing, within two months, for the complaint to be rejected as inadmissible, setting out the grounds for such inadmissibility. The Committee or the Rapporteur on new complaints and interim measures may or may not agree to consider admissibility separately from the merits.
4. Following a separate decision on admissibility, the Committee shall fix the deadline for submissions on a case-by-case basis.
5. The Committee or the Working Group established under rule 112 or Rapporteur(s) designated under rule 112, paragraph 3, may request, through the Secretary-General, the State party concerned or the complainant to submit additional written information, clarifications or observations relevant to the question of admissibility or merits.
6. The Committee or the Working Group or Rapporteur(s) designated under rule 112, paragraph 3, shall indicate a time limit for the submission of additional information or clarification with a view to avoiding undue delay.
7. If the time limit provided is not respected by the State party concerned or the complainant, the Committee or the Working Group may decide to consider the admissibility and/or merits of the complaint in the light of available information.
8. A complaint may not be declared admissible unless the State party concerned has received its text and has been given an opportunity to furnish information or observations as provided in paragraph 1 of this rule.
9. If the State party concerned disputes the contention of the complainant that all available domestic remedies have been exhausted, the State party is required to give details of the effective remedies available to the alleged victim in the particular circumstances of the case and in accordance with the provisions of article 22, paragraph 5 (b), of the Convention.
10. Within such time limit as indicated by the Committee or the Working Group or Rapporteur(s) designated under rule 112, paragraph 3, the State party or the complainant may be afforded an opportunity to comment on any submission received from the other party pursuant to a request made under the present rule. Non-receipt of such comments within the established time limit should not generally delay the consideration of the admissibility of the complaint.

Inadmissible complaints

1. Where the Committee or the Working Group decides that a complaint is inadmissible under article 22 of the Convention, or its consideration is suspended or discontinued, the Committee shall as soon as possible transmit its decision, through the Secretary-General, to the complainant and to the State party concerned.
2. If the Committee or the Working Group has declared a complaint inadmissible under article 22, paragraph 5, of the Convention, this decision may be reviewed at a later date by the Committee upon a request from a member of the Committee or a written request by or on behalf of the individual concerned. Such written request shall contain evidence to the effect that the reasons for inadmissibility referred to in article 22, paragraph 5, of the Convention no longer apply.

C. CONSIDERATION OF THE MERITSRULE 117

Method of dealing with admissible complaints; oral hearings

1. When the Committee or the Working Group has decided that a complaint is admissible under article 22 of the Convention, before receiving the State party's reply on the merits, the Committee shall transmit to the State party, through the Secretary-General, the text of its decision together with any submission received from the author of the communication not already transmitted to the State party under rule 115, paragraph 1. The Committee shall also inform the complainant, through the Secretary-General, of its decision.
2. Within the period established by the Committee, the State party concerned shall submit to the Committee written explanations or statements clarifying the case under consideration and the measures, if any, that may have been taken by it. The Committee may indicate, if it deems it necessary, the type of information it wishes to receive from the State party concerned.
3. Any explanations or statements submitted by a State party pursuant to this rule shall be transmitted, through the Secretary-General, to the complainant who may submit any additional written information or observations within such time limit as the Committee shall decide.
4. The Committee may invite the complainant or his/her representative and representatives of the State party concerned to be present at specified closed meetings of the Committee in order to provide further clarifications or to answer questions on the merits of the complaint. Whenever one party is so invited, the other party shall be informed and invited to attend and make appropriate submissions. The non-appearance of a party will not prejudice the consideration of the case.
5. The Committee may revoke its decision that a complaint is admissible in the light of any explanations or statements thereafter submitted by the State party pursuant to this rule. However, before the Committee considers revoking that decision, the explanations or statements concerned must be transmitted to the complainant so that he/she may submit additional information or observations within a time limit set by the Committee.

Findings of the Committee; decisions on the merits

1. In those cases in which the parties have submitted information relating both to the questions of admissibility and the merits, or in which a decision on admissibility has already been taken and the parties have submitted information on the merits, the Committee shall consider the complaint in the light of all information made available to it by or on behalf of the complainant and by the State party concerned and shall formulate its findings thereon. Prior thereto, the Committee may refer the communication to the Working Group or to a case Rapporteur designated under rule 112, paragraph 3, to make recommendations to the Committee.
2. The Committee, the Working Group, or the Rapporteur may at any time in the course of the examination obtain any document from United Nations bodies, specialized agencies, or other sources that may assist in the consideration of the complaint.
3. The Committee shall not decide on the merits of a complaint without having considered the applicability of all the admissibility grounds referred to in article 22 of the Convention. The findings of the Committee shall be forwarded, through the Secretary-General, to the complainant and to the State party concerned.
4. The Committee's findings on the merits shall be known as "decisions".
5. The State party concerned shall generally be invited to inform the Committee within a specific time period of the action it has taken in conformity with the Committee's decisions.

RULE 119

Individual opinions

Any member of the Committee who has participated in a decision may request that his/her individual opinion be appended to the Committee's decisions.

RULE 120

Follow-up procedure

1. The Committee may designate one or more Rapporteur(s) for follow-up on decisions adopted under article 22 of the Convention, for the purpose of ascertaining the measures taken by States parties to give effect to the Committee's findings.
 2. The Rapporteur(s) may make such contacts and take such action as appropriate for the due performance of the follow-up mandate and report accordingly to the Committee.
- The Rapporteur(s) may make such recommendations for further action by the Committee as may be necessary for follow-up.
3. The Rapporteur(s) shall regularly report to the Committee on follow-up activities.
 4. The Rapporteur(s), in discharge of the follow-up mandate, may, with the approval of the Committee, engage in necessary visits to the State party concerned.

RULE 121

Summaries in the Committee's annual report and inclusion of texts of final decisions

1. The Committee may decide to include in its annual report a summary of the complaints examined and, where the Committee considers appropriate, a summary of the explanations and statements of the States parties concerned and of the Committee's evaluation thereof.
2. The Committee shall include in its annual report the text of its final decisions under article 22, paragraph 7 of the Convention.
3. The Committee shall include information on follow-up activities in its annual report.

Texts relating to the Optional Protocol

APPENDIX B.1
Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment

Adopted and opened for signature, ratification and accession by General Assembly Resolution
57/199 of 18 December 2002

Entered into force on 22 June 2006, in accordance to Article 28(1)

PREAMBLE

The States Parties to the present Protocol,

Reaffirming that torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment are prohibited and constitute serious violations of human rights,

Convinced that further measures are necessary to achieve the purposes of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (hereinafter referred to as the Convention) and to strengthen the protection of persons deprived of their liberty against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Recalling that articles 2 and 16 of the Convention oblige each State Party to take effective measures to prevent acts of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment in any territory under its jurisdiction,

Recognizing that States have the primary responsibility for implementing those articles, that strengthening the protection of people deprived of their liberty and the full respect for their human rights is a common responsibility shared by all and that international implementing bodies complement and strengthen national measures,

Recalling that the effective prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment requires education and a combination of various legislative, administrative, judicial and other measures,

Recalling also that the World Conference on Human Rights firmly declared that efforts to eradicate torture should first and foremost be concentrated on prevention and called for the adoption of an optional protocol to the Convention, intended to establish a preventive system of regular visits to places of detention,

Convinced that the protection of persons deprived of their liberty against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment can be strengthened by non-judicial means of a preventive nature, based on regular visits to places of detention,

Have agreed as follows:

PART I

General Principles*ARTICLE 1*

The objective of the present Protocol is to establish a system of regular visits undertaken by independent international and national bodies to places where people are deprived of their liberty, in order to prevent torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

ARTICLE 2

1. A Subcommittee on Prevention of Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment of the Committee against Torture (hereinafter referred to as the Subcommittee on Prevention) shall be established and shall carry out the functions laid down in the present Protocol.
2. The Subcommittee on Prevention shall carry out its work within the framework of the Charter of the United Nations and shall be guided by the purposes and principles thereof, as well as the norms of the United Nations concerning the treatment of people deprived of their liberty.
3. Equally, the Subcommittee on Prevention shall be guided by the principles of confidentiality, impartiality, non-selectivity, universality and objectivity.
4. The Subcommittee on Prevention and the States Parties shall cooperate in the implementation of the present Protocol.

ARTICLE 3

Each State Party shall set up, designate or maintain at the domestic level one or several visiting bodies for the prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment (hereinafter referred to as the national preventive mechanism).

ARTICLE 4

1. Each State Party shall allow visits, in accordance with the present Protocol, by the mechanisms referred to in articles 2 and 3 to any place under its jurisdiction and control where persons are or may be deprived of their liberty, either by virtue of an order given by a public authority or at its instigation or with its consent or acquiescence (hereinafter referred to as places of detention). These visits shall be undertaken with a view to strengthening, if necessary, the protection of these persons against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.
2. For the purposes of the present Protocol, deprivation of liberty means any form of detention or imprisonment or the placement of a person in a public or private custodial setting which that person is not permitted to leave at will by order of any judicial, administrative or other authority.

PART II

Subcommittee on Prevention*ARTICLE 5*

1. The Subcommittee on Prevention shall consist of ten members. After the fiftieth ratification of or accession to the present Protocol, the number of the members of the Subcommittee on Prevention shall increase to twenty-five.
2. The members of the Subcommittee on Prevention shall be chosen from among persons of high moral character, having proven professional experience in the field of the administration of justice, in particular criminal law, prison or police administration, or in the various fields relevant to the treatment of persons deprived of their liberty.

3. In the composition of the Subcommittee on Prevention due consideration shall be given to equitable geographic distribution and to the representation of different forms of civilization and legal systems of the States Parties.
4. In this composition consideration shall also be given to balanced gender representation on the basis of the principles of equality and non-discrimination.
5. No two members of the Subcommittee on Prevention may be nationals of the same State.
6. The members of the Subcommittee on Prevention shall serve in their individual capacity, shall be independent and impartial and shall be available to serve the Subcommittee on Prevention efficiently.

ARTICLE 6

1. Each State Party may nominate, in accordance with paragraph 2 of the present article, up to two candidates possessing the qualifications and meeting the requirements set out in article 5, and in doing so shall provide detailed information on the qualifications of the nominees.
2.
 - (a) The nominees shall have the nationality of a State Party to the present Protocol;
 - (b) At least one of the two candidates shall have the nationality of the nominating State Party;
 - (c) No more than two nationals of a State Party shall be nominated;
 - (d) Before a State Party nominates a national of another State Party, it shall seek and obtain the consent of that State Party.
3. At least five months before the date of the meeting of the States Parties during which the elections will be held, the Secretary-General of the United Nations shall address a letter to the States Parties inviting them to submit their nominations within three months. The Secretary-General shall submit a list, in alphabetical order, of all persons thus nominated, indicating the States Parties that have nominated them.

ARTICLE 7

1. The members of the Subcommittee on Prevention shall be elected in the following manner:
 - (a) Primary consideration shall be given to the fulfilment of the requirements and criteria of article 5 of the present Protocol;
 - (b) The initial election shall be held no later than six months after the entry into force of the present Protocol;
 - (c) The States Parties shall elect the members of the Subcommittee on Prevention by secret ballot;
 - (d) Elections of the members of the Subcommittee on Prevention shall be held at biennial meetings of the States Parties convened by the Secretary-General of the United Nations. At those meetings, for which two thirds of the States Parties shall constitute a quorum, the persons elected to the Subcommittee on Prevention shall be those who obtain the largest number of votes and an absolute majority of the votes of the representatives of the States Parties present and voting.
2. If during the election process two nationals of a State Party have become eligible to serve as members of the Subcommittee on Prevention, the candidate receiving the higher number of votes shall serve as the member of the Subcommittee on Prevention. Where nationals have received the same number of votes, the following procedure applies:
 - (a) Where only one has been nominated by the State Party of which he or she is a national, that national shall serve as the member of the Subcommittee on Prevention;
 - (b) Where both candidates have been nominated by the State Party of which they are nationals, a separate vote by secret ballot shall be held to determine which national shall become the member;

- (c) Where neither candidate has been nominated by the State Party of which he or she is a national, a separate vote by secret ballot shall be held to determine which candidate shall be the member.

ARTICLE 8

If a member of the Subcommittee on Prevention dies or resigns, or for any cause can no longer perform his or her duties, the State Party that nominated the member shall nominate another eligible person possessing the qualifications and meeting the requirements set out in article 5, taking into account the need for a proper balance among the various fields of competence, to serve until the next meeting of the States Parties, subject to the approval of the majority of the States Parties. The approval shall be considered given unless half or more of the States Parties respond negatively within six weeks after having been informed by the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the proposed appointment.

ARTICLE 9

The members of the Subcommittee on Prevention shall be elected for a term of four years. They shall be eligible for re-election once if renominated. The term of half the members elected at the first election shall expire at the end of two years; immediately after the first election the names of those members shall be chosen by lot by the Chairman of the meeting referred to in article 7, paragraph 1 (d).

ARTICLE 10

1. The Subcommittee on Prevention shall elect its officers for a term of two years. They may be re-elected.
2. The Subcommittee on Prevention shall establish its own rules of procedure. These rules shall provide, inter alia, that:
 - (a) Half the members plus one shall constitute a quorum;
 - (b) Decisions of the Subcommittee on Prevention shall be made by a majority vote of the members present;
 - (c) The Subcommittee on Prevention shall meet in camera.
3. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall convene the initial meeting of the Subcommittee on Prevention. After its initial meeting, the Subcommittee on Prevention shall meet at such times as shall be provided by its rules of procedure. The Subcommittee on Prevention and the Committee against Torture shall hold their sessions simultaneously at least once a year.

Part IIIMandate of the Subcommittee on PreventionARTICLE 11*

1. The Subcommittee on Prevention shall:
 - (a) Visit the places referred to in article 4 and make recommendations to States Parties concerning the protection of persons deprived of their liberty against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;
 - (b) In regard to the national preventive mechanisms:
 - (i) Advise and assist States Parties, when necessary, in their establishment;
 - (ii) Maintain direct, and if necessary confidential, contact with the national preventive mechanisms and offer them training and technical assistance with a view to strengthening their capacities;

- (iii) Advise and assist them in the evaluation of the needs and the means necessary to strengthen the protection of persons deprived of their liberty against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;
- (iv) Make recommendations and observations to the States Parties with a view to strengthening the capacity and the mandate of the national preventive mechanisms for the prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;
- (c) Cooperate, for the prevention of torture in general, with the relevant United Nations organs and mechanisms as well as with the international, regional and national institutions or organizations working towards the strengthening of the protection of all persons against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

ARTICLE 12

In order to enable the Subcommittee on Prevention to comply with its mandate as laid down in article 11, the States Parties undertake:

- (a) To receive the Subcommittee on Prevention in their territory and grant it access to the places of detention as defined in article 4 of the present Protocol;
- (b) To provide all relevant information the Subcommittee on Prevention may request to evaluate the needs and measures that should be adopted to strengthen the protection of persons deprived of their liberty against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;
- (c) To encourage and facilitate contacts between the Subcommittee on Prevention and the national preventive mechanisms;
- (d) To examine the recommendations of the Subcommittee on Prevention and enter into dialogue with it on possible implementation measures.

ARTICLE 13

1. The Subcommittee on Prevention shall establish, at first by lot, a programme of regular visits to the States Parties in order to fulfil its mandate as established in article 11.
2. After consultations, the Subcommittee on Prevention shall notify the States Parties of its programme in order that they may, without delay, make the necessary practical arrangements for the visits to be conducted.
3. The visits shall be conducted by at least two members of the Subcommittee on Prevention. These members may be accompanied, if needed, by experts of demonstrated professional experience and knowledge in the fields covered by the present Protocol who shall be selected from a roster of experts prepared on the basis of proposals made by the States Parties, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the United Nations Centre for International Crime Prevention. In preparing the roster, the States Parties concerned shall propose no more than five national experts. The State Party concerned may oppose the inclusion of a specific expert in the visit, whereupon the Subcommittee on Prevention shall propose another expert.
4. If the Subcommittee on Prevention considers it appropriate, it may propose a short follow-up visit after a regular visit.

ARTICLE 14

1. In order to enable the Subcommittee on Prevention to fulfil its mandate, the States Parties to the present Protocol undertake to grant it:
 - (a) Unrestricted access to all information concerning the number of persons deprived of their liberty in places of detention as defined in article 4, as well as the number of places and their location;

- (b) Unrestricted access to all information referring to the treatment of those persons as well as their conditions of detention;
 - (c) Subject to paragraph 2 below, unrestricted access to all places of detention and their installations and facilities;
 - (d) The opportunity to have private interviews with the persons deprived of their liberty without witnesses, either personally or with a translator if deemed necessary, as well as with any other person who the Subcommittee on Prevention believes may supply relevant information;
 - (e) The liberty to choose the places it wants to visit and the persons it wants to interview.
2. Objection to a visit to a particular place of detention may be made only on urgent and compelling grounds of national defence, public safety, natural disaster or serious disorder in the place to be visited that temporarily prevent the carrying out of such a visit. The existence of a declared state of emergency as such shall not be invoked by a State Party as a reason to object to a visit.

ARTICLE 15

No authority or official shall order, apply, permit or tolerate any sanction against any person or organization for having communicated to the Subcommittee on Prevention or to its delegates any information, whether true or false, and no such person or organization shall be otherwise prejudiced in any way.

ARTICLE 16

1. The Subcommittee on Prevention shall communicate its recommendations and observations confidentially to the State Party and, if relevant, to the national preventive mechanism.
2. The Subcommittee on Prevention shall publish its report, together with any comments of the State Party concerned, whenever requested to do so by that State Party. If the State Party makes part of the report public, the Subcommittee on Prevention may publish the report in whole or in part. However, no personal data shall be published without the express consent of the person concerned.
3. The Subcommittee on Prevention shall present a public annual report on its activities to the Committee against Torture.
4. If the State Party refuses to cooperate with the Subcommittee on Prevention according to articles 12 and 14, or to take steps to improve the situation in the light of the recommendations of the Subcommittee on Prevention, the Committee against Torture may, at the request of the Subcommittee on Prevention, decide, by a majority of its members, after the State Party has had an opportunity to make its views known, to make a public statement on the matter or to publish the report of the Subcommittee on Prevention.

PART IV

National Preventive Mechanisms

ARTICLE 17

Each State Party shall maintain, designate or establish, at the latest one year after the entry into force of the present Protocol or of its ratification or accession, one or several independent national preventive mechanisms for the prevention of torture at the domestic level. Mechanisms established by decentralized units may be designated as national preventive mechanisms for the purposes of the present Protocol if they are in conformity with its provisions.

ARTICLE 18

1. The States Parties shall guarantee the functional independence of the national preventive mechanisms as well as the independence of their personnel.
2. The States Parties shall take the necessary measures to ensure that the experts of the national preventive mechanism have the required capabilities and professional knowledge. They shall strive for a gender balance and the adequate representation of ethnic and minority groups in the country.
3. The States Parties undertake to make available the necessary resources for the functioning of the national preventive mechanisms.
4. When establishing national preventive mechanisms, States Parties shall give due consideration to the Principles relating to the status of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights.

ARTICLE 19

The national preventive mechanisms shall be granted at a minimum the power:

- (a) To regularly examine the treatment of the persons deprived of their liberty in places of detention as defined in article 4, with a view to strengthening, if necessary, their protection against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;
- (b) To make recommendations to the relevant authorities with the aim of improving the treatment and the conditions of the persons deprived of their liberty and to prevent torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, taking into consideration the relevant norms of the United Nations;
- (c) To submit proposals and observations concerning existing or draft legislation.

ARTICLE 20

In order to enable the national preventive mechanisms to fulfil their mandate, the States Parties to the present Protocol undertake to grant them:

- (a) Access to all information concerning the number of persons deprived of their liberty in places of detention as defined in article 4, as well as the number of places and their location;
- (b) Access to all information referring to the treatment of those persons as well as their conditions of detention;
- (c) Access to all places of detention and their installations and facilities;
- (d) The opportunity to have private interviews with the persons deprived of their liberty without witnesses, either personally or with a translator if deemed necessary, as well as with any other person who the national preventive mechanism believes may supply relevant information;
- (e) The liberty to choose the places they want to visit and the persons they want to interview;
- (f) The right to have contacts with the Subcommittee on Prevention, to send it information and to meet with it.

ARTICLE 21

1. No authority or official shall order, apply, permit or tolerate any sanction against any person or organization for having communicated to the national preventive mechanism any information, whether true or false, and no such person or organization shall be otherwise prejudiced in any way.
2. Confidential information collected by the national preventive mechanism shall be privileged. No personal data shall be published without the express consent of the person concerned.

ARTICLE 22

The competent authorities of the State Party concerned shall examine the recommendations of the national preventive mechanism and enter into a dialogue with it on possible implementation measures.

ARTICLE 23

The States Parties to the present Protocol undertake to publish and disseminate the annual reports of the national preventive mechanisms.

PART VDeclarationARTICLE 24*

1. Upon ratification, States Parties may make a declaration postponing the implementation of their obligations under either part III or part IV of the present Protocol.
2. This postponement shall be valid for a maximum of three years. After due representations made by the State Party and after consultation with the Subcommittee on Prevention, the Committee against Torture may extend that period for an additional two years.

PART VIFinancial provisionsARTICLE 25*

1. The expenditure incurred by the Subcommittee on Prevention in the implementation of the present Protocol shall be borne by the United Nations.
2. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall provide the necessary staff and facilities for the effective performance of the functions of the Subcommittee on Prevention under the present Protocol.

ARTICLE 26

1. A Special Fund shall be set up in accordance with the relevant procedures of the General Assembly, to be administered in accordance with the financial regulations and rules of the United Nations, to help finance the implementation of the recommendations made by the Subcommittee on Prevention after a visit to a State Party, as well as education programmes of the national preventive mechanisms.
2. The Special Fund may be financed through voluntary contributions made by Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and other private or public entities.

PART VIIFinal ProvisionsARTICLE 27*

1. The present Protocol is open for signature by any State that has signed the Convention.

2. The present Protocol is subject to ratification by any State that has ratified or acceded to the Convention. Instruments of ratification shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.
3. The present Protocol shall be open to accession by any State that has ratified or acceded to the Convention.
4. Accession shall be effected by the deposit of an instrument of accession with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.
5. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall inform all States that have signed the present Protocol or acceded to it of the deposit of each instrument of ratification or accession.

ARTICLE 28

1. The present Protocol shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after the date of deposit with the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the twentieth instrument of ratification or accession.
2. For each State ratifying the present Protocol or acceding to it after the deposit with the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the twentieth instrument of ratification or accession, the present Protocol shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after the date of deposit of its own instrument of ratification or accession.

ARTICLE 29

The provisions of the present Protocol shall extend to all parts of federal States without any limitations or exceptions.

ARTICLE 30

No reservations shall be made to the present Protocol.

ARTICLE 31

The provisions of the present Protocol shall not affect the obligations of States Parties under any regional convention instituting a system of visits to places of detention. The Subcommittee on Prevention and the bodies established under such regional conventions are encouraged to consult and cooperate with a view to avoiding duplication and promoting effectively the objectives of the present Protocol.

ARTICLE 32

The provisions of the present Protocol shall not affect the obligations of States Parties to the four Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto of 8 June 1977, nor the opportunity available to any State Party to authorize the International Committee of the Red Cross to visit places of detention in situations not covered by international humanitarian law.

ARTICLE 33

1. Any State Party may denounce the present Protocol at any time by written notification addressed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall thereafter inform the other States Parties to the present Protocol and the Convention. Denunciation shall take effect one year after the date of receipt of the notification by the Secretary-General.
2. Such a denunciation shall not have the effect of releasing the State Party from its obligations under the present Protocol in regard to any act or situation that may occur prior to the date on which the denunciation becomes effective, or to the actions that the Subcommittee on Prevention has decided or may decide to take with respect to the State Party concerned, nor shall denunciation prejudice in any way the continued consideration of any matter already under consideration by the Subcommittee on Prevention prior to the date on which the denunciation becomes effective.

3. Following the date on which the denunciation of the State Party becomes effective, the Subcommittee on Prevention shall not commence consideration of any new matter regarding that State.

ARTICLE 34

1. Any State Party to the present Protocol may propose an amendment and file it with the Secretary-General of the United Nations. The Secretary-General shall thereupon communicate the proposed amendment to the States Parties to the present Protocol with a request that they notify him whether they favour a conference of States Parties for the purpose of considering and voting upon the proposal. In the event that within four months from the date of such communication at least one third of the States Parties favour such a conference, the Secretary-General shall convene the conference under the auspices of the United Nations. Any amendment adopted by a majority of two thirds of the States Parties present and voting at the conference shall be submitted by the Secretary-General of the United Nations to all States Parties for acceptance.
2. An amendment adopted in accordance with paragraph 1 of the present article shall come into force when it has been accepted by a two-thirds majority of the States Parties to the present Protocol in accordance with their respective constitutional processes.
3. When amendments come into force, they shall be binding on those States Parties that have accepted them, other States Parties still being bound by the provisions of the present Protocol and any earlier amendment that they have accepted.

ARTICLE 35

Members of the Subcommittee on Prevention and of the national preventive mechanisms shall be accorded such privileges and immunities as are necessary for the independent exercise of their functions. Members of the Subcommittee on Prevention shall be accorded the privileges and immunities specified in section 22 of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations of 13 February 1946, subject to the provisions of section 23 of that Convention.

ARTICLE 36

When visiting a State Party, the members of the Subcommittee on Prevention shall, without prejudice to the provisions and purposes of the present Protocol and such privileges and immunities as they may enjoy:

- (a) Respect the laws and regulations of the visited State;
- (b) Refrain from any action or activity incompatible with the impartial and international nature of their duties.

ARTICLE 37

1. The present Protocol, of which the Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.
2. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall transmit certified copies of the present Protocol to all States.

Selected Draft Optional Protocol Texts

DRAFT OPTIONAL PROTOCOL TO THE DRAFT INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION AGAINST TORTURE AND OTHER CRUEL, INHUMAN OR DEGRADING TREATMENT OR PUNISHMENT
(ORIGINAL COSTA RICA DRAFT)

(6 MARCH 1980)¹

Preamble

The States Parties to the present Protocol,

Considering that in order further to achieve the purpose of the International Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (hereinafter referred to as the Convention) and the implementation of its provisions, it would be appropriate to establish an independent International Committee authorised to arrange visits to places of detention of all kinds under the jurisdiction of the States Parties to the present Protocol and to report thereon with recommendations to the governments concerned,

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1

1. A State Party to the Convention that becomes a party to the present Protocol agrees to permit visits in accordance with the terms of the present Protocol to any place (hereinafter referred to as a place of detention) subject to the jurisdiction of a State Party where persons are held who have been deprived of their liberty for any reasons, including persons under investigation by the law enforcement authorities, civil or military, persons in preventive, administrative or re-educative detention, persons who are being prosecuted or punished for any offence and persons in custody for medical reasons.
2. A place of detention within the meaning of this Article shall not include any place which representatives or delegates of a Protecting Power or of the International Committee of the Red Cross are entitled to visit and do visit pursuant to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and their additional protocols of 1977.

ARTICLE 14

1. The present control is open for signature by any State which has signed the Convention.
2. The present Protocol is subject to ratification or accession by any State which has ratified or acceded to the Convention. Instruments of ratification or accession shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.
3. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall inform all States which have signed the present Protocol or acceded to it of the deposit of each instrument of ratification or accession.

1. Subject to the entry into force of the Convention, the present Protocol shall enter into force three months after the deposit of the fifth instrument of ratification or accession.
2. For each State ratifying the present Protocol or acceding to it after the deposit of the fifth instrument of ratification or instrument of accession, the present Protocol shall enter into force three months after the date of the deposit of its own instrument of ratification or instrument of accession.

ARTICLE 16

Any State Party may denounce the present Protocol at any time by written notification addressed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall inform the other State Parties and the Committee. Denunciation shall take effect one year after the date of receipt of the notification. Denunciation shall not affect the execution of measures authorised prior to it.

DRAFT OPTIONAL PROTOCOL TO THE CONVENTION
AGAINST TORTURE AND OTHER CRUEL, INHUMAN, OR DEGRADING TREATMENT OR PUNISHMENT (REVISED COSTA RICA DRAFT)

(5 JANUARY 1991)²

Preamble

The States Parties to the present Protocol,

Considering that in order to further achieve the purpose of the United Nations Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (hereinafter referred to as the Convention) it is appropriate to strengthen the protection of persons deprived of their liberty from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, by resorting to non-judicial means of a preventive character based on visits,

Have agreed as follows:

PART IArticle 1

1. A State Party to the present Protocol agrees to permit visits, in accordance with this Protocol, to any place within its jurisdiction where persons deprived of their liberty by a public authority or at its instigation or with its consent or acquiescence are held or may be held.
2. The object of the visits shall be to examine the treatment of persons deprived of their liberty with a view to strengthening, if necessary, the protection of such persons from torture and from other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment in accordance with international standards.

² E/CN.4/1991/66.

Article 2

The Committee against Torture shall establish a Subcommittee for the Prevention of Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (hereinafter referred to as the Subcommittee); the Subcommittee shall be responsible for organizing missions to the States Parties to the present Protocol for the purposes stated in article 1.

Article 3

In the application of this Protocol, the Subcommittee and the competent national authorities of the State Party concerned shall cooperate with each other.

PART IIArticle 4

1. The Subcommittee shall consist of a maximum of 25 members. While there are less than 25 States Parties to the present Protocol, the number of members of the Subcommittee shall be equal to that of the States Parties.
2. The members of the Subcommittee shall be chosen from among persons of high moral character, having proven professional experience in the field of prison or police administration or in the various medical fields relevant to the treatment of persons deprived of their liberty or in the field of the international protection of human rights.
3. No two members of the Subcommittee may be nationals of the same State.
4. The members of the Subcommittee shall serve in their individual capacity, shall be independent and impartial and shall be available to serve the Subcommittee effectively.

Article 5

1. The members of the Subcommittee shall be elected by the Committee against Torture by an absolute majority of votes from a list of persons possessing the qualifications prescribed in article 4 and nominated by the States Parties to the present Protocol.
2. Within three months of the entry into force of the present Protocol, the accession of a new member or a vacancy, each State Party shall nominate three persons, at least two of whom shall possess its nationality. They shall be indicated in alphabetical order.
3. Subject to article 4, paragraph 1, the Committee against Torture shall hold elections whenever there is an accession to the present Protocol or a vacancy in the Subcommittee.
4. A member shall be eligible for re-election if renominated.

Article 6

1. The members of the Subcommittee shall be elected for a period of four years. However, among the members elected at the first election, the terms of five members, to be chosen by lot, shall expire at the end of two years.
2. In the election of the members of the Subcommittee, consideration shall be given to equitable geographical distribution of membership, to a proper balance among the various fields of competence referred to in article 4, paragraph 2, and to the representation of different traditions and legal systems.

Article 7

1. The Subcommittee shall meet for a regular session at least twice a year; for special sessions at the initiative of its Chairman or at the request of not less than one third of its members.

2. The Subcommittee shall meet in camera. Half of the members shall constitute a quorum. The decisions of the Subcommittee shall be taken by a majority of the members present, subject to article 14, paragraph 2.
3. The Subcommittee shall draw up its own rules of procedure.
4. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall provide the necessary staff and facilities for the effective performance of the functions of the Committee against Torture and the Subcommittee under this Protocol.

PART III

Article 8

1. The Subcommittee shall establish a programme of regular missions to each of the States Parties. Apart from regular missions, it shall also undertake such other missions as appear to it to be required in the circumstances.
2. The Subcommittee shall postpone any such mission if the State Party concerned has agreed to a visit to its territory by the Committee against Torture pursuant to article 20, paragraph 3, of the Convention.

Article 9

1. If, on the basis of a regional convention, a system of visits to places of detention similar to the one of the present Protocol is in force for a State Party, the Subcommittee shall only in exceptional cases, when required by important circumstances, send its own mission to such a State Party. It may, however, consult with the organs established under such regional conventions with a view to coordinating activities including the possibility of having one of its members participate in missions carried out under the regional conventions as an observer. Such an observer shall report to the Subcommittee. This report shall be strictly confidential and shall not be made public.
2. The present Protocol does not affect the provisions of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of victims of war and their Additional Protocols of 8 June 1977 by which the Protecting Powers and the International Committee of the Red Cross visit places of detention, or the right of any State Party to authorize the International Committee to visit places of detention in situations not covered by international humanitarian law.

Article 10

1. As a general rule, the missions shall be carried out by at least two members of the Subcommittee, assisted by experts and interpreters if necessary.
2. No member of a delegation shall be a national of the State to be visited.

Article 11

1. Experts shall act on the instructions and under the authority of the Subcommittee. They shall have particular knowledge and experience in the areas covered by this Protocol and shall be bound by the same duties of independence, impartiality and availability as the members of the Subcommittee.
2. A State Party may exceptionally and for reasons given confidentially declare that an expert or other person assisting the Subcommittee may not take part in a mission to its territory.

Article 12

1. The Subcommittee shall notify the Government of the State Party concerned of its intention to organize a mission. After such notification, it may at any time visit any place referred to in article 1, paragraph 1.
2. The State Party within whose jurisdiction a mission is to take place or is being carried out shall provide the delegation with all the facilities necessary for the proper fulfilment of their tasks and shall not obstruct by any means or measures the programme of visits or any other activities which the delegation is carrying out specifically for or in relation to the visits. In particular, the State Party shall provide the delegation with the following facilities:
 - (a) access to its territory and the right to travel without restriction;
 - (b) full information on the places referred to in article 1, paragraph 1, including information requested about specific persons;
 - (c) unlimited access to any place referred to in article 1, paragraph 1, including the right to move inside such places without restriction;
 - (d) assistance in gaining access to places where the delegation has reason to believe that persons may be deprived of their liberty;
 - (e) producing any person deprived of his liberty whom the delegation wishes to interview, at the request of the delegation and at a convenient location;
 - (f) other information available to the State Party which is necessary for the delegation to carry out its task.
3. Members of the delegation may interview in private, inside or outside his place of detention, without witnesses, and for the time they deem necessary, any person deprived of his liberty under the terms of article 1. They may also communicate without restriction with relatives, friends, lawyers and doctors of persons who are or have been deprived of their liberty, and with any other person or organization that they think may be able to provide them with relevant information for their mission. In seeking such information, the delegation shall have regard to applicable rules of national law relating to data protection and principles of medical ethics.
4. No authority or official shall order, apply, permit or tolerate any sanction against any person or organization for having communicated to the Subcommittee or to the delegates any information, whether true or false, and no such person or organization shall be otherwise prejudiced in any way.
5. In urgent cases the delegation shall at once submit observations and recommendations either of general or specific nature to the competent authorities of the State Party concerned.

Article 13

1. In the context of a mission, the competent authorities of the State Party concerned may make representations to the Subcommittee or its delegation against a particular visit if urgent and compelling reasons relating to serious disorder in the particular place to be visited temporarily prevent the carrying out of the visit.
2. Following any such representation, the Subcommittee and the State Party shall immediately enter into consultations in order to clarify the situation and seek agreement on arrangements to enable the Subcommittee to exercise its functions expeditiously. Such arrangements may include the transfer to another place of any person whom the Subcommittee proposed to visit. Until the visit takes place, the State Party shall provide information to the Subcommittee about any person concerned.

Article 14

1. After each mission, the Subcommittee shall draw up a report on the facts found during the mission, taking account of any observations which may have been submitted by the State Party

- concerned. It shall transmit to the latter its report containing any recommendations it considers necessary and may consult with the State Party with a view to suggesting, if necessary, improvements in the protection of persons deprived of their liberty.
2. If the State Party fails to cooperate or refuses to improve the situation in the light of the Subcommittee's recommendations, the Committee against Torture may at the request of the Subcommittee decide by a majority of its members, after the State Party has had an opportunity to make known its views, to make a public statement on the matter or to publish the Subcommittee's report.
 3. The Subcommittee shall publish its report, together with any comments of the State Party concerned, whenever requested to do so by that State Party. If the State Party makes part of the report public, the Subcommittee may publish the report in whole or in part. However, no personal data shall be published without the express consent of the person concerned.
 4. In all other respects, the information gathered by the Subcommittee and its delegation in relation to a mission, its report and its consultation with the State Party concerned shall remain confidential. Members of the Committee against Torture, the Subcommittee, its delegations and their staff are required to maintain confidentiality during and after their terms of office.

1. The Committee against Torture shall examine the reports and recommendations which may be submitted to it by the Subcommittee. It shall keep them confidential as long as no public statement in accordance with article 14, paragraph 2, has been made or as long as they have not become public in accordance with article 14, paragraph 3, of this Protocol.
2. Subject to the rules of confidentiality, the Subcommittee shall every year submit a general annual report on its activities to the Committee against Torture, which shall include information on the activities under this Protocol in its annual report to the General Assembly of the United Nations in accordance with article 24 of the Convention.

PART IV

Article 16

The expenditures incurred by the implementation of the present Protocol, including all its missions, shall be borne by the United Nations.

- [1. States Parties shall contribute to the expenditure incurred in the implementation of the present Protocol on the basis of the scale used by the United Nations.
2. There may be established a Special Fund based on voluntary contributions of States, inter-governmental organizations, non-governmental organizations, private institutions and individuals.
3. The Special Fund shall supplement the financing by the States Parties of all the activities provided for in this Protocol. It shall be managed by the Subcommittee, which shall report to a Board of Trustees appointed by the States Parties.
4. Any expenses, such as the cost of staff, interpreters and facilities, incurred by the United Nations pursuant to article 7, paragraph 4, shall be reimbursed by contributions of the States Parties and the Special Fund].

Article 17

1. The present Protocol is open for signature by any State which has signed the Convention.
2. The present Protocol is subject to ratification or open to accession by any State which has ratified or acceded to the Convention. Instruments of ratification or accession shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

3. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall inform all States which have signed the present Protocol or acceded to it of the deposit of each instrument of ratification or accession.

Article 18

1. The present Protocol shall enter into force three months after the deposit of the tenth instrument of ratification or accession.
2. For each State ratifying the present Protocol or acceding to it after the deposit of the tenth instrument of ratification or instrument of accession, the present Protocol shall enter into force three months after the date of the deposit of its own instrument of ratification or accession.
3. No reservations may be made in respect of the provisions of this Protocol.

Article 19

Any State Party may denounce the present Protocol at any time by written notification addressed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall thereafter inform the other States Parties, the Committee against Torture and the Subcommittee. Denunciation shall take effect one year after the date of receipt of the notification by the Secretary-General.

Article 20

The members of the Subcommittee and of its delegations shall be entitled to the facilities, privileges and immunities referred to in article 23 of the Convention.

Article 21

1. The present Protocol, of which the Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited in the archives of the United Nations.
2. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall transmit certified copies of this Protocol to all States.

ALTERNATIVE PRELIMINARY DRAFT OPTIONAL PROTOCOL TO THE CONVENTION AGAINST TORTURE AND OTHER
CRUEL, INHUMAN OR DEGRADING TREATMENT OR PUNISHMENT, SUBMITTED BY THE DELEGATION OF MEXICO WITH THE SUPPORT OF THE LATIN AMERICAN GROUP (GRULAC) AT THE NINTH SESSION OF THE WORKING GROUP IN 2001 (MEXICAN DRAFT)

(13 FEBRUARY 2001)³

Preamble

The States Parties to the present Optional Protocol,

Recognizing that torture and other, cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment are prohibited,

Recalling that articles 2 and 16 of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment require each State Party to take effective measures to prevent acts of torture and other acts of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment in any territory under its jurisdiction,

Further recalling that the effective prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment requires a combination of legislative, administrative, judicial and other measures,

Recognizing that States have the primary responsibility for implementing international law and the relevant international standards, that strengthening the protection of and full respect for human rights is a common responsibility shared by all and that international mechanisms are complementary to national measures,

Convinced that the protection of persons deprived of their liberty against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment may be strengthened by non-judicial means of a preventive character based on visits to places of detention,

Desiring to undertake an international commitment to make the prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment more effective,

Have agreed as follows,

PART I

Article 1

Each State Party to the present Protocol shall establish or maintain, at the national level, a visiting mechanism for the prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment (hereinafter referred to as the national mechanism), which shall carry out visits to places in any territory under its jurisdiction where persons may be or are deprived of their liberty pursuant to an order of a public authority or at its instigation or with its consent or acquiescence (hereinafter referred to as places of detention), with a view to strengthening, if necessary, the protection of such persons from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Article 2 (former art. 2, amended)

There shall be established a Subcommittee for the Prevention of Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment of the Committee against Torture which shall carry out the functions laid down in the present Protocol (hereinafter referred to as the Subcommittee):

1. The Subcommittee shall be responsible for supporting and supervising the work carried out by national mechanisms in accordance with the provisions of the present Protocol;
2. The Subcommittee shall carry out its work within the framework of the Charter of the United Nations and shall be guided by the purposes and principles enunciated therein;
3. The Subcommittee shall also be guided by the principles of confidentiality, impartiality, universality and objectivity.

PART II

Article 3

Each State Party shall establish a national mechanism at the highest possible level within one year of the entry into force of, or of its accession to, the present Protocol.

Article 4

1. When setting up a national mechanism, each State Party shall guarantee its functional independence and the independence of its staff.

2. Each State Party shall take the necessary measures to ensure that the members of the national mechanism have the professional knowledge and skills required. It shall also take account of the gender balance and the need to ensure that ethnic groups and minorities are adequately represented.
3. The members shall be chosen from among persons of high moral character having proven professional experience in the field of the practice of law and the administration of justice, in particular in criminal law, prison or police administration or in the various medical fields relevant to the treatment of persons deprived of their liberty or in the field of human rights.

Article 5

National mechanisms shall have the following powers, as a minimum:

- (a) To examine the situation of persons deprived of their liberty with a view to strengthening, if necessary, their protection from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;
- (b) To make recommendations to the competent authorities with a view to improving the treatment and conditions of persons deprived of their liberty and preventing torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;
- (c) To propose or comment on draft or existing legislation on this question;
- (d) To take any initiatives that would help States Parties fulfil their obligations under the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and other relevant international instruments.

Article 6

1. In order to assess the situation of persons deprived of their liberty and to make the relevant recommendations, national prevention mechanisms shall carry out visits to places where persons are deprived of their liberty; they shall have:
 - (a) Unrestricted access to all relevant information concerning the number of persons deprived of their liberty pursuant to an order of a public authority or at its instigation or with its consent or acquiescence, as well as the number of places and their location;
 - (b) Unrestricted access to all information relevant to treatment and conditions of detention;
 - (c) Unrestricted access to all places where persons are deprived of their liberty;
 - (d) Unrestricted access to all premises where persons are deprived of their liberty;
 - (e) Freedom to interview persons deprived of their liberty, without witnesses, personally or with the assistance of an interpreter, if required, as well as of any personnel deemed necessary;
 - (f) Freedom to select the places they wish to visit;
 - (g) Unrestricted freedom to contact, inform and meet with the Subcommittee.
2. Such visits may not be prohibited except in cases of absolute military necessity or serious disturbances in the place to be visited and then only as an exceptional and temporary measure. The organization, frequency and duration of such visits may not be restricted.
3. No person or organization may be penalized or otherwise harmed for having provided relevant information to a national mechanism.

Article 7

1. National mechanisms shall:
 - (a) Inform the competent authorities of their observations and make recommendations to them;
 - (b) Regularly inform the Subcommittee of their observations and recommendations.
2. No personal data shall be made public without the prior consent of the person concerned, subject to liability.

Article 8

Each State Party to the present Protocol undertakes to implement the recommendations made by its national mechanism.

PART IIIArticle 9 (former art. 4)

1. The Subcommittee shall be composed of 10 members. After the fiftieth accession to the present Protocol, the number of members of the Subcommittee shall increase to 25.
2. The members of the Subcommittee shall be chosen from among persons of high moral character having proven professional experience in the field of the administration of justice, in particular in criminal law, prison or police administration or in the various medical fields relevant to the treatment of persons deprived of their liberty or in the field of human rights.
3. No two members of the Subcommittee may be nationals of the same State.
4. The members of the Subcommittee shall serve in their individual capacity, shall be independent and impartial and shall be available to serve the Subcommittee effectively.

Article 10 (former art. 5)

1. Each State Party may nominate, in accordance with paragraph 2, up to two candidates possessing the qualifications and meeting the requirements set out in article 9, and in doing so shall provide detailed information on the qualifications of the nominees.
2.
 - (a) Nominees of the Subcommittee shall have the nationality of a State Party to the present Protocol;
 - (b) At least one of the two candidates shall have the nationality of the nominating State Party;
 - (c) Not more than two nationals of a State Party shall be nominated;
 - (d) Before a State Party nominates a national of another State Party, it shall seek and obtain the written consent of that State Party.
3. At least five months before the date of the meeting of the States Parties during which the elections will be held, the Secretary-General of the United Nations shall address a letter to the States Parties inviting them to submit their nominations within three months. The Secretary-General shall submit a list in alphabetical order of all persons thus nominated, indicating the States Parties which have nominated them.

Article 11 (former art. 6)

1. The members of the Subcommittee shall be elected in the following manner:
 - (a) Elections of the members of the Subcommittee shall be held at biennial meetings of States Parties convened by the Secretary-General of the United Nations. At those meetings, for which two thirds of the States Parties shall constitute a quorum, the persons elected to the Subcommittee shall be those who obtain the largest number of votes and an absolute majority of the votes of the representatives of the States Parties present and voting;
 - (b) The initial election shall be held no later than six months after the date of the entry into force of the present Protocol;
 - (c) The States Parties shall elect the members of the Subcommittee by secret ballot;
 - (d) In the election of the members of the Subcommittee, primary consideration shall be given to the fulfilment of the requirements and criteria of article 9. Furthermore, due consideration shall be given to the equitable geographical distribution of membership and to the representation of the different forms of civilization and legal systems of the States Parties.

2. Consideration shall also be given to the balanced representation of women and men on the basis of the principles of equality and non-discrimination.
3. If, during the election process, two nationals of a State Party have become eligible to serve as members of the Subcommittee, the candidate receiving the higher number of votes shall serve as the member of the Subcommittee.

Article 12 (former art. 7)

If a member of the Subcommittee dies or resigns or for any other cause can no longer perform the member's Subcommittee duties, the State Party which nominated the member shall nominate another eligible person possessing the qualifications and meeting the requirements set out in article 9, taking into account the need for a proper balance among the various fields of competence, to serve until the next meeting of the States Parties, subject to approval of the majority of the States Parties. The approval shall be considered given unless half or more of the States Parties respond negatively within six weeks after having been informed by the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the proposed appointment.

Article 13 (former art. 9 [6])

The members of the Subcommittee shall be elected for a term of four years. They shall be eligible for re-election once if re-nominated. The term of half of the members elected at the first election shall expire at the end of two years; immediately after the first election, the names of these members shall be chosen by lot by the Chairman of the meeting referred to in article 11, paragraph 1.

Article 14 (former art. 10 [7])

1. The Subcommittee shall elect its officers for a term of two years. They may be re-elected.
2. The Subcommittee shall establish its own rules of procedure, but these rules shall provide, inter alia, that:
 - (a) Half plus one of its members shall constitute a quorum;
 - (b) Decisions of the Subcommittee shall be made by a majority vote of the members present;
 - (c) The Subcommittee shall meet in camera.
3. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall convene the initial meeting of the Subcommittee. After its initial meeting, the Subcommittee shall meet at such times as shall be provided in its rules of procedure.

PART IVArticle 15

The Subcommittee shall have as its mandate to:

1. Advise and assist States Parties, when necessary, in the establishment of national mechanisms;
2. Maintain close contact with national mechanisms and provide them with training and advice with a view to strengthening their capacities;
3. Provide national mechanisms with assistance and advice in assessing needs and measures in order to strengthen the protection of persons deprived of their liberty against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;
4. Supervise the functioning of national mechanisms;
5. Make recommendations to national mechanisms and to States Parties on measures to strengthen, if necessary, the protection of persons deprived of their liberty against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;

6. Make recommendations and observations to States Parties with a view to strengthening the capacities and mandate of national mechanisms for the prevention of torture.

Article 16

1. In order to enable the Subcommittee to fulfil its mandate as set out in article 15, States Parties undertake to:
 - (a) Facilitate contact between the Subcommittee and national mechanisms;
 - (b) Receive the Subcommittee in their territory when required;
 - (c) Implement the recommendations of the Subcommittee.
2. The Subcommittee may request any information from national mechanisms that may enable it to assess needs and the measures to be taken to strengthen the protection of persons deprived of their liberty against torture and other forms of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, including information concerning the number and location of places of detention, the persons deprived of their liberty and their treatment.

Article 17

1. The Subcommittee shall inform the Committee against Torture and the State Party concerned of its recommendations and observations.
2. The Subcommittee shall submit an annual report of its activities to the Committee against Torture.

Article 18

1. The Subcommittee and the State Party concerned shall cooperate with each other in the implementation of this Protocol (former art. 3, para. 1).
2. The Subcommittee should cooperate in the prevention of torture with all bodies and mechanisms and with all international or regional mechanisms working to strengthen the protection of persons deprived of their liberty against torture and other forms of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Article 19

1. The provisions of the present Protocol shall not affect the obligations of States Parties under any regional convention based on a system of visits to places of detention. The Subcommittee and the bodies established on the basis of such regional mechanisms shall consult and cooperate in order to promote effectively the objectives of the present Protocol and avoid any duplication of work.
2. The provisions of the present Protocol shall not affect the obligations of States Parties to the four Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and their Additional Protocols of 8 June 1977, or the opportunity available to any State Party to authorize the International Committee of the Red Cross to visit places of detention in situations not covered by international humanitarian law.

Article 20 (former art. 16, amended)

1. The expenditure incurred by the implementation of the present Protocol shall be borne by the United Nations.
2. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall provide the staff and services necessary for the effective performance by the Subcommittee of its functions under the present Protocol.

Article 21 (former art. 17 [16 bis])

1. A Special Fund shall be set up in accordance with General Assembly procedures, to be administered in accordance with the financial regulations and rules of the United Nations, to help finance the implementation of the recommendations of the Subcommittee, in response to an express request by a State Party for assistance in its efforts to improve the protection of persons deprived of their liberty.
2. This Fund may be financed through voluntary contributions made by Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and other private or public entities.

Article 22

The States Parties to the present Protocol undertake to accord the Subcommittee all the powers granted to national mechanisms for the prevention of torture under the provisions of articles 5 and 6 if, within two years of ratification of the present Protocol, a national mechanism has not started to visit places of detention.

Article 23

1. A State Party to the present Protocol may at any time declare under this article that it agrees to receive a delegation of the Subcommittee to carry out, in accordance with the present Protocol, visits to any territory under its jurisdiction where persons deprived of their liberty by a public authority or at its instigation or with its consent or acquiescence are or may be held.
2. The Subcommittee shall establish, by lot, a programme of visits to all States Parties making the declaration provided for in the preceding paragraph.
3. Such visits may be conducted jointly with the national mechanism.
4. Visits shall be conducted by at least two members of the Subcommittee. They may be accompanied by experts of demonstrated professional experience and knowledge in the fields covered by the present Protocol and shall be selected by consensus from a roster of experts prepared on the basis of proposals made by the States Parties that have made the declaration provided for in paragraph 1 of this article, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the United Nations Centre for Crime Prevention. In preparing the roster of experts, the States Parties concerned shall propose no more than five national experts.
5. The delegation making the visits and its members shall enjoy the same powers and duties conferred on the national mechanism under articles 5, 6 and 7, paragraphs 1 (a) and 2.
6. The provisions of this article shall enter into force when five States Parties to the present Protocol have made the declaration provided for in paragraph 1 of this article. Such declarations must be deposited by States Parties with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall transmit copies thereof to the other States Parties. A declaration may be withdrawn at any time by notification to the Secretary-General. Such declarations shall not become effective until six months after their notification.

Article 24 (former art. 18 [17])

1. The present Protocol shall be open for signature by any State that has signed the Convention.
2. The present Protocol shall be subject to ratification by any State that has ratified or acceded to the Convention. Instruments of ratification shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.
3. The present Protocol shall be open to accession by any State that has ratified or acceded to the Convention.
4. Accession shall be effected by the deposit of an instrument of accession with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

5. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall inform all States that have signed the present Protocol or acceded to it of the deposit of each instrument of ratification or accession.

Article 25 (former art. 19 [18])

1. The present Protocol shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after the date of deposit with the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the twentieth instrument of ratification or instrument of accession.
2. For each State ratifying the present Protocol or acceding to it after the deposit with the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the twentieth instrument of ratification or instrument of accession, the present Protocol shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after the date of the deposit of its own instrument of ratification or accession.

Article 26 (former art. 20 [18 bis])

The provisions of the present Protocol shall extend to all parts of federal States without any limitations or exceptions.

Article 27 (former art. 21 [19])

1. A State Party may denounce the present Protocol at any time by written notification addressed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall thereafter inform the other States Parties to the present Protocol and the Convention. Denunciation shall take effect one year after the date of receipt of the notification by the Secretary-General.
2. Such a denunciation shall not have the effect of releasing the State Party from its obligations under the present Protocol with regard to any act or situation that may occur prior to the date on which the denunciation becomes effective, or to the actions that the Subcommittee has decided or may decide to adopt with respect to the State Party concerned, nor shall denunciation prejudice in any way the continued consideration of any matter that is already under consideration by the Subcommittee prior to the date on which the denunciation becomes effective.
3. As of the date on which the denunciation of the State Party becomes effective, the Subcommittee shall not commence consideration of any new matter regarding that State.

Article 28 (former art. 22 [19 bis])

1. Any State Party to the present Protocol may propose an amendment and file it with the Secretary-General of the United Nations. The Secretary-General shall thereupon communicate the proposed amendment to the States Parties to the present Protocol with a request that they notify him whether they favour a conference of States Parties for the purpose of considering and voting on the proposal. In the event that within four months from the date of such communication at least one third of the States Parties favour such a conference, the Secretary-General shall convene the conference under the auspices of the United Nations. Any amendment adopted by a majority of two thirds of the States Parties present and voting at the conference shall be submitted by the Secretary-General of the United Nations to all States Parties for acceptance.
2. An amendment adopted in accordance with paragraph 1 of this article shall enter into force when it has been accepted by a two-thirds majority of the States Parties to the present Protocol in accordance with their respective constitutional processes.
3. When amendments enter into force, they shall be binding on those States Parties that have accepted them, other States Parties still being bound by the provisions of the present Protocol and any earlier amendments that they have accepted.

Article 29 (former art. 23 [20], amended)

Members of national mechanisms and of the Subcommittee shall be accorded such privileges and immunities as are necessary for the independent exercise of their functions. In particular, they shall be accorded the privileges and immunities specified in section 22 of the Convention on Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations of 13 February 1946, subject to the provisions of section 23 of that Convention.

Article 30 (former art. 24, amended)

During a visit to a State Party and without prejudice to the provisions and purposes of the present Protocol and such privileges and immunities as they may enjoy, members of the Subcommittee shall:

- (a) Respect the laws and regulations of the visited State; and
- (b) Refrain from any action or activity incompatible with the impartial and international nature of their duties.

Article 31 (former art. 25 [21])

1. The present Protocol, of which the Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.
2. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall transmit certified copies of the present Protocol to all States.

PROPOSAL OF NEW AND REVISED ARTICLES TO BE INCLUDED IN THE ORIGINAL DRAFT OPTIONAL PROTOCOL TO THE CONVENTION AGAINST TORTURE AND OTHER CRUEL, INHUMAN OR DEGRADING TREATMENT OR PUNISHMENT, SUBMITTED BY THE DELEGATION OF SWEDEN ON BEHALF OF THE EUROPEAN UNION
AT THE NINTH SESSION OF THE WORKING GROUP IN 2001
(EU DRAFT)

(22 FEBRUARY 2001)⁴

Preamble

The States Parties to the present Protocol,

Recalling the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and the obligation of States under the Charter, in particular articles 55 and 56,

Reaffirming that torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment are prohibited,

Recalling articles 2 and 16 of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, which obliges each State Party to take effective measures to prevent acts of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment in any territory under its jurisdiction,

Convinced that further measures are necessary to achieve the purpose of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and of the need to strengthen the protection of persons deprived of their liberty from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Convinced also that combating impunity constitutes an important element in the prevention of torture and recalling in this regard article 12 of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment as well as the Manual on Effective Investigation and Documentation of Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (the Istanbul Protocol),

Welcoming the positive impact an independent regional and national mechanism could have on the protection of persons deprived of their liberty against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Considering that the protection of persons deprived of their liberty against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment could be strengthened by non-judicial means of a preventive character based on visits,

Bearing in mind also the principles of cooperation and confidentiality as basic principles of the present Protocol,

Article 1 (new)

For the purpose of this Protocol:

- (a) Deprivation of liberty means any form of detention or imprisonment or the placement of a person in a public or private custodial setting, from which this person is not permitted to leave at will by order of any judicial, administrative or other public authority;
- (b) A mission includes the travel and all the activities carried out by the Subcommittee in a State Party's territory;
- (c) A visit means the inspection of a physical facility where persons are deprived of their liberty;
- (d) The Subcommittee shall be deemed to be represented by its delegation.

Article 2 (old 2)*

1. A Subcommittee for the Prevention of Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment of the Committee against Torture shall be established which shall carry out the functions laid down in the present Protocol (hereinafter referred to as the Subcommittee); the Subcommittee shall be responsible for organizing missions and visits to the States Parties to the present Protocol for the purposes stated in article 3.
2. The establishment of the Subcommittee does not preclude the setting up as appropriate of a national mechanism to carry out unrestricted visits to places where persons are deprived of their liberty, as referred to in article 15.

Article 3 (old 1 revised)

1. The objective of this Protocol is to establish an international preventive visiting mechanism to examine the treatment of persons deprived of their liberty, with a view to recommending means for strengthening, if necessary, the protection of such persons from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.
2. Each State Party agrees to permit missions by the Subcommittee to its territory and visits to any place under its jurisdiction and control where persons are or may be deprived of their liberty.
3. Objection to a visit may only be made on urgent and compelling grounds of national defence, public safety, natural disaster or serious disorder in the place to be visited, which temporarily prevent the carrying out of such a visit. The existence of a state of emergency cannot as such be invoked by a State Party as a reason to object to a visit.

* See E/CN.4/2002/58.

4. Following objections under paragraph 3, the State Party and the Subcommittee shall immediately enter into consultations in order to clarify the situation and seek agreement to enable the Subcommittee to exercise its functions expeditiously. Such arrangements may include the transfer to another place of any person whom the Subcommittee proposed/wishes to visit. Until the visit takes place, the State Party shall provide information to the Subcommittee about the person concerned.
5. A State Party may at the time of its ratification or accession to this Protocol consult with the Subcommittee in order to assess its needs for technical cooperation.
6. A State Party may also upon ratification or accession submit a public declaration delaying visits by the Subcommittee to its territory or places where persons are deprived of their liberty under its jurisdiction and control, for a maximum of two years after the entry into force of the Optional Protocol for that State Party. The State Party, in consultation with the Subcommittee, shall review this declaration one year after the entry into force of the Optional Protocol for that State Party. Missions may take place immediately after the entry into force of the Optional Protocol for that State Party.

Article 4 (old 3)

1. In the application of this Protocol the Subcommittee and the national authorities of the State Party concerned shall cooperate with each other.
2. The Subcommittee shall conduct its work within the framework of the Charter of the United Nations and be guided by the purposes and principles thereof.
3. The Subcommittee shall also be guided by the principles of confidentiality, impartiality, universality and objectivity.

Article 5 (old 4)

1. The Subcommittee shall consist of 10 members. After the fiftieth ratification or accession to the present Protocol, the number of members of the Subcommittee shall increase to 25.
2. The members of the Subcommittee shall be chosen from among persons of high moral character, having proven professional experience in the field of the administration of justice, in particular in criminal law, prison or police administration or in the various medical fields relevant to the treatment of persons deprived of their liberty or in the field of human rights.
3. No two members of the Subcommittee may be nationals of the same State.
4. The members of the Subcommittee shall serve in their individual capacity, shall be independent and impartial and shall be available to serve the Subcommittee effectively.

Article 6 (old 5)

1. Each State Party may nominate, in accordance with paragraph 2, up to two candidates possessing the qualifications and meeting the requirements set out in article 5, and in doing so shall provide detailed information on the qualifications of the nominees.
2.
 - (a) Nominees of the Subcommittee shall have the nationality of a State Party to the present Protocol;
 - (b) At least one of the two candidates shall have the nationality of the nominating State Party;
 - (c) Not more than two nationals of a State Party shall be nominated;
 - (d) Before a State Party nominates a national of another State Party, it shall seek and obtain the written consent of that State Party.
3. At least five months before the date of the meeting of the States Parties during which the elections will be held, the Secretary-General of the United Nations shall address a letter to the States Parties inviting them to submit their nominations within three months. The Secretary-General shall submit a list in alphabetical order of all persons thus nominated, indicating the States Parties, which have nominated them.

Article 7 (old 6)

The members of the Subcommittee shall be elected in the following manner:

1. Elections of the members of the Subcommittee shall be held at biennial meetings of States Parties convened by the Secretary-General of the United Nations. At those meetings, for which two thirds of the States Parties shall constitute a quorum, the persons elected to the Subcommittee shall be those who obtain the largest number of votes and an absolute majority of the votes of the representatives of the States Parties present and voting.
2. The initial election shall be held no later than six months after the date of entry into force of the present Protocol.
3. The States Parties shall elect the members of the Subcommittee by secret ballot.
4. In the election of the members of the Subcommittee, primary consideration shall be given to the fulfilment of the requirements and criteria of article 5. Furthermore, due consideration shall be given to a proper balance among the various fields of competence referred to in article 5, to equitable geographical distribution of membership and to representation of the different forms of civilization and legal systems of the States Parties.
5. Consideration shall also be given to balanced representation of women and men on the basis of the principles of equality and non-discrimination.
6. If, during the election process, two nationals of a State Party have become eligible to serve as members of the Subcommittee, the membership of the Subcommittee shall be resolved in the following manner, in conformity with article 5, paragraph 3:
 - (a) The candidate receiving the higher number of votes shall serve as the member of the Subcommittee;
 - (b) Where the nationals have received the same number of votes, the following procedure applies:
 - (i) Where only one has been nominated by the State Party of which he or she is a national, that national shall serve as the member of the Subcommittee.
 - (ii) Where both nationals have been nominated by the State Party of which they are nationals, a separate vote by secret ballot shall be held to determine which national shall be the member;
 - (iii) Where neither national has been nominated by the State Party of which he or she is a national, a separate vote by secret ballot shall be held to determine which national shall be the member.

Article 8 (old 7)

If a member of the Subcommittee dies or resigns or for any other cause can no longer perform the member's Subcommittee duties, the State Party which nominated the member shall nominate another eligible person possessing the qualifications and meeting the requirements set out in article 5, taking into account the need for a proper balance among the various fields of competence, to serve until the next meeting of the States Parties, subject to approval of the majority of the States Parties. The approval shall be considered given unless half or more of the States Parties respond negatively within six weeks after having been informed by the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the proposed appointment.

Article 9 (old 8 revised)

1. The Subcommittee:
 - (a) Shall establish on the basis of a transparent procedure, a programme of regular missions to all States Parties. These missions may also include follow-up missions;

- (b) Shall also undertake such visits or missions as appear to be required in the circumstances and based on information received by the Subcommittee and assessed by it as credible, with a view to furthering the aims of this Protocol;
 - (c) Shall after a mission or a visit advise and assist the State Party in assessing the needs and appropriate measures for strengthening the protection of persons deprived of their liberty from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;
 - (d) May make recommendations to the State Party on the mandate, the competence and the effective functioning as well as other relevant activities of an established national mechanism for the prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, in accordance with article 15;
 - (e) Shall transmit requests from a State Party for technical assistance and technical cooperation as well as facilitate the provision of such cooperation from the relevant United Nations bodies such as UNHCHR, UNDP, ODCCP, UNICEF and UNIFEM.
2. The Subcommittee shall send a written notification to the Government of the State Party concerned of its intention to organize a mission.
 3. Before a mission is carried out, the Subcommittee and the State Party concerned shall, if either of them so request, enter into consultations with a view to agreeing without delay on the practical arrangements for the mission. Such consultations on the practical arrangements for the mission may not include negotiations on the obligations of a State Party under articles 3 or 13.

Article 10 (old 9)

The members of the Subcommittee shall be elected for a term of four years. They shall be eligible for re-election once if renominated. The term of half of the members elected at the first election shall expire at the end of two years; immediately after the first election the names of these members shall be chosen by lot by the Chairman of the meeting referred to in article 7, paragraph 1.

Article 11 (old 10)

1. The Subcommittee shall elect its officers for a term of two years. They may be re-elected.
2. The Subcommittee shall establish its own rules of procedure, but these rules shall provide, inter alia, that:
 - (a) Half plus one members shall constitute a quorum;
 - (b) Decisions of the Subcommittee shall be made by a majority vote of the members present;
 - (c) The Subcommittee shall meet in camera.
3. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall convene the initial meeting of the Subcommittee. After its initial meeting, the Subcommittee shall meet at such times as shall be provided in its rules of procedure.

Article 12 (old 11)

1. The Subcommittee may decide to postpone a mission to a State Party if the State Party concerned has agreed to a scheduled visit to its territory by the Committee against Torture, pursuant to article 20, paragraph 3 of the Convention. The dates of the rescheduled mission shall be determined taking into account the provisions of articles 3 and 9.
2. The Subcommittee, while respecting the principles set out in article 4, is encouraged to cooperate for the prevention of torture in general with the relevant United Nations organs and mechanisms as well as international, regional and national institutions or organizations working towards strengthening the protection of persons from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.
3. If, on the basis of a regional convention, a system of visits to places of detention similar to the one under the present Protocol is in force for a State Party, the Subcommittee shall still be responsible for missions to such a State Party under this Protocol, assuring its universal application. However, the Subcommittee and the bodies established under such regional conventions are encouraged to consult and cooperate with a view to the efficient promotion of the objectives of this Protocol, including on the matter of duplication of work. Such cooperation may not exempt the States Parties belonging also to such conventions from cooperating fully with the Subcommittee.

4. The provisions of the present Protocol do not affect the obligations of States Parties to the four Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and their Additional Protocols of 8 June 1977, or the possibility for any State Party to authorize the International Committee of the Red Cross to visit places of detention in situations not covered by international humanitarian law.

Article 13 (old 12 revised)

1. The Subcommittee and the State Party shall cooperate with a view to the effective fulfilment of the mission. In particular, the State Party shall provide the Subcommittee with:
 - (a) Unrestricted access to all information, deemed relevant by the Subcommittee, concerning the number of persons deprived of their liberty, in accordance with article 16 of the Convention, as well as the number of places and their location;
 - (b) Unrestricted access to all information, deemed relevant by the Subcommittee, concerning the treatment and the conditions of detention;
 - (c) Access to and freedom of movement within any territory under its jurisdiction and control for the conduct of the mission;
 - (d) All information deemed relevant by the Subcommittee to the effective conduct of the mission, including in particular on any person or places referred to in article 3 of the Protocol;
 - (e) Access to and within any place referred to in article 3 of the Protocol;
 - (f) Access to persons referred to in article 3 of the Protocol, and the opportunity for private interviews with them;
 - (g) The opportunity to communicate freely with any person whom they believe can supply relevant information.
2. With regard to a particular visit, the obligations referred to under paragraph 1 shall be implemented in a manner consistent with national law and professional ethics complimentary to international human rights standards.

Article 14 (old 14)*

1. After each mission or visit, the Subcommittee shall draw up a report on the mission or the visit and any recommendations it considers necessary, which shall be submitted to the State Party concerned. The Subcommittee shall finalize its report after fair consideration is given to comments submitted, within a reasonable time, by the State Party concerned. If a State Party so wishes its comments shall form an annex to the report.
2. The Subcommittee shall transmit to the State Party its report containing any recommendations it considers necessary to improve the protection of persons deprived of their liberty. To this effect, the Subcommittee and the State Party may consult on the implementation of the recommendations, including ways and means in which the State Party can be assisted, as well as the submission of a request for technical cooperation as referred to in article 9, paragraph 1 (e).
3. The information gathered by the Subcommittee in relation to a visit, its report and its consultations with the State Party shall be confidential. Members of the Subcommittee and other persons assisting the Subcommittee are required, during their terms of office, to maintain the confidentiality of the facts or information of which they have become aware during the discharge of their functions.
4. At the request of the State Party concerned, the Subcommittee shall publish its report on a visit. By agreement between the Subcommittee and the State Party, the report on a visit may be published or made public in part. If the State Party decides to make part of the report on a visit public, the Subcommittee may make a public statement or publish the report in whole or in part in order to ensure a balanced presentation of the contents of the report.

* See E/CN.4/1996/28.

5. If a State Party fails to cooperate or refuses to improve the situation in the light of the Subcommittee's recommendations, the Committee against Torture may at the request of the Subcommittee decide by majority of its members, after the State Party has had an opportunity to make known its views, to make a public statement on the matter or to publish the report.
6. No personal data shall be published without the expressed consent of the person concerned.
7. Subject to the rule of confidentiality under paragraph 3, the Subcommittee shall every year submit an annual report to the Committee against Torture on its activities, which shall be public.

Article 15 (new)

For the purposes of this Protocol, a State Party wishing to establish a national mechanism undertakes to ensure that:

- (a) The national mechanism will be composed of independent experts fulfilling the requirements set out in articles 4, paragraph 3, and 5, paragraph 2;
- (b) It has full powers to issue recommendations to the concerned authorities;
- (c) It has unrestricted access to all places where persons are deprived of their liberty under all situations, including in peacetime, times of public disorder or states of emergency and during war in accordance with international humanitarian law;
- (d) Unrestricted access to persons deprived of their liberty;
- (e) Full freedom to interview the persons deprived of liberty without witnesses, with the assistance of interpreters, if required, as well as all relevant personnel or persons;
- (f) Unrestricted liberty to contact, inform and meet with the Subcommittee with a view to implementing article 9, paragraph 1 (d);
- (g) The reports on its visits shall be public.

Article 16 (old 15)

Each State Party shall disseminate information about the present Protocol, the tasks of the Subcommittee and the facilities to be provided to the Subcommittee during a mission to all concerned authorities and ensure the inclusion of such information in the training of relevant personnel, civil, police and military, who are involved in the custody, interrogation or treatment of persons in situations referred to in article 3.

Article 17 (old 16)

1. The expenditure incurred by the Subcommittee in the implementation of the present Protocol, including missions and visits, shall be borne by the United Nations.
2. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall provide the necessary staff and facilities for the effective performance of the functions of the Subcommittee under the present Protocol.

Article 18 (old 17)

1. A Special Fund shall be set up in accordance with General Assembly procedures, to be administered in accordance with the financial regulations and rules of the United Nations, to help finance the implementation of the recommendations made by the Subcommittee to a State Party expressing the need for additional assistance for its ongoing efforts to improve the protection of persons deprived of their liberty.
2. This Fund may be financed through voluntary contributions.

Article 19 (old 18)

1. The present Protocol is open for signature by any State which has signed the Convention.
2. The present Protocol is subject to ratification by any State which has ratified or acceded to the Convention.
3. Instruments of ratification or instrument of accession, together with a public declaration pursuant to article 3, paragraph 6, shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.
4. The present Protocol shall be open to accession by any State which has ratified or acceded to the Convention.
5. Accession shall be effected by the deposit of an instrument of accession with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.
6. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall inform all States which have signed the present Protocol or acceded to it of the deposit of each instrument of ratification or accession and public declaration submitted pursuant to article 3, paragraph

Article 19 bis (new)

No reservations shall be made to the present Protocol.

Article 20 (old 19)

1. The present Protocol shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after the date of deposit with the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the twentieth instrument of ratification or accession.
2. For each State ratifying the present Protocol or acceding to it after the deposit with the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the twentieth instrument of ratification or instrument of accession, the present Protocol shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after the date of the deposit of its own instrument of ratification or accession.

Article 21 (old 20)

The provisions of the present Protocol shall extend to all parts of federal States without any limitations or exceptions.

Article 22 (old 21)

1. Any State Party may denounce the present Protocol at any time by written notification addressed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall thereafter inform the other States Parties to the present Protocol and the Convention. Denunciation shall take effect one year after the date of receipt of the notification by the Secretary-General.
2. Such a denunciation shall not have the effect of releasing the State Party from its obligations under the present Protocol in regard to any act or situation which occurs prior to the date at which the denunciation becomes effective, or to the actions that the Subcommittee has decided or may decide to adopt with respect to the State Party concerned, nor shall denunciation prejudice in any way the continued consideration of any matter which is already under consideration by the Subcommittee prior to the date at which the denunciation becomes effective.
3. Following the date at which the denunciation of the State Party becomes effective, the Subcommittee shall not commence consideration of any new matter regarding that State.

Article 23 (old 22)

1. Any State Party to the present Protocol may propose an amendment and file it with the Secretary-General of the United Nations. The Secretary-General shall thereupon communicate the proposed amendment to the States Parties to the present Protocol with a request that they notify him whether they favour a conference of States Parties for the purpose of considering and voting upon the proposal. In the event that within four months from the date of such communication at least one third of the States Parties favour such a conference, the Secretary-General shall convene the conference under the auspices of the United Nations. Any amendment adopted by a majority of two thirds of the States Parties present and voting at the conference shall be submitted by the Secretary-General of the United Nations to all States Parties for acceptance.

2. An amendment adopted in accordance with paragraph 1 of the present article shall come into force when it has been accepted by a two-thirds majority of the States Parties to the present Protocol in accordance with their respective constitutional process.
3. When amendments come into force, they shall be binding on those States Parties which have accepted them, other States Parties still being bound by the provisions of the present Protocol and any earlier amendment which they have accepted.

Article 24 (old 23)

Members of the Subcommittee and of missions authorized under the present Protocol shall be accorded such privileges and immunities as are necessary for the independent exercise of their functions. In particular, they shall be accorded the privileges and immunities specified in section 22 of the Convention on Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations of 13 February 1946, subject to the provisions of section 23 of that Convention.

Article 25 (old 24)

In the conduct of missions, all members shall without prejudice to the provisions and purposes of the present Protocol and such privileges and immunities as they may enjoy:

- (a) Respect the laws and regulations of the visited State; and
- (b) Refrain from any action or activity incompatible with the impartial and international nature of their duties.

Article 26 (old 25)

1. The present Protocol, of which the Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.
2. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall transmit certified copies of the present Protocol to all States.

ALTERNATIVE DRAFT OPTIONAL PROTOCOL TO THE CONVENTION AGAINST TORTURE AND OTHER CRUEL, INHUMAN OR DEGRADING TREATMENT OR PUNISHMENT,
SUBMITTED BY THE DELEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AT THE TENTH SESSION OF THE WORKING GROUP IN 2002 (US DRAFT),

(16 JANUARY 2002)⁵

Preamble

The States Parties to the present Optional Protocol,

Recalling the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the obligations of States under the Charter,

⁵ E/CN.4/2002/78, Annex II E.

Reaffirming that torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment are prohibited,

Recalling that the effective prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment under the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (hereinafter referred to as the Convention) requires a combination of legislative, administrative, judicial and other measures,

Recognizing that strengthening the protection of and full respect for human rights is a common responsibility shared by all and that international mechanisms are complementary to national measures,

Recognizing the important contribution that regional mechanisms may make to the protection of persons deprived of their liberty against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, particularly by non-judicial means of a preventive character based on visits,

Desiring to undertake an international commitment to make the prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment under the Convention more effective,

Bearing in mind the principles of cooperation and confidentiality as basic principles of the present Protocol,

Have agreed as follows,

PART I

1.
 - (a) There shall be established, under the Committee against Torture (hereinafter referred to as the Committee), a Subcommittee on the Prevention of Torture (hereinafter referred to as the Subcommittee on Prevention) which shall carry out the functions hereinafter provided.
 - (b) The Subcommittee shall consist of [five] experts of recognized competence in the field of human rights, who shall serve in their personal capacity and shall, under its direction, carry out the functions herein provided.
2. Each State Party may, in furtherance of articles 2 and 16 of the Convention, establish, maintain or provide for national mechanisms to strengthen, if necessary, the protection of persons deprived of their liberty pursuant to an order of a public authority from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment (hereinafter referred to as national mechanisms).

Article 2

The Subcommittee on Prevention, under the direction of the Committee, shall:

- (a) Assist members of the Committee with respect to the Committee's functions under the Convention, including, in particular, the making of confidential inquiries in accordance with paragraphs 1–5 of article 20, as well as with voluntary visits the Committee may propose to State Parties that may be made in agreement with them;
- (b) Assist, upon request, States Parties in setting up national mechanisms;
- (c) Respond to requests for technical advice designed to assist States Parties with the operation of national mechanisms, as well as with the effective implementation of their obligations under articles 2 and 16 of the Convention;
- (d) Serve as a resource for technical information and advice to promote safe, humane, cost-efficient and appropriately secure facilities for detention or imprisonment.

Article 3

National mechanisms may, inter alia:

- (a) Examine the situation of persons deprived of their liberty pursuant to an order of a public authority with a view to strengthening, if necessary, their protection from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;
- (b) Make recommendations to the competent authorities with a view to improving the treatment and conditions of such persons and preventing torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;
- (c) Propose or comment on draft or existing legislation on matters relating to the treatment of such persons;
- (d) Request, where necessary, technical advice from the Subcommittee on Prevention designed to assist States Parties with the effective implementation of their obligations under the Convention with a view to strengthening, if necessary, the protection of such persons from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Article 4

1. The Subcommittee on Prevention shall submit an annual report of its activities to the Committee which shall be made available to States Parties. National mechanisms which may be established, maintained or provided for in accordance with the Protocol shall be provided with such reports.
2. States Parties shall permit direct contact between such national mechanisms and the Subcommittee on Prevention.

PART IIArticle 5

The members of the Subcommittee on Prevention shall be elected in the same manner as members of the Committee referred to in paragraphs 2 to 6 of article 17, consideration being given to equitable geographical distribution and to the usefulness of the participation of persons having professional experience in the field of the administration of justice, criminal law, prison or police administration, or in the various medical fields relevant to the treatment of persons deprived of their liberty.

Article 6

The Committee shall establish rules of procedure for the Subcommittee on Prevention, but these rules shall provide, inter alia, that:

- (a) [Four] members shall constitute a quorum, and;
- (b) Decisions of the Subcommittee shall be made by a majority of the members present.

Article 7

The Committee shall convene the initial meeting of the Subcommittee. After its initial meeting, the Subcommittee shall meet at such times as shall be provided in its rules of procedure.

Article 8

Members of the Subcommittee on Prevention shall be entitled to the facilities, privileges and immunities provided to members of the Committee under article 23 of the Convention.

PART III

Article 9

1. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall provide the necessary staff and facilities for the effective performance of the functions of the Subcommittee under this Protocol.
2. The States Parties which shall have accepted this Protocol shall be responsible for expenses incurred in connection with the operation of the Subcommittee on Prevention, in a manner based upon the United Nations scale of assessment prorated to take into account the number of States Parties to the Protocol.

Article 10

1. The provisions of the present Protocol shall not affect the obligations of States Parties under any regional convention based on a system of visits to places of detention. The Subcommittee on Prevention and the bodies established on the basis of such regional mechanisms shall consult and cooperate in order to promote effectively the objectives of the present Protocol and avoid any duplication of work.
2. The provisions of the present Protocol shall not affect the obligations of States Parties to the four Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto of 8 June 1977, or the opportunity available to any State Party to authorize the International Committee of the Red Cross to visit places of detention in situations not covered by international humanitarian law.

Article 11

1. The present Protocol shall be open for signature by any State that has signed the Convention.
2. The present Protocol shall be subject to ratification by any State that has ratified or acceded to the Convention. Instruments of ratification shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.
3. The present Protocol shall be open to accession by any State that has ratified or acceded to the Convention.
4. Accession shall be effected by the deposit of an instrument of accession with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.
5. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall inform all States that have signed the present Protocol or acceded to it of the deposit of each instrument of ratification or accession.

Article 12

1. The present Protocol shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after the date of deposit with the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the twentieth instrument of ratification or instrument of accession.
2. For each State ratifying the present Protocol or acceding to it after the deposit with the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the twentieth instrument of ratification or instrument of accession, the present Protocol shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after the date of the deposit of its own instrument of ratification or accession.

Article 13

A State Party may denounce the present Protocol at any time by written notification addressed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall thereafter inform the other States Parties to the present Protocol and the Convention. Denunciation shall take effect one year after the date of receipt of the notification by the Secretary-General.

Article 14

1. Any State Party to the present Protocol may propose an amendment and file it with the Secretary-General of the United Nations. The Secretary-General shall thereupon communicate the proposed amendment to the States Parties to the present Protocol with a request that they notify him whether they favour a conference of States Parties for the purpose of considering and voting on the proposal. In the event that within four months from the date of such communication at least one third of the States Parties favour such a conference, the Secretary-General shall convene the conference under the auspices of the United Nations. Any amendment adopted by a majority of two thirds of the States Parties present and voting at the conference shall be submitted by the Secretary-General of the United Nations to all States Parties for acceptance.
2. An amendment adopted in accordance with paragraph 1 of this article shall enter into force when it has been accepted by a two-thirds majority of the States Parties to the present Protocol in accordance with their respective constitutional processes.
3. When amendments enter into force, they shall be binding on those States Parties that have accepted them, other States Parties still being bound by the provisions of the present Protocol and any earlier amendments that they have accepted.

Article 15

1. The present Protocol, of which the Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.
2. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall transmit certified copies of the present Protocol to all States.

DRAFT OPTIONAL PROTOCOL TO THE CONVENTION
AGAINST TORTURE AND OTHER CRUEL, INHUMAN OR DEGRADING TREATMENT OR PUNISHMENT

(PROPOSAL BY THE CHAIRPERSON-RAPPORTEUR)

(17 JANUARY 2002)⁶

Preamble

The States Parties to the present Protocol,

Reaffirming that torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment are prohibited and constitute serious violations of human rights,

Convinced that further measures are necessary to achieve the purposes of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (hereinafter referred to as the Convention) and to strengthen the protection of persons deprived of their liberty from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Recalling that articles 2 and 16 of the Convention oblige each State Party to take effective measures to prevent acts of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment in any territory under its jurisdiction,

Recognizing that States have the primary responsibility for implementing these articles, that strengthening the protection of people deprived of their liberty and the full respect for their human rights is a common responsibility shared by all, and that international implementing bodies complement and strengthen national measures,

⁶ E/CN.4/2002/WG.11/CRP.1, Art 6.

Recalling that the effective prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment requires education and a combination of various legislative, administrative, judicial or other measures,

Recalling also that the World Conference on Human Rights firmly declared that efforts to eradicate torture should first and foremost be concentrated on prevention and called for the adoption of an optional protocol to the Convention which is intended to establish a preventive system of regular visits to places of detention,

Convinced that the protection of persons deprived of their liberty against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment can be strengthened by non-judicial means of a preventive nature, based on regular visits to places of detention,

Have agreed as follows:

PART I GENERAL PRINCIPLES

Article 1

The objective of this Protocol is to establish a system of regular visits undertaken by independent international and national bodies to places where people are deprived of their liberty, in order to prevent torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Article 2

1. A Subcommittee on Prevention of Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment of the Committee against Torture (hereinafter referred to as the Subcommittee on Prevention) shall be established and shall carry out the functions laid down in the present Protocol.
2. The Subcommittee on Prevention shall carry out its work within the framework of the Charter of the United Nations and will be guided by the purposes and principles thereof, as well as the norms of the United Nations concerning the treatment of people deprived of their liberty.
3. Equally, the Subcommittee on Prevention shall be guided by the principles of confidentiality, impartiality, non-selectivity, universality and objectivity.
4. The Subcommittee on Prevention and the States Parties shall cooperate in the implementation of the present Protocol.

Article 3

Each State Party shall set up, designate or maintain at the domestic level one or several visiting bodies for the prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment (hereinafter referred to as the national preventive mechanism).

Article 4

1. Each State Party shall allow visits, in accordance with the present Protocol, by the mechanisms referred to in articles 2 and 3 to any place under its jurisdiction and control where persons are or may be deprived of their liberty, either by virtue of an order given by a public authority or at its instigation or with its consent or acquiescence (hereinafter referred to as places of detention). These visits shall be undertaken with a view to strengthening, if necessary, the protection of these persons against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.
2. For the purposes of the present Protocol deprivation of liberty means any form of detention or imprisonment or the placement of a person in a public or private custodial setting, from which this person is not permitted to leave at will by order of any judicial, administrative or other authority.

PART II
THE SUBCOMMITTEE ON PREVENTION

Article 5

1. The Subcommittee on Prevention shall consist of 10 members. After the fiftieth ratification or accession to the present Protocol, the number of the members of the Subcommittee on Prevention shall increase to 25.
2. The members of the Subcommittee shall be chosen from among persons of high moral character, having proven professional experience in the field of the administration of justice, in particular criminal law, prison or police administration, or in the various fields relevant to the treatment of persons deprived of their liberty.
3. In the composition of the Subcommittee due consideration shall be given to the equitable geographic distribution and to the representation of different forms of civilization and legal systems of the States Parties.
4. In this composition consideration shall also be given to the balanced gender representation on the basis of the principles of equality and non-discrimination.
5. No two members of the Subcommittee may be nationals of the same State.
6. The members of the Subcommittee shall serve in their individual capacity, shall be independent and impartial and shall be available to serve the Subcommittee efficiently.

Article 6

1. Each State Party may nominate, in accordance with paragraph 2, up to two candidates possessing the qualifications and meeting the requirements set out in article 5, and in doing so shall provide detailed information on the qualifications of the nominees.
2.
 - (a) The nominees shall have the nationality of a State Party to the present Protocol;
 - (b) At least one of the two candidates shall have the nationality of the nominating State Party;
 - (c) No more than two nationals of a State Party shall be nominated;
 - (d) Before a State Party nominates a national of another State Party, it shall seek and obtain the consent of that State Party.
3. At least five months before the date of the meeting of the States Parties during which the elections will be held, the Secretary-General of the United Nations shall address a letter to the States Parties inviting them to submit their nominations within three months. The Secretary-General shall submit a list, in alphabetical order, of all persons thus nominated, indicating the States Parties which have nominated them.

Article 7

1. The members of the Subcommittee on Prevention shall be elected in the following manner:
 - (a) Primary consideration shall be given to the fulfilment of the requirements and criteria of article 5 of the present Protocol;
 - (b) The initial election shall be held no later than six months after the entry into force of the present Protocol;
 - (c) The States Parties shall elect the members of the Subcommittee by secret ballot;
 - (d) Elections of the members of the Subcommittee shall be held at biennial meetings of the States Parties convened by the Secretary-General of the United Nations. At those meetings, for which two thirds of the States Parties shall constitute a quorum, the persons elected to the Subcommittee shall be those who obtain the largest number of votes and an absolute majority of the votes of the representatives of the States Parties present and voting;
2. If, during the election process, two nationals of a State Party have become eligible to serve as members of the Subcommittee on Prevention, the candidate receiving the higher number of votes shall serve as the member of the Subcommittee. Where nationals have received the same number of votes, the following procedure applies:

- (a) Where only one has been nominated by the State Party of which he or she is a national, that national shall serve as the member of the Subcommittee on Prevention;
- (b) Where both candidates have been nominated by the State Party of which they are nationals, a separate vote by secret ballot shall be held to determine which national shall become member;
- (c) Where neither candidate has been nominated by the State Party of which he or she is a national, a separate vote by secret ballot shall be held to determine which candidate shall be the member.

Article 8

If a member of the Subcommittee on Prevention dies or resigns, or for any cause can no longer perform his or her duties, the State Party which nominated the member shall nominate another eligible person possessing the qualifications and meeting the requirements set out in article 5, taking into account the need for a proper balance among the various fields of competence, to serve until the next meeting of the States Parties, subject to the approval of the majority of the States Parties. The approval shall be considered given unless half or more of the States Parties respond negatively within six weeks after having been informed by the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the proposed appointment.

Article 9

The members of the Subcommittee on Prevention shall be elected for a term of four years. They shall be eligible for re-election once if renominated. The term of half the members elected at the first election shall expire at the end of two years; immediately after the first election the names of these members shall be chosen by lot by the Chairman of the meeting referred to in article 7, paragraph 1 (d).

Article 10

1. The Subcommittee on Prevention shall elect its officers for a term of two years. They may be re-elected.
2. The Subcommittee on Prevention shall establish its own rules of procedure. These rules shall provide, inter alia, that:
 - (a) Half plus one members shall constitute a quorum;
 - (b) Decisions of the Subcommittee on Prevention shall be made by a majority vote of the members present;
 - (c) The Subcommittee on Prevention shall meet in camera.
3. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall convene the initial meeting of the Subcommittee on Prevention. After its initial meeting, the Subcommittee shall meet at such times as shall be provided by its rules of procedure. The Subcommittee on Prevention and the Committee against Torture shall hold their sessions simultaneously at least once a year.

PART III

MANDATE OF THE SUBCOMMITTEE ON PREVENTION

Article 11

The Subcommittee on Prevention shall:

- (a) Visit the places referred to in article 4 and make recommendations to States Parties concerning the protection of persons deprived of their liberty from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;
- (b) In regard to the national preventive mechanisms:
 - (i) Advise and assist States Parties, when necessary, in their establishment;

- (ii) Maintain direct, if necessary confidential, contact with the national preventive mechanisms and offer them training and technical assistance with a view to strengthening their capacities;
 - (iii) Advise and assist them in the evaluation of the needs and the means necessary to strengthen the protection of persons deprived of their liberty from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;
 - (iv) Make recommendations and observations to the States Parties with a view to strengthening the capacity and the mandate of the national preventive mechanisms for the prevention of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;
- (c) Cooperate, for the prevention of torture in general, with the relevant United Nations organs and mechanisms as well as with the international, regional and national institutions or organizations working toward the strengthening of the protection of persons from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Article 12

In order to enable the Subcommittee on Prevention to comply with its mandate as laid out in article 11, the States Parties undertake to:

- (a) Receive the Subcommittee on Prevention in its territory and grant it access to the places of detention as defined in article 4 of the present Protocol;
- (b) Share all relevant information the Subcommittee on Prevention may request to evaluate the needs and measures that should be adopted in order to strengthen the protection of persons deprived of their liberty from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;
- (c) Encourage and facilitate contacts between the Subcommittee on Prevention and the national preventive mechanisms;
- (d) Examine the recommendations of the Subcommittee on Prevention and enter into dialogue with it on possible implementation measures.

Article 13

1. The Subcommittee on Prevention shall establish, at first by lot, a programme of regular visits to the States Parties in order to fulfil its mandate as established in article 11.
2. After consultations, the Subcommittee on Prevention shall notify its programme to the States Parties in order that they may, without delay, make the necessary practical arrangements for the visits to take place.
3. The visits shall be conducted by at least two members of the Subcommittee on Prevention. These members can be accompanied, if needed, by experts of demonstrated professional experience and knowledge in the fields covered by the present Protocol who shall be selected from a roster of experts prepared on the basis of proposals made by the States Parties, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the United Nations Centre for International Crime Prevention. In preparing the roster, the States Parties concerned shall propose no more than five national experts. The State Party concerned may oppose the inclusion of a specific expert in the visit, whereupon the Subcommittee on Prevention shall propose another expert.
4. If the Subcommittee on Prevention considers it appropriate, it can propose a short follow-up visit after regular visit.

Article 14

1. In order to enable the Subcommittee on Prevention to fulfil its mandate, the States Parties to the present Protocol undertake to grant it:

- (a) Unrestricted access to all information concerning the number of persons deprived of their liberty in places of detention as defined in article 4, as well as the number of places and their location;
 - (b) Unrestricted access to all information referring to the treatment of these persons as well as their conditions of detention;
 - (c) Subject to paragraph 2, unrestricted access to all places of detention and their installations and facilities;
 - (d) The opportunity to have private interviews with the persons deprived of their liberty without witnesses, either personally or with a translator if deemed necessary, as well as with any other person whom the Subcommittee on Prevention believes may supply relevant information;
 - (e) The liberty to choose the places it wants to visit and the persons it wants to interview.
2. Objection to a visit to a particular place of detention can only be made on urgent and compelling grounds of national defence, public safety, natural disaster or serious disorder in the place to be visited which temporarily prevent the carrying out of such a visit. The existence of a declaration of a state of emergency as such shall not be invoked by a State Party as a reason to object to a visit.

Article 15

No authority or official shall order, apply, permit or tolerate any sanction against any person or organization for having communicated to the Subcommittee on Prevention or to its delegates any information, whether true or false, and no such person or organization shall be otherwise prejudiced in any way.

Article 16

1. The Subcommittee on Prevention shall communicate its recommendations and observations confidentially to the State Party and, if relevant, to the national mechanism.
2. The Subcommittee on Prevention shall publish its report, together with any comments of the State Party concerned, whenever requested to do so by that State Party. If the State Party makes part of the report public, the Subcommittee on Prevention may publish the report in whole or in part. However, no personal data shall be published without the express consent of the person concerned.
3. The Subcommittee on Prevention shall present a public annual report on its activities to the Committee against Torture.
4. If the State Party refuses to cooperate with the Subcommittee on Prevention according to articles 12 and 14, or to take steps to improve the situation in the light of the Subcommittee's recommendations, the Committee against Torture may, at the request of the Subcommittee on Prevention, decide, by a majority of its members, after the State Party has had an opportunity to make its views known, to make a public statement on the matter or to publish the Subcommittee's report.

PART IV

NATIONAL PREVENTIVE MECHANISMS

Article 17

Each State Party shall maintain, designate or establish, at the latest one year after the entry into force of the present Protocol or of its ratification or accession, one or several independent national preventive mechanisms for the prevention of torture at the domestic level. Mechanisms established by decentralized units may be designated as national preventive mechanisms for the purposes of the present Protocol, if they are in conformity with its provisions.

Article 18

1. The States Parties shall guarantee the functional independence of the national preventive mechanisms as well as the independence of their personnel.
2. The States Parties shall take the necessary measures in order for the experts of the national mechanism to have the required capabilities and professional knowledge. They shall strive for a gender balance and the adequate representation of ethnic and minority groups in the country.
3. The States Parties undertake to make available the necessary resources for the functioning of the national preventive mechanisms.
4. When establishing national preventive mechanisms, States Parties shall give due consideration to the Principles relating to the status and functioning of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights.

Article 19

The national preventive mechanisms shall be granted at least the powers to:

- (a) Regularly examine the treatment of the persons deprived of their liberty in places of detention as defined in article 4, with a view to strengthening, if necessary, their protection from torture, cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment;
- (b) Make recommendations to the relevant authorities with the aim of improving the treatment and the conditions of the persons deprived of their liberty and to prevent torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, taking into consideration the relevant norms of the United Nations;
- (c) Submit proposals and observations concerning existing or draft legislation.

Article 20

In order to enable the national preventive mechanisms to fulfil their mandate, the States Parties to the present Protocol undertake to grant them:

- (a) Access to all information concerning the number of persons deprived of their liberty in places of detention as defined in article 4, as well as the number of places and their location;
- (b) Access to all information referring to the treatment of these persons as well as their conditions of detention;
- (c) Access to all places of detention and their installations and facilities;
- (d) The opportunity to have private interviews with the persons deprived of their liberty without witnesses, either personally or with a translator if deemed necessary, as well as with any other person whom the national preventive mechanism believes may supply relevant information;
- (e) The liberty to choose the places they want to visit and the persons they want to interview;
- (f) The right to have contacts with the Subcommittee on Prevention, to send it information and to meet with it.

Article 21

1. No authority or official shall order, apply, permit or tolerate any sanction against any person or organization for having communicated to the national preventive mechanism any information, whether true or false, and no such person or organization shall be otherwise prejudiced in any way.
2. Confidential information collected by the national preventive mechanism shall be privileged. No personal data shall be published without the express consent of the person concerned.

Article 22

The competent authorities of the State Party concerned shall examine the recommendations of the national preventive mechanism and enter into a dialogue with it on possible implementation measures.

Article 23

The States Parties to the present Protocol undertake to publish and disseminate the annual reports of the national preventive mechanisms.

PART V DECLARATION

Article 24

1. Upon ratification, States Parties can make a declaration postponing the implementation of their obligations either under Part III or under Part IV of the present Protocol.
2. This postponement shall be valid for a maximum of three years. After due representations made by the State Party and after consultation with the Subcommittee on Prevention, the Committee against Torture may extend this period for an additional two-year period.

PART VI
FINANCIAL PROVISIONS

Article 25

1. The expenditure incurred by the Subcommittee on Prevention in the implementation of the present Protocol shall be borne by the United Nations.
2. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall provide the necessary staff and facilities for the effective performance of the functions of the Subcommittee under the present Protocol.

Article 26

1. A Special Fund shall be set up in accordance with the relevant procedures of the General Assembly, to be administered in accordance with the financial regulations and rules of the United Nations, to help finance the implementation of the recommendations made by the Subcommittee on Prevention to a State Party after a visit, as well as education programmes of the national preventive mechanisms.
2. The Special Fund may be financed through voluntary contributions made by Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and other private or public entities.

PART VII
FINAL PROVISIONS

Article 27

1. The present Protocol is open for signature by any State which has signed the Convention.
2. The present Protocol is subject to ratification by any State which has ratified or acceded to the Convention. Instruments of ratification shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.
3. The present Protocol shall be open to accession by any State which has ratified or acceded to the Convention.

4. Accession shall be effected by the deposit of an instrument of accession with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.
5. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall inform all States which have signed the present Protocol or acceded to it of the deposit of each instrument of ratification or accession.

Article 28

1. The present Protocol shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after the date of deposit with the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the twentieth instrument of ratification or accession.
2. For each State ratifying the present Protocol or acceding to it after the deposit with the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the twentieth instrument of ratification or accession, the present Protocol shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after the date of the deposit of its own instrument of ratification or accession.

Article 29

The provisions of the present Protocol shall extend to all parts of federal States without any limitations or exceptions.

Article 30

No reservations shall be made to the present Protocol.

Article 31

The provisions of the present Protocol shall not affect the obligations of States Parties under any regional convention instituting a system of visits to places of detention. The Subcommittee on Prevention and the bodies established under such regional conventions are encouraged to consult and cooperate with a view to avoiding duplication and promoting effectively the objectives of the present Protocol.

Article 32

The provisions of the present Protocol shall not affect the obligations of States Parties to the four Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto of 8 June 1977, or the opportunity available to any State Party to authorize the International Committee of the Red Cross to visit places of detention in situations not covered by international humanitarian law.

Article 33

1. Any State Party may denounce the present Protocol at any time by written notification addressed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall thereafter inform the other States Parties to the present Protocol and the Convention. Denunciation shall take effect one year after the date of receipt of the notification by the Secretary-General.
2. Such a denunciation shall not have the effect of releasing the State Party from its obligations under the present Protocol in regard to any act or situation which occurs prior to the date at which the denunciation becomes effective, or to the actions that the Subcommittee on Prevention has decided or may decide to adopt with respect to the State Party concerned, nor shall denunciation prejudice in any way the continued consideration of any matter which is already under consideration by the Subcommittee on Prevention prior to the date at which the denunciation becomes effective.

3. Following the date at which the denunciation of the State Party becomes effective, the Subcommittee on Prevention shall not commence consideration of any new matter regarding that State.

Article 34

1. Any State Party to the present Protocol may propose an amendment and file it with the Secretary-General of the United Nations. The Secretary-General shall thereupon communicate the proposed amendment to the States Parties to the present Protocol with a request that they notify him whether they favour a conference of States Parties for the purpose of considering and voting upon the proposal. In the event that within four months from the date of such communication at least one third of the States Parties favour such a conference, the Secretary-General shall convene the conference under the auspices of the United Nations. Any amendment adopted by a majority of two thirds of the States Parties present and voting at the conference shall be submitted by the Secretary-General of the United Nations to all States Parties for acceptance.
2. An amendment adopted in accordance with paragraph 1 of the present article shall come into force when it has been accepted by a two-thirds majority of the States Parties to the present Protocol in accordance with their respective constitutional process.
3. When amendments come into force, they shall be binding on those States Parties which have accepted them, other States Parties still being bound by the provisions of the present Protocol and any earlier amendment which they have accepted.

Article 35

Members of the Subcommittee on Prevention and of the national preventive mechanisms shall be accorded such privileges and immunities as are necessary for the independent exercise of their functions. Members of the Subcommittee on Prevention shall be accorded the privileges and immunities specified in section 22 of the Convention on Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations of 13 February 1946, subject to the provisions of section 23 of that Convention.

Article 36

When visiting a State Party the members of the Subcommittee on Prevention shall, without prejudice to the provisions and purposes of the present Protocol and such privileges and immunities as they may enjoy:

- (a) Respect the laws and regulations of the visited State; and
- (b) Refrain from any action or activity incompatible with the impartial and international nature of their duties.

Article 37

1. The present Protocol, of which the Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.
2. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall transmit certified copies of the present Protocol to all States.

APPENDIX B.4

Rules of Procedure

In accordance with article 10, paragraph 2, of the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (hereinafter 'the Optional Protocol'), the Subcommittee on Prevention of Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (hereinafter 'the SPT') adopted the following rules of procedure at its eighteenth session held in Geneva from 12 to 16 November 2012.¹

PART ONE

General rules

I. SESSIONS

RULE 1

Dates of sessions

1. Regular sessions of the SPT shall be convened at dates decided by the SPT, in consultation with the Secretary-General of the United Nations (hereinafter 'the Secretary-General'), taking into account the calendar of conferences as approved by the General Assembly.
2. The SPT shall set the dates of future regular sessions in advance on an ongoing basis, in consultation with the Secretary-General. Amendments to the agreed dates of future regular sessions shall be possible only after consultation with members at least six months in advance of the set date.
3. The SPT and the Committee against Torture shall hold at least one session a year simultaneously, in accordance with article 10, paragraph 3, of the Optional Protocol.
4. In addition to regular sessions, special sessions shall be held at dates agreed by the SPT, in consultation with the Secretary-General.

RULE 2

Place of sessions

Sessions of the SPT shall normally be held at the United Nations Office at Geneva. Another venue for a session may be designated by the SPT, in consultation with the Secretary-General, taking into account the calendar of conferences approved by the General Assembly and rule 16 of the SPT rules of procedure.

RULE 3

Notification of sessions

The Secretary-General shall notify the members of the SPT of the date, duration and place of each session as early as possible, but no later than two months prior to the beginning of the session concerned, such date being in accordance with the dates agreed in advance by the SPT (see rule 1).

RULE 4

Provisional agenda and draft order of business

1. The provisional agenda and the draft order of business for a session shall be prepared by the secretariat of the SPT (hereinafter 'the Secretariat'), in consultation with the Bureau of the SPT, no later than one month prior to the beginning of the session. They shall be transmitted in the working languages of the SPT at least two weeks prior to the opening of the session, and shall contain the issues agreed for discussion by the SPT at the previous session, as well as other issues proposed by the Chairperson, the Bureau or the Secretariat.

2. The first item on the provisional agenda and draft order of business of any session shall be amendments to and adoption of the agenda and order of business.
3. The agenda and order of business may be revised by the SPT in the course of the session in the light of the emerging needs.

RULE 5

Transmission of documentation

The Secretariat shall transmit documents other than the provisional agenda and draft order of business to the members of the SPT in the working languages of the SPT as early as possible. All working documents prepared or other documents received by the Secretariat in advance of the session shall be transmitted forthwith to the SPT (including in electronic form, if available and appropriate, taking into account the requirements for confidentiality) in the original language of the document and, as soon as possible thereafter, in translation into the other working languages of the SPT.

II. MEMBERS OF THE SPT

RULE 6

Election of members of the SPT

1. Members of the SPT shall be the 25 experts elected in accordance with article 5 of the Optional Protocol.
2. Members shall be eligible for re-election once, if renominated.
3. Members of the SPT shall serve in their individual capacity and may not be represented by alternates.

RULE 7

Term of office

1. The term of office of the members of the SPT shall begin on 1 January of the year after the date of their election by the meeting of the States parties. The term of office shall expire on 31 December four years later, except for those members chosen by lot to serve for two years, whose terms shall expire on 31 December two years after their election.
2. In accordance with article 8 of the Optional Protocol, the term of the member appointed to fill a casual vacancy begins on the date of her or his approval, and shall end on the date of expiration of the term of office of the member being replaced.

RULE 8

Casual vacancies

1. In accordance with article 8 of the Optional Protocol, if a member of the SPT dies or resigns, or for any cause can no longer perform her or his duties, the Secretary-General shall immediately declare the seat vacant and inform the State party that nominated the member, which shall nominate, within two months, another eligible candidate subject to the approval of the majority of the States parties. Approval shall be considered given unless half or more of the States parties respond negatively within six weeks of having been informed of the proposed nominee.
2. When a member of the SPT is consistently unable to carry out her or his duties for any cause other than absence of a temporary nature, said member shall resign. Written notification of such resignation shall be submitted to the SPT and the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General shall inform the State party which nominated the member so that action can be taken in accordance with article 8 of the Optional Protocol.

3. The Secretary-General shall inform the States parties of the name of the member filling the casual vacancy as soon as possible after approval.
4. Where approval of a replacement under paragraph 1 of this rule is declined, the State party that nominated the member shall be invited to nominate another eligible candidate, meeting the requirements of article 5 of the Optional Protocol.

RULE 9

Solemn declaration

Before assuming her or his duties, each member of the SPT shall, at the first meeting of the SPT at which she or he is present following election, make the following solemn declaration:

“I solemnly declare that I will perform my duties and exercise my powers as a member of the Subcommittee on Prevention of Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment impartially, independently and efficiently.”

III. BUREAU OF THE SPT

RULE 10

Election of the Bureau

1. The SPT shall elect from among its members a Chairperson and four Vice-Chairpersons who shall constitute the Bureau of the SPT. The Bureau shall select one of its Vice-Chairpersons to act as Rapporteur. Three members of the Bureau shall constitute a quorum.
2. Members of the Bureau shall be elected for a term of two years and be eligible for re-election.
3. Where there is only one candidate for election as one of its officers, the SPT may decide to elect that person by consensus. Where there are two or more candidates for election as one of its officers, or where the SPT otherwise decides to proceed with a ballot, the person who obtains a simple majority of votes shall be elected. If no single candidate receives a majority of votes, the members of the SPT shall endeavour to reach a consensus before holding another ballot. Elections shall be by secret ballot.

Functions of the Bureau

1. The Bureau shall direct the work of the SPT and shall perform all other functions conferred upon it by these rules of procedure and by the SPT. In particular, when the SPT is not in session, the Bureau may make decisions on urgent or delegated matters on its behalf. Members shall be consulted on such decisions whenever time and circumstances permit and each such decision shall be communicated to all members as soon as possible, account being taken of the requirements for confidentiality. The Bureau shall report to the SPT at each session on any decisions or actions of an urgent or delegated nature which have been taken on behalf of the SPT since the previous session.
2. The Bureau shall meet as required during regular sessions and in special sessions as necessary to fulfil its obligations and the mandate of the SPT.

RULE 12

Powers of the Chairperson and Vice-Chairpersons

1. The Chairperson shall exercise her or his functions under the authority of the SPT.
2. In accordance with these rules of procedure, the Chairperson shall ensure the orderly conduct of the proceedings of the SPT, including observance of these rules.
3. The Chairperson shall represent the SPT at the United Nations and other meetings. If the Chairperson is unable to represent the SPT at such meetings, she or he may designate one of the Vice-Chairpersons. If no Vice-Chairperson is available, with the permission of the SPT, the Chairperson may designate a member of the SPT, to attend such meetings on behalf of the SPT.

RULE 13

Acting Chairperson

1. If, during a session, the Chairperson is unable to be present at a meeting or any part thereof, she or he shall designate a Vice-Chairperson to act in her or his place.
2. If the Chairperson and the Vice-Chairpersons are simultaneously unable to carry out their duties, or if none has been elected, the SPT shall entrust such duties to any member of the SPT until such time as the Chairperson or Vice-Chairpersons assume their functions or are elected. The Secretariat may, if necessary and in consultation with the SPT, call a meeting of the SPT for that purpose.
3. Any member acting as Chairperson shall have the same powers and duties as the Chairperson.

IV. SECRETARIAT OF THE SPT

RULE 14

Provision of the SPT secretariat

In accordance with article 25, paragraph 2, of the Optional Protocol, the Secretary-General shall provide the necessary staff and facilities for the effective performance of the functions of the Subcommittee. As such, the SPT shall be provided with a dedicated secretariat, including a secretary and a team of staff with the capacity to engage in SPT fieldwork.

RULE 15

Duties of the SPT secretariat

1. The SPT secretariat shall be responsible for all the necessary arrangements for sessions of the SPT.
2. The Secretariat shall attend all sessions of the SPT and may make oral or written statements at those sessions.
3. The Secretariat shall provide working documents in advance of the sessions to enable the SPT to address all the items on its draft agenda and to carry out its fieldwork effectively. The Secretariat shall provide the SPT during sessions with all information which the SPT considers necessary in order for the SPT to fulfil its mandate effectively.
4. The Secretariat shall respond as early as possible to requests made by the Bureau for information, and shall provide draft correspondence and draft documents upon request as soon as possible.

RULE 16

Financial implications of proposals

1. The expenditure incurred by the SPT in the implementation of the Optional Protocol shall be borne by the United Nations.
2. Before any proposal involving additional expenditure to that already approved by the General Assembly is approved by the SPT, the Secretariat shall prepare and circulate to the members of the SPT, as early as possible, an estimate of the cost involved in the proposal indicating the additional expenditure is involved. It shall be the duty of the Chairperson to draw the members' attention to this estimate and the additional expenditure involved prior to a decision being taken on the proposal.

V. COMMUNICATIONS

RULE 17

Incoming and outgoing communications

1. The Secretariat shall bring to the attention of the SPT all communications received containing information submitted for consideration by the SPT.
2. Communications received by individual members of the SPT which relate to the mandate of the SPT shall be forwarded to the Secretariat.
3. The Secretariat shall keep a record of all communications received and shall, where appropriate, send an acknowledgement of receipt to the authors of such communications.
4. All correspondence sent by the SPT or on behalf of the SPT shall be agreed in advance by the Bureau. The Secretariat shall provide the Bureau with copies of all such correspondence sent out with the date of transmission.
5. The Secretariat shall be responsible for informing the SPT of any issues that may be brought before it for consideration or of any other developments that may be of relevance to it. The Secretariat shall transmit to the SPT information on all correspondence and other communications addressed to it or relevant to its mandate.

RULE 18

Meetings with States parties

The Secretariat shall be responsible for informing the SPT in advance of all meetings with States parties at which the SPT is the subject of discussion, and shall consult with the SPT in advance as to any input concerning the SPT at such meetings. The Secretariat shall also ensure that the SPT has the opportunity to be represented at such meetings in person, or by contributing to and agreeing information to be provided about the SPT.

VI. LANGUAGES

RULE 19

Official and working languages

1. Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish shall be the official languages of the SPT. Statements made in an official language shall be interpreted into the other official languages.
2. English, Spanish and French shall be the working languages of the SPT. The working languages of the SPT may be changed by its decision. All formal decisions and official documents of the SPT shall be issued in the working languages.

VII. CONFIDENTIALITY

RULE 20

In camera sessions

1. The meetings of the SPT shall be held in camera. Its deliberations shall remain confidential.
2. The SPT may hear any person whom it considers to be in a position to assist it in the performance of its functions under the Optional Protocol. Such persons shall attend a meeting by invitation of the SPT only, in consultation with the Secretariat, and shall be bound by strict confidentiality.
3. The SPT may decide on an ad hoc basis that a meeting shall be public.

VIII. DOCUMENTS OF THE SPT

RULE 21

Confidentiality

All documentation and information of the SPT shall be kept strictly confidential, unless the SPT decides otherwise in relation to a particular document.

RULE 22

Summary reports

1. The Secretariat shall produce a draft summary report of each session in a working language of the SPT, including the main observations, issues addressed and decisions taken. The draft summary report shall be analytically structured in accordance with the items of the agenda, and shall be transmitted to the SPT for comments and amendments within one month of the end of the session concerned. A revised version of the summary report, incorporating the amendments suggested by the SPT, shall be circulated to the SPT at least three weeks prior to the next session, in the working languages of the SPT.

RULE 23

List of decisions

A draft list of decisions taken by the SPT during each session shall be prepared by the Secretariat, in consultation with the Bureau, and adopted by the SPT.

RULE 24

Annual report

In accordance with article 16, paragraph 3, of the Optional Protocol, the SPT shall prepare a public annual report on its activities. The SPT shall present its public annual report to the Committee against Torture.

IX. CONDUCT OF BUSINESS

RULE 25

Quorum

Fourteen (14) members of the SPT shall constitute a quorum.

RULE 26

Adoption of decisions

1. The SPT shall endeavour to reach all of its decisions by consensus. If a consensus cannot be reached, decisions of the SPT shall be put to a vote and made by a simple majority vote of the members present and voting.
2. Each member of the SPT shall have one vote.
3. The SPT may adopt decisions by e-mail in accordance with the established set of procedures.

RULE 27

Working groups and Rapporteurs

The SPT may appoint Rapporteurs and set up ad hoc working groups comprising a limited number of its members. The terms of reference of such rapporteurships and working groups shall be defined by the SPT.

RULE 28

Independence of members

1. The members of the SPT shall serve in their personal capacity and shall not only be independent and impartial, but shall also be seen to be so by a reasonable observer. To this end, SPT members shall conduct themselves in accordance with the Guidelines on the independence and impartiality of members of the human rights treaty bodies ('the Addis Ababa guidelines'), in particular:
 - (a) No member of the SPT shall participate in activities which may imply, or may be seen to imply, a conflict of interest with her or his capacity as an independent and impartial member of the SPT;

- (b) Members of the SPT shall avoid any action which might give the impression that any given State is receiving treatment which is more favourable or less favourable than that accorded to other States;
 - (c) Members of the SPT holding multiple nationalities shall inform, on their own initiative, the Chairperson of the SPT and its secretariat thereof.
2. (a) No member of the SPT shall participate in the conduct of a visit or involve themselves in the consideration of the report on the visit to the State party in respect of the nationality of which she or he was elected, of the State party which nominated her or him, or of any other nationality which she or he holds;
 - (b) No member of the SPT shall participate in the preparation of or follow-up to a country visit or inquiry or the consideration of ensuing reports, if any real or perceived conflict of interest is present.
 3. If for any reason a member of the SPT considers that she or he is facing a potential conflict of interest, she or he shall promptly inform the Chairperson of the SPT who shall advise on the potential conflict of interest taking into account the Addis Ababa guidelines. Ultimately, the SPT as a whole shall take all measures necessary to safeguard the requirements of independence and impartiality of its members.

X. CO-OPERATION WITH UNITED NATIONS ORGANS AND MECHANISMS AND OTHER INTERNATIONAL, REGIONAL AND NATIONAL INSTITUTIONS OR ORGANIZATIONS

RULE 29

Consultation with other bodies

1. The SPT may invite relevant bodies to submit, or may receive, for consideration information, documentation and written statements on such matters as covered by the Optional Protocol that fall within the scope of its activities.
2. In accordance with article 31 of the Optional Protocol, the SPT may consult with bodies established under regional conventions with a view to cooperating with them and avoiding duplication, in order to promote effectively the objectives of the Optional Protocol.

PART TWO

Rules Concerning National Preventive Mechanisms

RULE 30

Relationship with national preventive mechanisms

1. The SPT shall advise and assist States parties, when necessary, in the establishment of national preventive mechanisms. It shall maintain direct, and if necessary confidential, contact with them, which includes the right to receive information from and meet with them, in accordance with articles 11 and 20 (f) of the Optional Protocol.
2. The SPT shall offer the national preventive mechanisms training and technical assistance with a view to strengthening their capacities.
3. The SPT shall advise and assist the national preventive mechanisms in the evaluation of their needs and the means necessary to strengthen the protection of persons deprived of their liberty against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.
4. The SPT shall make recommendations and observations to the States parties with a view to strengthening the capacity and the mandate of the national preventive mechanisms for the prevention against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment of persons deprived of their liberty.
5. In its relations with the national preventive mechanisms, the SPT shall give due consideration to the Principles relating the Status of National Institutions (the Paris Principles).

6. The SPT has adopted a separate set of guidelines on national preventive mechanisms (CAT/OP/12/5).

PART THREE

Rule Relating to Interpretation

RULE 31

Interpretation

For the purpose of interpreting the present rules, the headings, which are inserted for reference purposes only, shall be disregarded.

PART FOUR

Rules Relating to Suspension and Amendment of these Rules

RULE 32

Suspension

Any of the present rules may be suspended by a decision of the SPT, provided such suspension is not inconsistent with the provisions of the Optional Protocol.

RULE 33

Amendments

The present rules may be amended by a decision of the SPT, at least twenty-four (24) hours after the proposal for the amendment has been circulated, provided that the amendment is not inconsistent with the provisions of the Optional Protocol.

RULE 34

Additions

The SPT may decide to add to the present rules at any time. An additional rule may be adopted by a decision of the SPT, at least twenty-four (24) hours after the proposal for the additional rule has been circulated, provided that the additional rule is not inconsistent with the provisions of the Optional Protocol.
